Solace.

One solace there is for me, sweet but faint,
As it floats on the wind of the years,
A whisper that Spring is the last true thing,
And that triumph is born of tears.

It comes from a garden of other days,
And an echoing voice that cries,
"Behold, I am alive for evermore,
And in Me shall the dead arise."

—Rev. G. A. Studdert Kennedy.

Where the whole Church is to be equipped, the special advantage of intrusting the work to us is obvious: it insures a harmony in design and proportion of all the Furnishings; and, incidentally, there is a material saving in cost.

We have recently increased our stock of Churchly fabrics, and have full lines of damasks and corded silks, as well as less expensive fabrics in the proper colors. Not only are the vestments made up complete, ready for use, but the materials are also sold by the yard.

We invite correspondence in regard to Gifts and Memorials to be in place Ascension Day, Whitsunday, All Saints' Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas, and in respect to larger commissions for Easter of next year. These should be considered now and the work taken in hand as soon as possible. When requesting suggestions kindly give particulars as fully as possible.

Christ Has Risen

Tomb, thou shalt not hold Him longer;
Death is strong, but life is stronger;
Stronger than the dark, the light;
Stronger than the wrong, the right.
Faith and hope triumphant say
Christ will rise on Easter Day.

While the patient earth lies waiting,
Till the morning shall be breaking,
Shivering 'neath the burden dread
Of her Master cold and dead,
Hark! she hears the angels say
Christ will rise on Easter Day.

And when sunrise smites the mountains,
Pouring light from heavenly fountains,
Then the earth blooms out to greet
Once again the blessed feet;
And the countless voices say
Christ has risen on Easter Day.

Thoughts
For the Thoughtful

"It is worth dying once to be deathless forever."

No good thing is failure,
And no evil thing success.

We lose nothing in death that is worth keeping. Jesus was the same after as before.

He that gives should never remember. He that receives should never forget.

Men are clamoring for religious liberty. What some of them want is irreligious liberty.—Review of Christian Work.

No prayer did ever speed aright,
But forth it steals anon,
And hangs in heaven a little light
To lead its brothers on.

—F. Langbridge.

In moments of hardship remember that all things work together for good to them that love God. Wherefore be markedly composed when you are in a difficult place.—Bishop Brent.

Jeremy Taylor says that he must be in love with peevishness who chooses to sit down upon his little "handful of thorns" when there are so many causes for joy in this wide world.

"Death is another life. We bow our heads

At going out, we think, but enter straight

Another chamber of the king's

Larger than this we leave, and loverlier."

The power of the Church lies not in the gathering of crowds round a compelling leader, but in the spiritual force of the corporate body—a body composed of disciplined, devoted members, bent on the pilgrimage from self to God.

We have Christ's promise of perpetuity for the service which He accepts. If we lay our best in any kind at Christ's feet, He will take our poor offerings and melt them down to form part of His eternal crown.—A. MacLaren.

O mighty river, strong, eternal Will
In which the streams of human good and ill

Are onward swept, conflicting, to the sea—

The world is safe because it floats in Thee.

THE UNHAPPY RESULTS OF HAPPY DELUSIONS

There is a well-known form of mental disturbance called the delusion of grandeur. It causes a pathetic amusement to the bystander, but happily a very great measure of satisfaction to the person affected by it. He is sure that he is one of the possessors and creators of the earth, a King Midas or a Mr. Doheny, Alexander the Great or Julius Caesar, the President of the United States or the Pope of Rome. He nods with amiable condescension to the inferior beings about him. All the rest of the world is plainly crazy. He alone is the one person of supreme knowledge and unimpeachable importance.

Editors not infrequently suffer from the delusion of grandeur. We speak timorously because we might be thought to have our own measure of mental disturbance. But of late the conspicuous example of the delusion of grandeur is the Living Church. It strides up and down its editorial corridor, superbly admonishing the world. Those little glimmerings of lucidity which pass for intelligence in the Church outside—what are these beside the concentrated glory of authoritative knowledge which blazes in the brain of that one periodical? Let the earth be silent when the Living Church is ready to speak!

The most impressive recent evidence of this conviction of grandeur is an editorial in the Living Church of April 5. It is printed in double-ledged type. It has a caption which will startle a multitude of horror-stricken readers with its unthinkable suggestion. "The Living Church was wrong," it says. Of course the Living Church really does not think it was wrong. That is only a noble manner of saying that perhaps for once it might have seemed to fall a shade short of infallibility. "This editor has the right to be somewhat indignant," the editorial begins. Of course he has, for did not some luckless correspondent furnish to the editor a report which was mistaken in one detail, upon the basis of which the Living Church promulgated an earlier editorial which thus got a bad start and ended in disaster? "It now appears that we were wrong," says the editorial. No wonder that the Living Church had a "right to be somewhat indignant." The idea of anything or anybody making it appear to be wrong! No wonder the whole affair which caused this dreadful result should have seemed to the Living Church to be what the editor calls it—"simply disgusting."

It does not make much difference what the editorial was about. In this case it happened to be about a certain Annunciation Day service which the Living Church did not like. The Living Church can set one matter straight as well as another. Rectors of churches, editors of other newspapers, or any one else who does not measure up to its authoritative pronouncements of fitness, are all subject to its annihilating condemnation. We doubt if they are troubled very much. They probably regard the fulminations of the Living Church with some amusement; but the Living Church, secure in its own delusion of grandeur, marches up and down, muttering and thundering, and having a most happy and self-satisfying time. No wonder that the American "Catholics," though they are ready for a good many other things that are Roman, do not want the Pope. Why bother to have a Pope in Rome when there is such a good one already available in Milwaukee?

All the same, we are sorry that the Living Church had to be "somewhat indignant." That emotion always leaves one's dignity a little disheveled. We think we could suggest to the Living Church how to avoid the necessity of being "somewhat indignant." We say it very amiably because we have no doubt that the Southern Churchman and the Living Church and all the other papers are frequently in the same condemnation. We all have our delusions of grandeur. Probably the best cure for it, which we respectfully submit to the Living Church in its present state of agitation, is that editors should allow themselves the luxury of not more than one eye "in a fine frenzy rolling"; and that with at least one thoroughly sane eye, we should regard that unabashed constituency whose destroying grin can bring even our pet delusions of grandeur down to earth.

KNOWLEDGE THROUGH EXPERIENCE

The blind man of whom the Gospel of John tells us gave one of the finest testimonies concerning Jesus Christ which the New Testament contains. "One thing I know," he said; "that whereas I was blind, now I see." He knew what Jesus had done for him. Always there is authority in that sort of testimony. Christians might be defective in their theoretical explanations of Jesus Christ, but the important thing is that they should be able to testify to His power. Now in this Easter season the convincing witnesses are those who can testify to a spiritual resurrection He has wrought in them.

The apostles themselves grew only through practical experience into a real knowledge of their Lord. They watched

Him in that daily ministry among the crowd to which they went with Him. Out of that experience of theirs they began to have thrilling intuitions of the incomparable meaning of His spirit. Whom say men that I am? asked Jesus of the disciples once. When they had recited to Him this and that answer which the crowd gave, He turned to them with the searching inquiry, Whom say ye that I am? And then Peter the impetuous burst forth with that confession which perhaps had been slowly taking shape in the minds of them all, Thou art the Christ. But they tried to hold Him, even as His mother might have been trying, from some of the implications of His Christhood. Peter tried to argue against the suggestion that

He must go up to Jerusalem to die. Only very slowly, through many doubts, and after much discipline of suffering, did they come to understand how that love of His must die for the world in order to be redemptive. That day, when Jesus came into Jerusalem, they did not know enough to answer with completeness the people's question, Who is this? They knew He was a prophet. They believed that He was Messiah, even then about somehow to enter into His triumph. But later they came to know for Him mightier words than these. He was Saviour, Redeemer, the Lord of Life, the Lamb upon His throne, the Beginning and the End.

It is well to remember that even the most deep seeing and spiritually gifted of the disciples never exhausted the meaning of Jesus' spirit. Their knowledge was at best approximate. Their consciousness could not absolutely reflect or match His consciousness. Greater than anything that any of those who loved Him have ever said about Him, wider, more flexible, more full of a meaning ever adaptable and ever fresh, is what Jesus felt of Himself and what He knew of God. The fulness of that we can never know; but the realization of how much fuller it is than anything we do know will save us from foolish wrangling and the arguing of little definitions which can only be set up by men in whom a theological self-sufficiency has smothered the awe which ought to keep them humble.

In the Easter season we may well say of Him, in those exquisitely simple words of Major Farrington's hymn:

"I know not how that Joseph's tomb
Could solve death's mystery:
I only know a living Christ,
Our immortality."

MAKING THE EASTER FAITH EFFECTIVE

At the Easter season the spirits of Christian people are exalted in the consciousness of the power of their Lord. The gospel of His risen life has been proclaimed again. He has triumphed over death. Can He triumph also over the powers of the world? That is the after-Easter question. What shall we do with the Lord of life and what can He do in us? Can we make the Easter gospel not only a beautiful emotion, but also a practical conviction working out into effective action?

It is well to link that question with our responsibility as American citizens at this hour. If we were pagans, we need not be disturbed at a pagan indifference to the responsibilities of human fellowship. But we are not pagans; and since we are Christians, we are bound to know that we are condemned in the eyes of Christ if through indolence, or selfishness, or sheer unbelief we refuse to interest ourselves in the forces which might bring into our world more of the fraternity and ordered cooperation which the spirit of Christ would desire. To talk of Christ being risen, and then to shut Him into a tomb of cynical repudiation, is practical apostasy.

Yet what else are American Christians doing if they sit indifferently by and allow party politicians in the United States Senate insolently to prevent the question of American entrance into the World Court from even coming to a vote? Here is a time and an occasion when Christian conceptions of our international responsibility must make themselves felt. It is not tolerable that the United States should continue to appear as indifferent to any form of world cooperation as though her people had never even heard of that Christian gospel which has been proclaiming through all the centuries that no individual, nor nation either, can live or die unto itself.

Recently a group of men, including the former Justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. John H. Clark, and the former Attorney General, Mr. George W. Wickersham, sent the following letter to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate:

"In March, 1923, the Executive Committee of the League of Nations Non-Partisan Association telegraphed you, as chairman, urging the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate to take immediate action on President Harding's proposal in favor of our participation in the Permanent Court of International Justice, with the reservations suggested by Secretary Hughes.

"In your answer you stated: 'It seemed to the committee that it would be impossible to deal with a question of such magnitude and far-reaching importance in the two or three days that remained of the session of this Congress, and the committee also desired to have certain additional information in regard to the court, and these questions were submitted at once to the President.'

"We understand that the questions were immediately answered by President Harding. Since that time President Coolidge, in his first message to Congress, recommended that we join the World Court on the same terms.

"We submit that the indorsements of the World Court proposal now in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which you are the chairman, represent a vast majority of the voters of the United States. We contend that the failure of your committee to report this proposal to the Senate for its consideration is contrary to the expressed will of the people.

"Certainly you can no longer plead lack of time. The proposal has been in the hands of your committee almost fourteen months. As citizens addressing their public servants, it is our right to request that some public explanation should be made of your failure to act.

"Are we to understand that it is the purpose of the Committee on Foreign Relations to repudiate the recommendations of both President Harding and President Coolidge in this vital matter?

"In asking for a public accounting of your stewardship, we urge the members of your committee to consider that we make this request in the name of the organized churches, organized labor, the organized women voters, the organized merchants, the organized members of the bar, the organized university women, the organized business and professional women, the organized women's clubs and the organized teachers.

"Therefore, we not only request, but demand that you, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, make a public statement explaining your failure to act on a question of such vital concern to the nation. A decent respect for public opinion requires it."

What the churches have to do in this matter is well illustrated by a recent bulletin of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. It reported the following facts:

A preacher in Oregon is so alert on the question of international peace that he is constantly employing new methods to bring the subject to the attention of his church. Recently he held a symposium on the Bok Prize Peace Plan. A doctor, a judge, a business man and a preacher presented their views regarding it, after which a ballot was taken. An overwhelming majority of the members voted for it. On another evening a prominent man spoke on the League of Nations, another on the World Court, a third on the Bok Plan and a fourth on Isolation. At the close of the addresses a vote was taken on these several plans. The League came first, the Court second, the Bok Plan third, and only three or four were in favor of isolation.

This man is in striking contrast to a group of preachers who were recently canvassed in a town with a view to a meeting to be held in their city to consider the World Court and international relations. One preacher said that he would be in the midst of a revival in his church at the time suggested for the meeting, and that saving souls was much more important than either a World Court or a League of Nations. The other members of the ministerial group agreed with him, and it was voted not to have anything to do with the meeting on that particular day. It is important to save souls, but it is equally important to prevent or abolish war. What is the good of saving souls if demagogues and autocrats and cliques of diplomats can plunge the world into war. Is it not rather tinkering with the gospel to limit it to personal salvation, ignoring the necessity for national and international salvation from the sin of selfish greed. Does not the attitude of this group of ministers speak for many thousands who hold a similar view, and is it not at least partial explanation of the impotency of the Christian churches to prevent such a stupendous cataclysm as that which befell the world in 1914?

Let us link these considerations with the thought of the Easter gospel. If Christ be risen, then we ought to walk with Him in newness of life. That ought to mean something tremendously real for Christian men and women, not only in their homes and in their private offices, but in all their public citizenship. It ought to mean in this particular moment such a pressure of determined opinion expressed in telegrams and letters to Washington that the World Court, as the next influence in the direction of world peace, shall immediately be adopted by this nation.

THE RESURRECTION OF FAITH

By the Reverend Elwood Worcester, D. D.

OF all changes which this earth has seen, the most striking and dramatic are the changes which took place between Good Friday and the first Easter. On Good Friday we witness the one perfect tragedy of time, from which no element of horror was lacking—the crucifixion of the Lord of life, the betrayal of Judas, the denial of Peter, the triumphant scorn of Christ's enemies, the mockery of the soldiers, the hideous passions of the mob, the powerlessness of goodness in the hands of force, the darkening of the sun as if God in heaven were hiding His face and mourning, the utter demoralization of the disciples.

Barely thirty-six hours intervene, and Easter morning dawns on the sepulchre of Christ, pure and fresh and holy, a new day from the hands of God which has not yet reached its meridian. Then follow the appearances of Jesus, so naturally and exquisitely set forth in our gospels, which we can so much more easily comprehend and accept than men of former generations—the sudden appearance and disappearance of the body of the Risen One, its passage through closed doors, the traumatic stigmata, mark of the nails which attested His identity.

Apparently how frail a support for the religion of mankind! Yet Jesus deemed it sufficient, and the event has proved it to be such. A great wave of joy and confidence passed, first over the disciples, then with sufficient force to renew this worn-out world. For a little while these mysterious meetings with Jesus continue. Paul enumerates just five—very different from the unnumbered, spontaneous creations of high-swollen enthusiasm and of self-suggested hallucinations. Then they ceased, but the effect they produced on the minds of the disciples never ceased; and, if we wish to tell the truth, we shall admit that on these experiences the Church rose. This was the best of good news, not an argument, nor a statement of philosophy, but the report of a wonderful fact which the witnesses were never tired of telling. Jesus had conquered death and He had given them definite proofs of it.

I suppose few persons have considered this question more carefully than I have done. I have read everything of importance for and against the resurrection and immortality, from what is left of Celsus' terrible "True Word" to Dean Fenn's last Ingersoll lecture, in which he finely and proudly confesses his faith in another life. I have considered all the denials and expedients of unbelief to do away with the resurrection, which, as our knowledge of such matters grows, are more and more threadbare and impossible; and year by year my confidence increases that in those days something actually happened, something world-shaking in its effect, which gave to life a new meaning and to all believing men and women a new hope, and that something is Christ's victory over death and His assurance of immortality in His great appeal to fact. Whatever happened at the grave or in the subsequent appearances of Jesus, from that grave sprang an indestructible faith in the overthrow of death and in an eternal life for man. (Harnack.) And this faith sprang up, one might almost say, overnight, according to the saying of Jesus: "Destroy this temple, made with hands, and in three days I will build another temple, not made with hands."

It is not merely a question of our survival of death, though without this hope, what is our life? It is the consciousness that our life is hid with Christ in God and that our spiritual life is our real life. It is the sense of the reality of another world which penetrates this world of matter as its spirit and animating force, a world of causes and of light and purpose and creative power, a world which some men apparently only enter when they die, but with which other men, better endowed, more spiritually disposed, are in contact now—men and women in whom Christ lives, to whom prayer and communion with God are a reality and life is a glorious adventure and an ever-growing revelation.

This is the hope of the world today. The materialistic fetters which have bound the faith of the Christian world so long are falling off. The human soul, whose very existence was doubted fifty years ago, is beginning to reveal powers which are vast and mysterious and hitherto unsuspected. Evidences of its vaticinations of the future, its creative power over matter, its ability to act at a distance, its supreme importance in health and disease, its contact with another world, are coming in in such quantity and from such unimpeachable sources, that it is evident to all who know the facts that humanity is evolving today in a new direction, in the direction of the spiritual.

It was one of the dearest beliefs of Jesus that, though in His physical life He would soon be taken from the world, He would not really leave it. "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, I am in the midst of them." "I am the vine, ye are the branches." He is indeed the vine from which we derive our life, the vine on which we all hang like clustering grapes. It was His passage through death which gave Jesus this great new experience. Between the agony and the turmoil of Good Friday and the solemn peace of Easter Day stands Death, the great Physician and Deliverer. Now Jesus is invulnerable to His foes. Now the cruel wounds of the cross are quickly healed. Now His body and His influence are no longer bound to one place. Now He no longer wearily and painfully goes up and down on heavy feet of flesh, but from one end of the world to the other He swiftly passes on the light wings of the Spirit. Could such a Being as He be holden by death? or could His life be limited to a few revolutions of the earth around the sun? Should not He, who introduced eternity into this life, be befriended by it, and from that safe refuge continue His work and influence? Across the sheer gulf which separates that world from this, which no speculative thought can fathom, He threw a bridge on which He returned to us.

Jesus said little about a future life. But He gave us proof of it by rising from the dead and by His very life created a new desire for immortality. The more spiritual love is, the less men believe in the power of death to break it. When I hear good and intelligent men and women say they have no interest in another life, I cannot comprehend them. To me the interest in what we shall find after death is so great that interest in this world is well-nigh swallowed up in it.

Persons often deceive themselves in this matter. In times of weariness and discouragement they say: Why not? "The grass withereth and the flower fadeth." "Who knoweth if, while the spirit of the beast goeth downward, the spirit of the children of Adam ascends on high?" Sometimes there is consolation in the thought of the peace and rest of the grave and that "our little life is rounded by a sleep."

In the course of my long ministry I have sat by many a death-bed. I have seen the faces of dying men and women brighten with a marvelous light. I have heard them address words of love to persons they appeared to see and to recognize, whom I could not see. In every instance within my knowledge such an experience has been an immediate precursor of death. But what does this mean but that, at our last hour, those whom we have loved and who have loved us stand beside us to receive us and to welcome us to our new life, and that the first objects our newly opened eyes shall rest upon are their beloved faces. I do not ask you to remember this because you will never forget it.

So I believe in a resurrection and in an eternal life for man.

I believe that at death the soul is not unclothed, but clothed upon by its immortal and spiritual body, in which all shall be revealed that now is hidden, and that then we shall behold each other's hearts.

I believe that this temporal life is a preparation for eternal life, and that that which was weighed falsely here will be weighed truly there, and that every one of us by his good or evil disposition, and by his good or evil conscience, is preparing for himself a happy or an unhappy existence. Yet good is greater than evil and it will prevail.

I believe that the only true salvation for man is in Jesus Christ and through the love to God and man He taught, that His salvation is ever growing, and is destined to become the salvation of the world; and that those who have not found Him here will find Him and salvation in Him there.

CHRISTIAN BROAD CHURCHMANSHIP

By the Reverend James Sheerin

Part I

MY first thought was to call this essay in ecclesiastical policy, "Broad Churchmanship as is," with a somewhat facetious sense of making a bit of fun out of certain idiosyncrasies in the Episcopal Church: but a proper realization of the serious feelings of devout Christian men and women, at such a time as the present, suggests a more serious topic, The True Broad Churchmanship. To say "true" Broad Churchmanship, however, seems both trite and presumptuous—the presumption being apparent to those who believe that Broad Churchman will neither dogmatize in theology nor declare in authoritative and definite terms just what is or what is not truth in debatable subjects, whether the disputed matters are merely doctrinal or purely spiritual. Perhaps "Christian" Broad Churchmanship may be desirable at a time when the Christian side of ecclesiastical controversy seems forgotten.

Broad Churchmanship "as is" is making use of the cautionary term of a wise literary auctioneer. If such a one is selling old and valuable books, where there turns up a volume that has lost a leaf, or has a page torn out, or a hole burned in its precious text by some reckless tobacco-smoker, or is a dubious copy wherein there is no certainty of its validity in date or character, the fair-minded auctioneer merely inserts in the catalogue, "sold as is." Now we have plenty of Churchmanship that is to be taken "as is." We have, for example, distinguished men who are known to the press as Broad Churchmen, but who have no resemblance to anything formerly passing as such and are rather notable for the absence of Churchmanship of any kind. The definition of an adjective involves the qualification, not the elimination, of the noun. It seems reasonable, therefore, to insist that when "broad" is used ecclesiastically it shall mean some quality in Churchmanship; i. e., there should be in the term Broad Churchmanship some idea of the Church and some love for the idea. If one calls himself a stalwart Republican, he means that he is primarily a Republican. If he says he is a Progressive Republican, it is assumed that he is a Republican who chooses to apply his party spirit progressively rather than "stand patently." It has sometimes been noted that there are Churchmen so broad that they balk even at Modernism, and are inclined to resent the criticism that suggests a little more respect for Episcopalianism. One of the most conspicuous of this type, when urged by a friend to try to win a more influential place in the Episcopal Church so that he could help broaden it, replied, "Episcopalians be d! I am not working for them. I am trying to get the outsider." This outside larger work is understandable in its breadth even without the profanity. It is not fair to say that such a man is merely freakish or eccentric, even though he seems to love all sorts of things bizarre from a conservative standpoint. It is fair enough, however, to say that he is strongly individualistic, and that his churchmanship, so far as he has any, is best commended with the auctioneer's plea for bewareness and mercy, adding to the listed words, "A Churchman, presented as is." Perhaps one might even dare to say, "Accepted as is."

There has always been a Broad Churchmanship in the Christian Church. It seems as idle to try to cast it out after nineteen centuries as it is to assume that a few men, however scholarly, can eliminate from the Christian faith in a few days or a few years orthodox views of the Virgin birth. One should at least modestly admit that to revolutionize the ways and beliefs of the Church is seldom possible without a fair and patient readiness to do it by the same deliberate methods that produce success in other departments of human life, or that were used in God's creation of the world. A St. Paul was a Broad Churchman to a St. Peter. A Clement and Oregon were Broad to some of their contemporaries. Abelard was dangerously Broad to his opponents. Erasmus, as a Broad Churchman, could please neither Henry the Eighth nor Martin Luther. The Cambridge Platonists satisfied neither Puritans nor conservative Churchmen in the seventeenth century. Coleridge, Thomas Arnold, F. W. Robertson, Charles Kingsley, Frederick Denison Maurice, Dean Stanley, Phillips Brooks, Canon Farrar, Archbishop Temple, and many others as intellectual and devout, were all Broad Churchmen in the nineteenth century. Surely it was a noble army of thinkers and workers, which we all, irrespective of party preferences, must admire and respect.

The new Modernist type of Broad Churchman is not yet easily placed, for few understand him; and he himself is just a bit uncertain as to where he shall ultimately stand in religious theory—if he ever could stand doctrinally.

He would sometimes be unrecognizable in the glorious company just mentioned. It is even doubtful if the spirit is always the same. He is more argumentative and more inclined to organize, both as to persons and truth. Herein he may be wiser than his predecessor, but also herein he is not the least like him. If Professor Tyson speaks for all Modernists, they have capitulated to science without terms, whereas the old-time Broad Churchman respected science, but felt that it is not everything in the pursuit of truth. Tyson says miracle must be relegated to the exclusive care of scientific investigators. In the spirit of Tennyson's "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," the elder Broad Churchman would say: There are more wonders wrought outside our present knowledge of science than the mind is as yet able to comprehend. Love of criticism, devotion to science, a feeling of the impossibility of what they describe as impossibilities, these things have so obsessed certain types of Modernists that they are unfair to scientific arguments which may justly be made for various orthodox positions. They seem oblivious to the fact that in the last decade, particularly by the developments of psychology, there is more reason to accept the possibility of miracle than there was in the previous half century. In other words, the trend seems toward the reasonableness of miracle rather than away from it in recent years; and yet, for reasons of their own, certain types of scholars seem to insist that we must cut religion entirely loose from the miraculous if the Church is to continue.

There is much abuse of the word liberal in religion. Henry Van Dyke proclaims himself a liberal, though he expresses doubts as to the meaning of Modernism. The average Unitarian uses the name liberal for his own Church in such a manner as to preclude other religionists from using the word. In other words, it is the old, old story—orthodoxy is my doxy, and heterodoxy is your doxy; my way is the only way; there is no true liberty but mine; and so on ad libitum.

There is also another caution worth putting forth. It is what may be called the peril of allowing the defense of the faith to fall into the hands of the ignorant and vindictive, or even the stupid. Just at present it seems as if the public is inclined to look upon extremes as the only valid instructors. The ultra fundamentalist type of man, whether he is Catholic monk or Protestant fanatic, is made the champion of orthodoxy by the public because really thoughtful and liberal-minded scholars are deemed to be dangerously "radical." An eminent High Churchman said, "I am what I am by antagonism. I became a High Churchman because I attended a Broad Church Seminary." A great many people are what they are in philosophy, politics or religion, partly by heredity or because of aroused hostility, mere family prejudice or personal dislike. It is within the realms of reason to say that a man may be both scholarly and orthodox, though there are party Modernists who speak as if this were impossible. Is it not the truth that science as scholarship is not concerned so much with fact as with method? Of course an earnest scientist is seeking the ultimate fact, but would he not be more inclined to look hopefully on the man using the approved scientific method, even though failing to get a scientifically approved conclusion? What is to hinder the fairly orthodox man from being also fairly scientific in his methods? If he is, and if he can thus remain orthodox—either in the face of, or by the help of, science—happy is he as Christian and scholar. Such a man will endeavor to be fair both to science and things secular, while none the less hospitable to the Church and traditional beliefs. Almost the most hurtful religious man in the world is the one who will hear all sides against ancient religious views while lending a rather grudging ear to the voice of the historic Church. Such a man is fair to everything except what is called revealed religion. He must be brought to weigh one side as much as the other. At the same time, the orthodox scholar on his part must be willing to be thorough, no matter how real may be the hazard to what he has hitherto called truth. He will not camouflage learning nor seek to avoid facing modern facts. Speaking to clergy of the Church of England, the learned Bishop Gore says, "We are in general taking refuge in philanthropy and good works from the requirements of thinking out our religious principles." Service and social reform are needed, never more so than now, but genuine readiness to hear the continuous voice of God as to religious dogma is also essential. It is deafness to this never-ending revelation that has been the breeder of many a recalcitrant heretic.

THE GREAT COMMISSION

BRAZILIAN WORK AMONG JAPANESE.

From Bishop Kinsolving's Report.

For some years past a tide of Japanese emigration has set strongly toward the prosperous state of Sao Paulo, in Brazil. Many of the Japanese now own their land-holdings, and while the coffee orchards they have planted are growing to the fruit-bearing period, they are supporting themselves by the cultivation of rice and cotton. Their well-known industry and efficiency are making them felt wherever they touch the soil, as well as in the centers where effective manual labor is needed. In the great coffee port of Santos perhaps sixty per cent or more of the stevedores who handle coffee shipments are Japanese. I am assured that there are already 70,000 Japanese in the state of Sao Paulo alone.

Along with the tide came a young graduate of one of the Church colleges and of the Tokyo Theological School, Mr. Yasoji Ito, bringing me an entirely satisfactory letter from Bishop McKim. Canon Morray-Jones, the Anglican Chaplain of St. Paul's Church, Sao Paulo, has known him for some months. He is regular and faithful in his communions, exceptionally reverent and devout.

I appointed him to continue the work of a catechist, such as he did acceptably at Osaka. He has presented ten candidates for Holy Baptism, to Canon Morray-Jones, who baptized them at my request. He has since prepared seven candidates for Baptism, and has six or seven awaiting Confirmation. There are five catechumens. He has held forty-five services in different parts of the state.

Upon the arrival of the Rev. Mr. Krischke in Sao Paulo, Mr. Ito will be put under his charge. They both speak English and so find a common medium.

I can poorly portray the thrill of joy and sense of blessing the prospect of the Japanese work gives us and the signal way in which God has seemingly sent us the human instrument, tested and fitted for the task. Our young Church swings forward gladly to help convert this great army of heathenism at this strategic time, when their shifting from the old Asiatic to the new American world would seem to make less logically difficult their transition from the old paganism to the new and ever-living Virgin-born Christ.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY SPECIAL 1923-1925.

The National Committee for the Woman's Auxiliary Special, which fund is to bear the name of Bishop Tuttle, has already issued two leaflets, one entitled, An Open Door to Woman's Service; the other, The National Training School for Colored Workers. In addition there are now ready two playlets which bring out very forcibly the need of a hostelry in New York and the service it will render to our missionaries home on furlough, and volunteers.

The first was written by Mrs. John W. Arrington, Jr., of Upper South Carolina, for a parish meeting in that Diocese. It consists of two scenes, one at the Church Missions House in 1924, the other at the Woman's Auxiliary Hostelry in 1927. The characters are an Auxiliary officer and two missionaries. It requires little preparation and is very effective.

The second is Mrs. Arrington's playlet, amplified by Miss Miriam Cooper, a member of the Committee on Pageantry of the Second Province. Miss Cooper has added a prologue which attractively brings out the hospitality shown to the messengers of the Lord Christ in the early days of Christianity. This requires, in addition to the Auxiliary officer and the two missionaries, three characters for the Prologue, a Jewish woman, John Mark and Decias.

The playlets are being sold for the actual cost of printing plus the postage, the first for two cents, the second for four cents, and can be secured from Miss N. H. Winston, 1401 S. Third Avenue, Louisville, Ky., or Mrs. C. H. Boynton, No. 3 Chelsea Square, New York City. Either one could be used for a program meeting. In Miss Cooper's the National Training School for Colored Workers is suggested when one of the missionaries at the hostelry plans to go to Raleigh to give a course to the students there.

A joint committee has been appointed by the National Council to study the needs of this school and architects plans have already been submitted. It was found that the original plan to use the Hunter house already on the grounds of St. Augustines, was not feasible, so a new one is to be built. This calls for an expenditure of about $16,500, of which $5,000 has been pledged by the Colored people themselves.

A joint committee has also been appointed by the National Council to study the question of a residence near Headquarters, and investigations show that desirable pieces of property are available at prices which are not exorbitant. In the meantime the eagerness of those whom it will serve grows apace.

The total amount in gifts and pledges up to March 1 is $48,950. Of this $10,764.63 has been received by the treasurer, Mrs. G. H. Prince, 965 Summit Avenue, St. Paul, Minn. This is most gratifying and gives ground for hope that the goal will be reached at no distant date. It will not be possible for the actual work of building the Training School in the South, or securing the property in New York, to go forward until the full amount is pledged and sufficient cash on hand to meet building costs. If any Diocese has not already pledged it is urged to do so as soon as possible and inform Mrs. Prince, that there be no unnecessary delay.

MISSION STUDY DISRUPTS CHURCH VESTRY MEETING.

The Rev. N. B. Groton, rector of St. Thomas', White-marsh, is leader of a mission study class that has been organized in St. Asaph's, Bela, and which is holding sessions Wednesday nights.

There's no particular news in that, you will pause to remark. When it is disclosed that Mr. Groton's work blocked and interrupted the progress of a meeting of St. Asaph's vestry your interest may increase. That's why The Church News copy reader ventured to build a "sensational newspaper" headline to this article.

The Rev. Benjamin N. Bird, rector of St. Asaph's, is leader of a mission study class in another parish. Mr. Bird and Mr. Groton are bully good friends. When the rector of St. Asaph's went to his January vestry meeting he hadn't the slightest suspicion that Mr. Groton's mission study class had affected his vestry. The minutes of the last vestry meeting were read without any one's attempting to put a motion that the reading be dispensed with.

Then the storm broke. One vestryman said something about the mission study class. Another began to talk about Japan. In a minute the entire vestry was discussing the importance of supporting missions. Coal bills, Episcopal, Convention and Sustentation Funds were brushed aside.

"This is a vestry meeting, not a mission study class," broke in Mr. Bird.

"Now wait a minute, rector," some one interrupted, "those missionaries in Japan, they—" And so it went on. Vestry business, parish details, all forgotten. Missions had the right of way.

It developed that virtually the entire vestry had enrolled in the mission study class, and parish interest in the Church's mission in Japan is growing.—From "The Church News" of Pennsylvania.

WORK AMONG ITALIANS IN THE DIOCESE OF ERIE.

One of the most heartening pieces of Church work anywhere in the country is that carried on by the general missionary among the Italians in the Diocese of Erie, the Rev. S. J. Noce. Let him tell about it in his own words, now at the end of the second year.

"The first year of our work in Farrell was spent in making acquaintances and taking people into the church as fast as we could, until additional pews and chairs were needed to accommodate the constantly growing congregation and Church school. The second year found us busy strengthening the work already accomplished and looking after the church building, which was in urgent need of attention. Four bare walls, rather blackened by smoke, and a beam ceiling would not do for people used to beautiful churches and colors. So the necessary sum was pledged and"—various extensive repairs and enlargements were made. "The total cost was about $1,900, which is being faithfully paid by the almost generally very poor congregation.

"Statistics in mining and steel towns, where people are continually on the move, are necessarily a poor source of information, but we can safely say that at present we have about one hundred and fifty families, reliable and faithful. A good number of those who have moved have been accounted for by other Episcopal churches, and where there are no churches (as often happens in small mining centres) they do their best with the aid of a Prayer Book and leaflets. In one of these places a man started a Church school of his own, with a number of uncared for children, and how proud he is of his undertaking! He was made a child of Christ one evening when he came into the church to upset the candles and the altar. Luck was against him, though, as at that time we had no candles and the altar was too heavy. Often he writes that he is at the end of his rope, and then we help him along with a few suggestions. We call it our mail course Church school branch. Is it any wonder we thought it worth while to travel 275 miles to baptize his baby? That man had only five months' training as a church member."

"Another young man, ill in a sanatorium, has taken more than fifteen young men to the service of our Church in the chapel, and he is going stronger at it every Sunday. He also has a Church school of his very own. Our work proves to be the planting of seeds and they blossom forth in most unsuspected places.

"After two years of work our task is not any easier, for we must fight for every inch of our ground. This small community has a great majority who call themselves socialists, anti-Christian. The only way to gain a place in their hearts is through love and service. During a recent epidemic of diphtheria and scarlet fever few homes did not come under the influence of St. Paul's Church. Putting it in the language of this people, 'a red warning on the door and the good priest of St. Paul with his faithful battered Dodge were synonymous!' What seemed impossible in the beginning is now an established fact. The English-speaking congregation and the Italian one worship under the same roof in peace and harmony.

"Our Girls' Friendly Society, fifty-five strong, embraces seven different nationalities and is filling a very sore need. Our Italian Brotherhood of St. Andrew is composed of forty men and is growing. . . .

"Through the help of the Bishop and other good men in the Diocese we have bought the lot next to the church. When shall we have a parish house? There is no safe place for young people to go, and we have only a basement! We are on the priority list for $25,000, and every cent of it is needed.

"Our mission in Greenville is being taken up again after an interruption due to a strike in the railroad shops. Our mission in Sharon must be looked after, another mission in Erie is rapidly forming, and the two congregations in Farrell claim attention. The general missionary would welcome the gift of ubiquitousness. More missionaries are needed. Will help be forthcoming?"

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

AN IMPORTANT RECRUITING STATION.

Mr. Editor: The interest of the Church at large in the Conference on the Ministry to be held for boys at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., from June 23 to June 27 has been great.

Numerous letters have been received asking for our literature. Thousands of copies of "What Will You Do With It?" and "Four Days at St. Paul's School" have been sent to bishops, clergy and laity.

We wish, however, to call attention to the fact that registration blanks are sent only on request. Parishes intending to send boys or individuals desiring to come should write for these blanks at once. The enrollment is, of course, limited by the size of the school, and all registrations should be made by June 1.

COMING CONFERENCES OF CHURCH WORKERS.

Mr. Editor: In a recent issue of your paper I noticed an article, "Coming Conferences for Church Workers." I do not know who is responsible for having written the article, but the lack of mention of Summer Schools and Conferences of the Third Province is most noticeable.

In view of the fact that the Third Province probably has more of these Summer Conferences than any other in the country, it is peculiarly unfortunate. Last year, for example, conferences were held in the Dioceses of Harrisburg, Bethlehem, Virginia, a joint conference of the Dioceses of Delaware and Easton, a conference for colored workers in Lawrenceburg, Va., and last, but far from least, the joint conference of the Dioceses of Erie and Pittsburgh, held at Conneaut Lake, Pa. This last conference is one OUTSTANDING ADVANCES IN CHINESE CHURCH.

Every one of the eleven dioceses of the Chinese Church reports progress since the last General Synod, which met in 1920. Among the outstanding advances may be mentioned the following:

Four new churches consecrated and the handsome new plant of St. Mary's Hall built and occupied, in the Diocese of Shanghai. The Church of Our Saviour and Holy Trinity College erected in Canton, and St. Stephen's Girls' College in Hongkong, at a cost respectively of $45,000, $125,000 and $250,000, in the Diocese of Victoria, and an endowment fund for the Diocese started, with $20,000 for a nucleus. In the Diocese of North China work has been started in the Province of Shansi. (A glance at the map on page 12 of The Story of the Program will help the reader to appreciate the vast extent of these Chinese dioceses.) In the Dioceses of Western China, Kwangsi-Hunan and Fukien there has been marked progress toward self-support; in the last seven churches have been erected recently with funds raised by the Chinese Christians. In Western China development has been hindered by civil war. The foreign clergy in the Diocese of Hankow are more and more withdrawn from detailed direction of the parishes, which are turned over to the Chinese clergy. In the Diocese of Shantung contributions to missionary work doubled in 1922 (the last year for which figures are available).

Figures for 1922 show certain striking increases over 1920:

Chinese clergy, 40 added, 25 per cent increase.

Total Chinese staff, 200 added, 7 per cent increase.

Confirmed Christians, 3,350 added, 14 per cent increase.

Unconfirmed Christians, 4,100 added, 20 per cent increase.

Offering for Church purposes, $30,716 additional, 35 per cent increase.

These figures, though approximate, show an essentially healthy condition, and may well be cause for thankfulness.

of the oldest in this part of the country. It has been in operation for at least twelve years and has been a pioneer in the field of religious education.

I am writing this letter to you because, as I have said, I do not know who is responsible for the article in question. I shall be glad, however, if you will correct this unfortunate omission.

AN ANNIVERSARY WORTH REMEMBERING.

Mr. Editor: The year 1925 will mark the sixteen hundredth anniversary of the First General Council of the Church, held in Nicea in Asia Minor, in A. D. 325. From the deliberations of this Council issued the Creed, which (as slightly revised at a later Council) is now printed in our Prayer Book, as the faith of the Church. We call it the Nicene Creed.

Would it not be fitting for our Church to inaugurate a nation-wide celebration of this anniversary. A pageant should be prepared that might be given in every parish in the land. Newspaper articles and magazine articles should be prepared by Churchmen. The historic character of the Church should be emphasized.

It would be a fine opportunity to banish the myth that Henry VIII founded the Church.

We ought to have a simple, picturesque, readable and plainly written pamphlet on the whole subject that could be distributed widely. Some good layman could do the Church no better service than to provide a million copies of such a pamphlet to be freely distributed in every community.

It would seem that this project might be undertaken by the Department of Religious Education.

AN ENCOURAGING INCIDENT.

In the course of our correspondence within the past couple of weeks, we have received a very interesting account of a bit of Social Service in connection with ministering to a convict road camp, and we quote from our correspondent, as follows:

"Frank ——— is an Englishman, and at the early age of fourteen enlisted as a drummer boy and spent four years in India with the British Army. He returned home and at the outbreak of the World War he again enlisted and served four years in France. After the war he came to America and joined the United States Army, becoming an artilleryman. Last fall he played on a victorious football eleven and celebrated the occasion at a dance. He was treated to more intoxicating refreshment than was good for him, and then bought a half a pint to take to his friends at the barracks. He was arrested, charged with being "drunk and disorderly, and with transporting liquor." He demanded trial by jury and was kept a month in jail before the trial. He was then sentenced to thirty days in jail, $50 fine, $48 costs. He had no money to pay, so he was sent to the convict camp. He would have had to spend about six months in jail because of inability to pay the fine.

I investigated all the facts in the case and found he had a splendid reputation among the men and officers of his company. I related his position to one of my parishioners, who became interested in him, and he very gladly gave me a check for $98 to pay his fine and costs. His release came the night before Christmas. He asked to be allowed to remain in the camp over Christmas Day and take part in the Christmas service and celebration.

He came to the rectory next morning and spent the day with me. Then he left for Baltimore and got a ship through the Panama Canal to California. At Angel Island he applied for re-enlistment and is again in the service of the United States Army. I have had no less than six letters and many postcards from him, all expressive of gratitude for the timely help given.

Had this man spent six months in jail with the usual run of prisoners, there can be no doubt that he would have lost his self-respect, and no good purpose would have been served. As it is, he has a good chance to develop into a worthy citizen. The people of my congregation, and indeed of the community, have stood by us in our ministrations to these unfortunate people, and I regard this as a most important and necessary part of my ministry. We have the hearty cooperation of the captain and his wife in our work, and the men as a whole are most appreciative."

It gives us pleasure to use this incident for two reasons: First, it shows actual results sometimes attained from this form of Christian Social Service. It calls to our mind our Lord's saying "that joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance." Any one ministering in a convict camp, however, must not expect too many incidents like the foregoing. If he does, he lays himself open to bitter disappointment, for in many cases all is done that is reported above, and not so much as a post-card is ever received in response.

We regret to say that this lack of appreciation is rather the rule than the exception, and the unusual case is the one about which our correspondent writes. In fact, it so often happens that ingratitude is the reward for these kind of services that many people feel that they are not worth while. We must remember, however, that even our Saviour Himself did not receive the gratitude for His good deeds that we would have expected. It will be recalled that upon one occasion He healed ten lepers, and only one of them came back to give glory to God. No incident in the whole gospel record is more true to life than this, nor is any more enlightening and instructive as to what our Lord expects of His followers. He does not condemn the other nine, nor emphasize their ingratitude in any way. He only calls sufficient attention to their conduct to show us that He had noticed it. It is as though He paused in His ministration and said to us, who are trying to follow in His footsteps now, "You must not work for gratitude indeed you need not expect it. The reward that is given for this kind of service does not come from the hands of men." The important thing is that Christ did not stop healing lepers, because nine out of the ten who were benefited on that occasion did not express any thanks for the great gift of restored health which had been poured out upon them. If one person in ten to whom we minister responds, it is as high a percentage of appreciation as He received for His deeds of love.

There is a second reason for quoting from our correspondent: which is to point out the value of ministering in jails, combined with a helpful knowledge of criminal law and practice. It will be noticed that, in the case above recorded, the man had served a sentence of thirty days, and was then sent to the road camp to serve for his fine and the cost of the case. The usual practice is to make a criminal serve two days for every dollar of the fine. When a sentence is imposed for a specific time (thirty days or six months), the judge has no control over such a sentence once it is imposed. It is called "flat time." In most States, however, the fine remains at the discretion of the judge, and he can at any time remit the fine or the cost and release the prisoner who has finished serving his "flat time." If there had been a jail chaplain to investigate "Frank's" case, and find out his previous good record, and report it to the judge, in all probability that official would have exercised the leniency which the law allows him, and this man would not have gone to the road camp at all. Also the generous individual who put up the fine and cost could have saved that money to use in some other deserving case.

Today in the large cities probation officers are usually employed to investigate just such cases as these, but few of the small towns or rural courts have reached this state of progress. Most judges, however, will welcome persons who will act as volunteer probation officers, and make such investigations as will enable them to exercise their discretionary powers for leniency in the most helpful manner, and there is no way in which a clergyman in a country town can render more helpful Christian service than by acting in this capacity.

From Japan comes a stirring tale. Hundreds of men in the Tokyo penitentiary for long term convicts found the walls of their prison laid flat by the tremendous earthquake, but as if hypnotized not a man of them seized the chance to regain his freedom. The reason? According to Galem M. Fisher it was simply the superb character and teaching of their wardens, S. Arima, a sterling Christian who for decades has contended almost single-handed for the new penology represented in America by Thomas Mott Osborne. The story is vividly sketched in a letter to Mr. Fisher from Caroline Macdonald, the founder of the Tokyo Neighborhood House: "The prison walls at Kosuge fell flat, as did also all the workshops. There was no attempt at escape and for three nights they slept outside under the trees (1,300 prisoners with sentences from twelve years to life—over two hundred life men). The other prisons handcuffed their men and had some panic (it was no wonder) but Mr. Arima did not handcuff any one and there was no panic. They rallied around Mr. Arima and stood their ground. Mr. Arima said to me with tears in his eyes, 'I expected my men to behave well in a crisis, but even I was surprised at the way they did behave'. It is a vindication of his theory and practice that he has held to for thirty years, that if you treat people like human beings they'll behave like human beings."

Church Intelligence

A Representative Gathering.

Twenty-one nations were represented at the meeting of the Management Committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, held in Oxford, England, last week. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, General Secretary of the American branch of the Alliance who represented the American churches, has just cabled that the conference was one of the most successful in the history of the World Alliance, which now has branches in twenty-seven different countries.

An outstanding feature of the conference was the progress made toward cooperation by all elements of the Christian Church and also the cooperation between the churches and the various labor movements. Dr. Alexander Ramsay, International Organization Secretary, reported that the condition of the Greek Church communicants under Turkish rule is deplorable and calls for immediate action.

A painful discussion of the Ruhr situation ended harmoniously in the appointment of a special committee to enlist the help of the churches in bringing about a settlement of these conditions. Dr. Atkinson was appointed chairman of this committee.

Dr. Atkinson cabled that great preparations were being made for the visit of Dr. Harry E. Fosdick and Dean Howard Robbins of New York, who will visit Great Britain during the coming summer under the auspices of the Commission on Interchange of Preachers and Speakers. This Commission which has members on both sides of the Atlantic has now amalgamated with the World Alliance in Britain and extended its work to all the countries of the globe. The Commission formerly confined itself to arranging exchange of speakers and preachers between the United States, Great Britain and France, but has now amplified its program to include all countries.

The next meeting of the International Committee of the World Alliance will be held in August, 1925, at Stockholm, but there will be several regional conferences during the year, the most important of which will be held in Poland, Macedonia and Hungary.

Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Frederick Lynch of the American branch of the World Alliance also attended the conference on Politics, Economics and Citizenship held in Birmingham, England, and reported that this was attended by representative Catholics, Anglicans and Nonconformists who showed a most encouraging disposition to work together for the general good.

To Elect Bishop of Florida.

The Standing Committee of the Diocese of Florida as the Ecclesiastical Authority, under the date of April 1, has notified the clergy and laity that the election of a Bishop for the Diocese of Florida will be held at the approaching Diocesan Council, which will convene at St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Wednesday, May 21.

The Standing Committee also has set forth a prayer to be used in service time, which it also recommends to the people for constant use. It is for the guidance of the Holy Spirit in the sessions of the Council and in the election of a Bishop.

Anglo-Catholics to Celebrate Anniversary.

Anniversary Day will be observed by the Anglo-Catholic Congress of London on July 16 of this year. From the early hours of the morning celebrations of the Holy Eucharist will be held in various churches, and in the afternoon there will be a large garden party in Hyde Park, such as was held in the midst of Congress Week last year.

In the evening there is to be a meeting in Albert Hall, with speeches and music. The names of the speakers on this occasion have not yet been made public.

To Ask for Episcopal Assistance.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop of Central New York, in announcing the annual meeting of the Convention of the Diocese, which meets May 20, gives notice that he will ask for Episcopal assistance.

Will Elect Bishop-Coadjutor.

More than a sufficient number of consents have come for the election of a Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Western New York, and almost enough from the Standing Committees. The election will take place at St. Paul's, Rochester, probably on May 2. The question of the division of the Diocese will not be part of the agenda of that particular convention.

Great Need for More Army Chaplains.

"Three of the five great general hospitals of the Army are without chaplains. Dying men have no spiritual consolation except as may be given by voluntary service from the pastors of the neighborhood," is a situation due to the smallness of the Chaplains' Corps, according to the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains of the Federal Council of Churches.

Thousands of ministers throughout the United States are urging Congress to pass the bill to remove discrimination against Army chaplains and to provide for an increase in the corps to one chaplain for every eight hundred enlisted men and officers in the Army. The clergy are aroused at the fact that Army chaplains do not have the same opportunity for advancement in their corps as officers in the Medical, Dental and Veterinarian corps.

The clergy are protesting strongly against the number of army posts, some of which have more than one thousand men, that are without the services of a chaplain. Other large posts with two or three thousand men have only one chaplain. They are specially indignant that three of the five general hospitals are without chaplains, and that two others have only one, while each should have two chaplains.

Various communions sent representatives to the joint hearing recently by sub-committees of the Senate and the House. The bill was introduced at the request of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains. It has the support of practically all Protestant bodies, Roman Catholics and Jews. Bishop Charles H. Brent, Chief Chaplain of the A. E. F. in France, will represent not only the Episcopalians, but also the churches in general.

Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, General

Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, and a chaplain with the rank of major in the Officers' Reserve Corps, in explaining the bill today said:

"The Churches are not asking much for the chaplains. They simply request that all discriminations against chaplains be removed and that there be an adequate chaplain ministry for enlisted men and officers of the Army.

"At present there are twenty-five large posts with garrisons ranging from one hundred to 1,224 men that are without chaplains. Some of these posts, like the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Maryland, are thirty-five miles from the nearest town. Three are on the water. In addition to this, one hundred and thirty army posts, like Camp Meade, Maryland; Fort Riley, Kansas; the Presidio, of San Francisco, California, have only one chaplain, when they should have two or three each. These posts which should have a minimum of thirty-nine chaplains, have only twenty-two.

"At each of the five general hospitals there should be two chaplains—one Roman Catholic, and one Protestant. At present there are only two chaplains for all the five hospitals. In the Army and Navy General Hospital, Beaumont General Hospital, and the Letterman General Hospital, at all of which men are ill, some dying, there are no chaplains.

"Stations without chaplains and their garrisons are as follows: Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., 434; Fort Banks, Mass., 234; Fort Barrancas, Fla., 198; Bolling Field, D. C., 396; Fort Brady, Mich., 240; Brooks Field, Texas, 784; Carlisle Barracks, Pa., 385; Camp Devens, Mass., 313; Fort Hoyle, Md., 1,224; Fort Mason, Calif., 205; Maxwell Field, Ala., 215; Miller Field, S. I., N. Y., 157; Fort Moultrie, S. C., 432; Camp Normoyle, Texas, 446; Fort Omaha, Nebr., 749; Fort Preble, Me., 137; Fort Reno, Okla., 93; Fort Schuyler, N. Y., 123; Fort Strong, Mass., 519; Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., 246; Washington Barracks, D. C., 471; Fort Williams, Me., 535; Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y., 434; Fort Crook, Nebr., 473; Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., 937.

"Large stations undermanned by chaplains, their garrisons, and the number of chaplains at each are as follows: Fort Benning, Ga., 4,220 men, 3 chaplains; Fort Bliss, Texas, 3,386, 3; Fort Bragg, N. C., 1,869, 1; Kelly Field, Texas, 1,729, 1; Langley Field, Va., 1,283, 1; Fort McDowell, Calif., 2,349, 1; Fort McPherson, Ga., 1,310, 1; Camp Meade, Md., 1,510, 1; Presidio of San Francisco, Calif., 1,927, 1; Fort Riley, Kansas, 1,933, 1; Fort Sam Houston, Texas, 7,535, 5; Fort Sheridan, Ill., 1,843, 1; Fort Sill, Okla., 2,749, 2.

"Some of the best young men of the country are going into the army. They and their people have a right to expect that they should have an opportunity for spiritual ministry. When the war was on, and the men were concentrated in great cantonments, one chaplain for 1,200 men was adequate, but now that the groups are scattered in scores of posts not only in this country, but in the Philippines, the Hawaiian Islands, Alaska, and the Panama Canal, there must be more chaplains available for duty, or the spiritual life of the men will suffer.

"These are the reasons why the churches are asking Congress to increase the Chaplains' Corps, and to remove all the discriminations against the men serving in it, so that they may advance as rapidly as their brethren in the other service corps of the Army."

The members of the special committee of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains are: Bishop Wil-

Iiam F. McDowell, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, the Rev. Jason Noble Pierce, the Rev. W. A. Morgan, the Rev. Wallace Radcliffe and the Rev. E. O. Watson.

Bishop Bratton in a Preaching Mission.

The Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Mississippi, has been conducting a preaching mission in Trinity Church, Parkersburg, which ended on Sunday, April 13. The Bishop is a skilled missionary, and all his sermons have been sane, practical and very stimulating. In having the Bishop with them, the people of Trinity Church and of Parkersburg generally have enjoyed a rare treat.

Deaconess Hart Tours the Diocese.

Deaconess Hart, of the China Mission, has recently completed a tour of the Diocese of West Virginia in the interest of the Church's Mission. Her itinerary included Parkersburg, Huntington, Wheeling, Clarksburg, Weston and Elkins. Everywhere the deaconess brought a strong, inspiring message of the problems and opportunities of the Church in the vast China field. The Woman's Auxiliary in West Virginia has been greatly stimulated by Deaconess Hart's visit.

Date of Annual Council Changed.

The date of the Annual Council of the Diocese has been changed from Wednesday, May 21, to Wednesday, May 28, one week later. The place of course remains unchanged, Christ Church, Point Pleasant.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Bishop Gravatt's Consecration.

This is the twenty-fifth year of the Episcopate of the Rt. Rev. William Loyall Gravatt, D. D., in West Virginia. It is likely that in the autumn the Diocese will fittingly observe the date of his consecration, a date that in the providence of God has meant so much to the progress and stability of the Church in West Virginia.

Bishop Strider's Lectures on Church.

During the week March 9 to 15 Bishop Strider delivered a series of devotional addresses and lectures in Trinity Church, Huntington. They were given in the Bishop's usual interesting and instructive manner and were appreciated by the large congregations that had gathered to listen. The subjects were: 1. The Vitality of the Christian Religion. 2. The Bible. 3. The History of the Episcopal Church. 4. The Doctrines of the Episcopal Church. 5. The Spirit of the Episcopal Church. 6. Personal Accountability. The Rev. S. Roger Tyler is the rector of this prosperous church in Huntington and has done a good work.

New Church at Williamstown.

A handsome stone church in the gothic style is nearing completion in Williamstown and may be opened for the first service on Easter Day. The Diocese can be proud of this addition to its edifices, and it is owing to the efficient leadership of the rector, Rev. G. H. Crook, and the devotion of his people.

Clerical Changes in West Virginia.

March 1 the Rev. L. O. Forquerman assumed charge of Grace Church, Ravenswood, together with the work at Ripley and Liverpool. Rev. J. B. Thompson has accepted a call to St. Mark's, St. Alban's, and the Rev. H. B. McC. Jamison to Bramwell and Eckman. The vestry of St. Luke's, Wheeling, accepted with regret the resignation of their beloved rector, Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D. D., to take effect in the fall, and expressed their appreciation of his long and faithful service by electing him rector-emeritus.

Noon Day Services in Trinity Church, Parkersburg.

Among the speakers at these services have been the different clergy of the city, as well as the Rev. E. B. Andrews, rector of St. Matthew's, Wheeling, the Bishop Coadjutor, and Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council. The rector, the Rev. John Gass, has been conducting weekly a "Class in Personal Religion," which has proven very helpful to those attending.

Lent in St. Andrew's, Wheeling.

The plans made for Lent in St. Andrew's by the late rector, recently deceased, Rev. James L. Fish, have been carried out as far as possible. Among the visiting clergy have been Bishop Strider, the Rev. Messrs. William Meade, E. B. Andrews, Jacob Brittingham, D. D., B. M. Spurr and C. G. Cogley.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Tucker Speaks in Savannah.

A forceful and interesting address on "Rebuilding in Japan" was given in Savannah March 14 by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., former Bishop of Kyoto, at a united service of the four parishes, which was held as the culmination of the Lenten discussion groups, a plan that was carried out this year, repeating one of last year. Nine groups studied "Japan" inter-parochially and two took up the study of the "county jail." The entire registration was one hundred and twenty-four. A normal class was conducted by one of last year's leaders, and the leaders were trained each week for their meetings. The four congregations were invited to the united service, and St. Paul's Church, where it was held, was filled. The Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector of St. John's Church, who was one of the leaders of the jail study, gave an interesting talk on the study of this course and told of the visits of committees to the jail for investigating. A practical program for a parish social service work was one of the results from the study, and an endeavor will be made to have this a feature in each parish in the city, to continue observation work and for "friendly visiting." A committee from the groups will appear before the grand jury to ask that a place be provided for lunatics, who are now confined in the county jail during the period of observation. Mr. Jonnard reported the jail in Chatman County as being in a good condition, and the sheriff a man of fine caliber and doing a splendid work with the material with which he has to work. Bishop Tucker's address was a fine climax to the service, and he stressed the fact that the rebuilding of churches, schools and hospitals in stricken Tokyo should not be considered in terms of replacing losses, but in terms of opportunity for Christianizing the great empire of Japan. He made the appeal that though many may be prejudiced against Japan, they recognize the tremendous part in world affairs she will play in years to come, and the question to be considered by Christians is whether or not they will leave Japan and China a prey to their own selfish passions, or give them the opportunity to become Christians.

Mrs. D. D. Taber, who was loaned to the Diocese of Georgia for three months by the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, has made a most interesting report to the Bishop of her tour, and in it she says: "In almost every place I visited the people said I had come 'just at the right time.' This I interpret as awakened interest, and I feel that the workers in Georgia are ready to go forward." Mrs. Taber's itinerary was planned by the Bishop and all arrangements were made through the Nation-wide Campaign Department who promoted her visit to the Diocese. Mrs. Taber kept every appointment made for her, and visited thirteen parishes and nineteen missions, both white and colored; total, thirty-two. She spoke eighty-four times at conferences or at services. In her talks Mrs. Taber covered the Program of the Church, and in many conferences she specialized in the work of Religious Education and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Rowan District.

The third annual meeting of the Rowan District of the Woman's Auxiliary was held recently in St. Paul's Church, Salisbury, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion by the rector, Rev. Kenneth Houlder. Mrs. C. F. Massey, chairman, presided, and Mrs. W. H. Hardin very graciously greeted the guests in behalf of St. Paul's branch and extended a cordial welcome. Miss Emma Hall, chairman of districts, responded, expressing her enthusiasm at the splendid attendance and the marked increase of interest shown. Miss Hall urged organization in places unorganized and also spoke on the Hoke Ramsaur Memorial, of which she is a committee woman.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. L. D. Heathman, Coolemeec, Social Service Secretary; Mrs. Fannie T. Dowd, Statesville, Box Work Secretary; Mrs. Peter Hairston, Educational Secretary; Mrs. George White, Auxiliary Special Secretary, and Mrs. Frank Hill, U. T. O. Custodian, made splendid reports.

The Rev. C. B. Scoville, of Concord, Educational Secretary of the Diocese, said noon-day prayers for missions, after which Mr. Scoville addressed the meeting most interestingly, his subject being District Organization and Religious Education. Mrs. E. C. Marshall, of Charlotte, Diocesan Box Work Secretary, was present and talked of that work.

A delightful luncheon was served at the mission house, the ladies of St. Paul's branch as hostesses, assisted by the members of St. Peter's Guild.

After luncheon Miss Esdale Shaw, Educational Secretary of the Auxiliary, made a splendid address on the work in the diocese, especially Mission Study classes. The Rev. W. H. Wheeler, Superintendent of the Thompson Orphanage, told of the children and their life there; also gave a brief survey of the immediate needs for the orphanage.

There are eight organized branches of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Rowan District and two new branches being organized.

Bishop Jones Holds Interesting Mission.

A week's preaching mission that met with gratifying results was brought to a close on Palm Sunday in Christ Church, Winnetka, Ill., the Rev. E. Ashley Gerhard, rector. Described by the missionary, the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, as "an adventure in community thinking," it held the close attention and gained a generous response of the people of this typically conservative suburban parish. Bishop Jones laid the foundation of the week's discussion on Passion Sunday by two stirring addresses on "The Simplicity of God" and "The Divinity of Man." These were followed on successive evenings during the week by addresses and discussions on such subjects as "What Is the First Century Gospel Worth Today?" "Reducing the Spiritual Death Rate," "Industrial Teamwork," "The One Human Family," "Better Than Punishment," and "The Blasphemy of War." At the morning and evening services on Palm Sunday the mission was brought to a close by addresses on "The New Way of Life" and "The Conquest of Fear." Discussion group meetings were held on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings on "The Place of Theology in Religion," "The Place of Organization in Religion," and "The Place of Ethics in Religion." There were also two services for the children of the community.

It is doubtful if anything has ever taken place in this parish which has more deeply touched the spiritual life of its people. There were manifest differences of opinion on many points between the missionary and his hearers. But the tolerance of Bishop Jones, his clear sincerity, his courage, his obvious willingness to serve his ideals at whatever cost to himself, gained their inevitable response. He demonstrated in himself the power of that Christian quality which again and again he described as "creative good will."

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Japan Reconstruction Fund.

Three items of special interest to the Church people in Southwestern Virginia constitute for them an especial appeal in connection with the efforts now being made in this Diocese on behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, which is to be one of the chief beneficiaries of this fund, is under the charge of Dr. Rudolph Teusler, formerly of Wytheville, Va.

Miss Gladys Fauntleroy, of Altavista, which is also in this Diocese, was a teacher in St. Margaret's School. Fortunately, at the time the earthquake occurred, she was at Osaka on an engagement of some kind.

Bishop Motoda, of Tokyo, when a student at Gambier, O., was a pupil in Greek of the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, who is at present rector of Trinity Church, Rocky Mount, Va.

St. John's Church, Wytheville.

The young people of St. John's, the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, rector, have a very flourishing society and take an active part in the work of the parish. At their regular meeting on Quinquagesima Sunday it was decided to undertake two kinds of Lenten work: first, to form a choir and sing at the Sunday evening services, and, second, to visit people who were sick and take them flowers. It was encouraging to see the interest the young people took in this work, especially the music. There was a choir of from eight to ten every Sunday, both boys and girls. One Sunday three girls sang a Lenten hymn as an offertory. Later on it was decided to have a Corporate Communion of the Young People's Society at the early service on Palm Sunday. A large number of the young people attended this service. In the work of this society the young people have been greatly encouraged by the interest of the counsellors and rector.

Memorial for St. John's, Bedford.

The Lamb Studios, in old Greenwich Village, New York, are showing at this Easter season as especially appropriate, the memorial window to the old residents of the parish of St. John's Church, Bedford, where in the great window openings the subject of the Easter morn has been developed under the personal supervision of Charles R. Lamb.

NEWARK.

Service of Dedication.

The service of the dedication of the carillon of thirty-five bells at St. Peter's Church, Morristown, on the afternoon of Palm Sunday was attended by a multitude of people quite beyond the capacity of the church. The bells have been largely personal gifts or the gifts of groups of people, all of them in one or another way memorials. The number of persons represented in the gifts is very remarkable. After a dignified and reverent service in the church, arranged by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Brookman, the bells were played for an hour by Mr. Frederick Rocke to a great multitude of people. The streets all about the church and the center of the town were crowded with automobiles, driven in from a large part of Northern New Jersey, so that traffic through the center of the town was suspended. It was an astonishing manifestation of interest. A considerable number of our own clergy and those of other churches were in attendance at the service.

Plan New Parish House.

At the time of the annual confirmation on Palm Sunday in the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, held by Bishop Lines, the announcement was made that the vestry of the church had voted to undertake to raise $50,000 for the erection of the parish house to take the place of the inadequate wooden structure which remained standing after the former frame church gave way to the building of the present beautiful stone church. The parish is responding vigorously to the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Thomas W. Attridge.

Summer Conferences.

The arrangements for the summer conferences and the camps of young people at Eagle's Nest Farm on the Delaware River for the second year are proceeding with great interest. It is probable that the Summer Holiday House of the Girls' Friendly Society will be established there, as the Diocese owns 180 acres, partly beside the river and partly on the hills back of it. So many of the boys and young men have desired to attend the Summer Conference at St. Paul's School, Concord, that it has been determined to give up the Diocesan Conference on the preparation for the ministry this year.

Bequests of $50,000 for St. Barnabas' Hospital and $5,000 for Trinity Cathedral, by the late Mrs. Effie K. McIntyre, who died in February, are announced.

St. Mark's Church, Newark, on Forest Hill, has, under the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, quite outgrown its church building, and it has been determined, saving the existing church building, to rearrange and build so as to accommodate double the present congregation.

The debt on St. James' Church, Newark, of $12,500, which the Rev. Percy T. Olton found on his coming three years ago, has been cut down more than half. Under his wise leadership an attempt will be made to clear it all off during the coming year.

The preparations for the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Diocese of Newark on November 13 are going forward. The Presiding Bishop, nearest neighbor of the Diocese on the west, is to preach the sermon. A definite effort to induce every parish and mission church having a debt through mortgage or a church note, to reduce or remove the same to mark the jubilee year, is being made; and churches free from debt are being urged as part of the observance of the year to help out their neighbors or diocesan undertakings in the same way, and all are being urged to give the first place to the fund for Japan and to come closer to meeting the needs of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Installation of Bishop Garland.

Arrangements by the Standing Committee of the Diocese for the installation of the Rt. Rev. Thomas James Garland, D. D., D. C. L., as Bishop of Pennsylvania, have been completed, and promises to be one of the most outstanding events in the history of this "Mother" Diocese of the American Church.

Twenty-five bishops of the Church have accepted invitations to take part in the installation up to this time, Easter Even, and many of the clergy from other dioceses are coming. The installation will take place at 10:30 A. M. on St. Philip's and St. James' Day, Thursday, May 1, in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Nineteenth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia. The city of Philadelphia will be represented by its Mayor, the Hon. W. Freeland Kendrick. The Hon. Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania and a Churchman, is among those who have been invited.

In addition to the bishops and priests from other dioceses and from the Diocese of Pennsylvania, the guests will include the lay deputies to the special convention which elected Bishop Garland, ministers of other religious bodies in Philadelphia and vicinity. The entire service will be broadcasted by radio by Station WIP, Gimbel Bros., through a control station in a room fitted up in the church building for that purpose. An outstanding feature of the ceremonies will be the processional, which will start from the parish house of Holy Trinity more than a city block away from the church. Motion pictures of the processional are to be taken by several of the large producers for exhibition throughout the country.

Bishop Garland will be installed by the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, Presiding Bishop of the Church, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gallor, President of the National Council, will preach the sermon. Bishop Garland will be attended by the Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, and the Rt. Rev. Alex. Mann, Bishop of Pittsburgh.

The music will be rendered by the choir of Holy Trinity Church under the direction of Ralph Kinder, organist and choirmaster.

Following the service there will be a luncheon and reception at the Bellevue Stratford.

The order of the procession follows: The choir, flag-bearers, master of ceremonies and his assistants, students of the Philadelphia Divinity School, clergy of other communions, clergy of the other Eastern Orthodox Church, clergy of dioceses, clergy of the Diocese of Philadelphia, faculty of the Philadelphia Divinity School, Treasurer of the Diocese, Assistant Treasurer of the Diocese, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, Chancellor of the Diocese, trustees of the Cathedral Foundation, Standing Committee of the Diocese, the bishops, the President of the National Council, the Presiding Bishop.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

Pageant Presented.

The Easter services in Trinity Church, Columbia, the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., rector, culminated in a very effective presentation of the pageant put out by the National Department of Religious Education, to arouse interest in the campaign for Japanese Reconstruction. This pageant is entitled "The Way."

Visit of Liberian Missionary.

The Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, who is a missionary from Liberia, now home on furlough, will be in this diocese from April 26 through May 7. During this period he will address the student body of Winthrop College, and the parish of the Church of Our Saviour, in Rock Hill, the Auxiliary of St. Mark's, Chester, the Church Schools of Trinity and the Church of the Good Shepherd, and the congregation of Trinity, Columbia; the colored congregations of Columbia, in St. Luke's Church; the student body of the University of South Carolina in Columbia, under the direction of the Y. M. C. A.; the Diocesan Young People's Convention, in Spartanburg; the student body of Clemson College and the Parish of Holy Trinity Church; the Auxiliary of Grace Church, Anderson; the congregation of Christ Church, Greenville, and the congregations of St. Thaddeus, Aiken, and Grace Church Camden.

During this period he will also address the Diocesan Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of North Carolina, in Charlotte, N. C., and the Convention of the Diocese of Georgia, in Savannah.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial Tablet Unveiled.

The memorial tablet which has been placed in the Mayo Memorial House, Richmond, in commemoration of the gift of the house to the Diocese of Virginia by the children and grandchildren of the late Captain Peter H. Mayo and his wife, both of them devoted communicants of the Church in Richmond, was unveiled at an informal service conducted by Bishop Brown on Thursday, April 3, in the presence of some of the clergy of the Diocese, members of the family and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Mayo.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

St. Paul's Church, Baltimore.

The mid-day Lenten services at St. Paul's, Baltimore, filled the large church with congregations numbering nearly a thousand a day. On Good Friday the addresses were made by Dr. Kinsolving, the rector, and more than two thousand were present for a part or the whole of the three hours. The offerings, which were for the Church's missions, aggregated $400. The Easter communicants in the Church and chapel numbered over twelve hundred.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. T. P. Thurston, D. D., Bishop

Thirty-two laymen attended the session of the men's Bible class at St. Philip's Church, Ardmore, on Palm Sunday morning. St. Philip's class has a splendid leader in the rector, the Rev. Joseph Carden. All the men's Bible classes will join in holding the Churchmen's dinner at the Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, May 21. Bishop Thurston and the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, of San Antonio, are the speakers.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Impressive Services Mark Close of Lenten Season.

The close of the Lenten season was marked in Washington by special services, sacred cantatas, especially Stainer's Crucifixion and Olivet to Calvary by Maunder, and the three hours' passion service on Good Friday. The Bishop of Washington was in charge of this service at Epiphany, the downtown church, and hundreds were turned away during the three hours. A service for those unable to be in the church was held in the parish hall.

On Saturday afternoon, Easter Even, services of baptism of children were held in most of the churches, and on Easter morning, beginning as early as 6 o'clock, celebrations of the Holy Communion were held. At many of the early services, including St. John's, Georgetown; St. Paul's, Washington Circle, and Grace, Georgetown, the services were choral, the music being provided by the regular church choir. The 11 o'clock services were in all cases festival in character, typifying the eternal Easter story by the character of its music, by flowers and by large responsive congregations. Added to this was a beautiful out-of-doors full of sunshine and flowering bush and budding tree. Little children and older ones, all over the Diocese, after effort and self-sacrifice during the Lenten season to raise a fund for the Lenten offering, came with their mite-boxes to the several Sunday school Easter services and presented their offerings. These were greatly increased in some of the parishes over last year. At Christ Church, Georgetown, the offering was more than double that of last year.

St. Columba's, the banner Sunday school last year, in this respect, gave as their Lenten offering this year over one thousand dollars. This was about two hundred dollars more than their offering last year. The enrollment of the Sunday school is one hundred and fifty, so that such an offering is unusual. St. Columba's, formerly a chapel of St. Alban's Parish, was granted its independence at the last Diocesan Convention, and is now an active, working parish. The rector is the Rev. W. W. Shearer.

Meeting of the Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland.

The Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland, Diocese of Washington, was held on Wednesday, April 23, at Upper Marlboro. The President of the Archdeaconry is the Rev. Franklin Lee Metcalf, chaplain of the State Senate of Maryland and rector of All Faith's Parish, Mechanicsville. One clerical and one lay delegate from each of the parishes in Charles and St. Mary's Counties, together with several of the more inaccessible churches in Prince George County, comprise the Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland. Important among the subjects discussed was the problem of rural religious education and rural Christian social service. Interesting speakers from Washington and the counties were found on the program of this meeting.

Presentation of the United Offering.

The semi-annual presentation of the United Offering of the Diocese of Washington will take place on Sunday, April 27, at 8 P. M., at Christ Church, Southeast. The preacher at this service will be Rev. George W. Atkinson, D. D., rector of the Church of the Incarnation.

Daughters of the King Meet.

The annual convention of the Daughters of the King was held on Thursday morning, April 24, at Ascension Church. A quiet hour from 10 to 11 o'clock was conducted by the Rev. V. O. Anderson, of St. Agnes' Parish, and at 11 o'clock the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop of Washington. At this service the Bishop addressed the Daughters and extended greetings. After luncheon there was a business meeting, at which reports from parish branches were read and officers were elected.

The Junior Daughters of the King held their convention the day before, April 23, at Pinkney Memorial Church, Hyattsville, Md.

Collect for First Sunday After Easter.

Almighty Father, Who hast given Thine only Son to die for our sins, and to rise again for our justification; Grant us so to put away the leaven of malice and wickedness that we may always serve Thee in pureness of living and truth; through the merits of the same, Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect for St. Philip and St. James' Day.

(May 1.)

O Almighty God, Whom truly to know is everlasting life; Grant us perfectly to know Thy Son Jesus Christ to be the way, the truth and the life; that, following the steps of Thy holy apostles, Saint Philip and Saint James, we may steadfastly walk in the way that leadeth to eternal life; through the same Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Peace.

"Peace be unto you."—John 20:19.

They cowered within that upper room
With closed doors, at eventide,
And One stood with them in the gloom,
And showed His wounded hands and side.
Their fears were calmed, their doubts were dead,
"Peace be to you," the Master said.

O Thou, before whose awful throne
All powers and glories bow the knee,
Thou dost not leave Thy sheep alone,
But joinest yet the two or three.
When helpers fail and foes increase
Thou drawest near to whisper "Peace."

O while our prayers go forth tonight
In loud appeal or contrite sigh,
Dear Lord, unviewed by mortal sight,
A healing Presence, be Thou nigh,
Let every lightened spirit know
A peace the world may not bestow.

And wheresoe'er a heart perplexed
Is rent by thoughts at war within,
And wheresoe'er a heart is vexed
Or grieved and weary with its sin,
Bid doubt, and pain, and striving cease,
And breathe like balm Thy word of peace.

Sweet Saviour, at Thy blessed birth,
When angels chorused overhead,
Their anthem told of peace on earth—
O let it always wax and spread!
Thy kingdom come from pole to pole,
Thy peace bedew each longing soul.

For peace our spirit yearns and cries—
We need it more each hour we live.
The world has many a golden prize,
But peace is only Thine to give.
From earth and self, O grant release!
Lord, keep our souls in perfect peace.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Widow's Mite.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

One court of the temple was surrounded by a colonnade or pillared porch. In this porch were twelve money-boxes. There was a brass funnel in each, and contributions were made in the ancient coin of the country, mostly copper. A rich man would change gold for copper and fling handful after handful of coins into the thin trumpet-shaped funnel, with a brazen clangor which resounded through the whole building and was the origin of our Lord's saying that the Pharisees "sounded a trumpet" before them when they gave alms. In contrast, there came a certain poor widow who silently dropped in something. Our Lord noted the act. It rested Him, and He read off the widow's thought. It was her last copper. He had just delivered a tremendous oration denouncing false religion. He was tired, depressed, heart-broken. Here was a bit of true religion, the real thing, humble and sweet, and pure as a wild-flower. It was not given to many to comfort Him Who comforts the world, but this woman had that grace; and never knew it. She knows it now, of course, in happy peacefulness of utter rest. Princes of God, great angels who stand before the throne, have told her. Peter and James and John and Levi and the other fishermen who overturned the world have told her. But in this world she never knew. Unless John told Mary, and Mary, our Lord's mother, found and thanked her, she never knew. She lingered away into the city hungry until she could earn a bit of bread, and never knew.

Our Lord called the twelve. They needed the lesson and the comfort. He said: "Amen, I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than all they which have cast into the treasury. For all these, of their abundance, have cast in unto the offerings of God. But she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had."

The widow went home. She had attained immortal fame, unknowing. We think she did better financially after that. We know only one case modern where a person gave all the living that he had. A boy of eighteen had fifty cents in the world and no work. He put the fifty cents in the church plate and went out to look for work, penniless. He found it.

Our Lord laid down the justest principle of giving ever formulated. Gifts are counted by percentage on possessions. One man with a million gives ten thousand. Another, with a hundred, gives one. To God both gifts are equal, for each is one per cent of the amount owned. A third, having a dime only, gives that dime. To God it is one hundred times as much as the ten thousand dollars the millionaire gave. The principle is just, even handed, sensible and utterly different from human systems. If a church were built with that ten thousand and one dollars and ten cents, the man who, in the sight of God, did most to build the church was the man who gave the dime. What a re-lettering of cornerstones and shifting inscriptions on memorials would happen if God proof-read them! I think the angels know.

The lesson has value to poor as well as the rich. Poverty does not prevent giving great gifts to God; for all may give the same percentage of possessions. Carnegie may give a library and you or I a book on the shelves, and both, in God's sight, be equally generous. So unequal are financial endowments in this world that gifts may bear a ludicrous disproportion to each other and yet, in God's sight, the smaller gift may surpass the greater. 'Tis spiritual justice, divine equality, and financial anarchy.

Not only is the luxury of generosity open to all, but the duty of the support of God's worship as well as of God's poor is upon all; even upon God's poor. The widow contributed to the support of the temple. The high priests were opposed to our Lord and He had just denounced the Scribes and Pharisees. Yet, that the great ecclesiastics perverted and misused the temple income, did not prevent the widow's gift from being a gift to God. Moreover, the widow herself was very, very poor, and our Lord's words concerning her show that she was one of God's poor. Yet even on her rested the obligation of giving what she could.

He Is Risen.

The gospel account of the resurrection of Christ is the narration of an event. It has in it no element of theory or speculation or conjecture, nothing but the fact, with such details as show the reaction to it of those who, at one time or another, in one place or another, were eye-witnesses. Paul, in his letter to the Corinthians, offers the argument, but the argument is not abstract, but a linking together of the facts with their evidences, and if at any point it verges on the mystical, it is not with respect to Christ's resurrection, but the resurrection of the dead, which indeed is his main theme. He says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." That is to say, the resurrection of Christ, while supernatural, is not exceptional, but normal, as truly "in the line of human development as birth and growth and death." The normal life runs up into the supernatural.

It is agreed by both believer and unbeliever that Jesus' resurrection is the decisive fact in our religion. We accept as true what a leader of modern doubt has said, "that it is the center of the center, the real heart of Christianity as it has been until now." We must deal with it on the basis of fact. We must keep our thinking about it from slipping off into abstract considerations, even where these are legitimate implications of the thing itself, at least until we have been firmly established in the fact, have vividly felt it, and found it in our experience creative of its proper effects, in thought and character.

We shall be helped to this vital grip on the fact by observing the narrative's method of making it impressive. It lets the fact stand out in bold relief and, so far as it can, imbeds it in the common, everyday life of those who had the first acquaintance with it. In Paul's argument, for example, this supernatural event is lined in with the destiny of man. "Christ is the first fruits of them that sleep," and in the immediate description of it by those who saw it, it is made part of their day's experience, in so far as the thread of the supernatural can be made part of the texture of common life. Indeed this is the consistent method of our religion in all its bringing of the divine life and truth and event, into contact with our life. It does not hold any of its virtues and graces over our heads for our admiration, but makes them our meat and drink, puts them into our heart so deeply and vitally that they emerge in our personal character and conduct.

So, the resurrection of Jesus, like His birth and crucifixion, is presented as a fact, visible on the level of everyday life and sinking down into the soul of that life and becoming its great motive and inspiration. All this is felt as we read the story of the event.

The women are seen in the dark of the early morning as they walk through the streets of the silent city, whispering their thoughts, carrying the spices to the tomb of their Lord. They reach the garden. The tomb is empty. The report of this is carried back into the city. Peter and John hurry off to verify the news of the empty grave. They grow so eager that at length they run, and John outruns Peter. And Peter, coming up, goes down into the sepulchre, and gives in detail what he sees: "The linen clothes . . . and the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself." The whole account is circumstantial. There were several personal appearances during the morning and the day. Among them, that one of the afternoon when He slipped unrecognized into the company and the conversation of the two walking on the road to Emmaus.

So the divine event wove itself into the experiences of these men and women in all their thinking and their doing until it ever after was part of their life, as really as any other event would be, although far more vitally because of its character. That was the way the fact got into the life of the first disciples and changed their fear and grief into courage and joy and became the "master light of all their seeing," and made them strong enough for all suffering and for death itself.

And in no other way can the resurrection exercise its power over disciples of any age, not by conjecture or argument or probability, but as a supernatural fact that has won our utmost belief and has vitalized all our common life with its reality and significance until it has given us a courage and motive and confident hope that will enable us to go anywhere, to perform any duty and to face any peril.

For the resurrection, like all the virtues and graces of religion and like death itself, lies right in the path of our human destiny, as much a part of that destiny and as real a phase of our common life as the round of the day's work or any other experience.

Faith in it, therefore, becomes a great aid to living earnestly, nobly and bravely. There is a beautiful account of the death of Donald Hankey, the author of "The Student in Arms," by Corporal Grim, who went over the top with him in the action in which he was killed. That was at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Ten minutes before, as they stood in the trenches, Lieutenant Donald Hankey asked his platoon to let him give them a prayer. The corporal says, "I remember him saying, 'If you are wounded, it is Blighty; if killed, the resurrection.'" It filled them all with courage to meet any event. Ten minutes later the lieutenant and half the platoon were dead. Home, battle, resurrection are facts of the same character, and on the same level. Great facts are the greatest things in life. They cheer, ennoble, transfigure.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Road to Emmaus.

As they were hastening from Jerusalem
There came a Man whose footfall gave no sound

Nor left a trace upon the dusty ground,
And He made plain all mysteries to them:
The prophet line that led to Bethlehem
Aflame with vision, and the Love unbound
In that still dawn when life immortal crowned

The lonely death upon the dark Tree-stem.

The little town was reached at eventide,
And as He sat and blessed the food, there seemed

A light upon them, though the day was dead;

They knew then Who had journeyed by their side

Only to lose Him—and each thought he dreamed:

But on the table lay the broken bread.

Holy Trinity Orphanage.

R. Ishii.

(Mr. Ishii, a faithful communicant of this Church, after years of care for an orphanage he established for girls in Tokyo, and also work as a teacher, is now caring for a number of imbecile children he has gathered, to train and teach as far as possible. While on a visit to this country some years ago he made many friends. Some of these will be glad to hear of him directly since the earthquake. Extracts from two letters recently received are given here. In the Sugamo district of the city his work escaped annihilation.)

"Of course we had our share of the general terror and the damage and suffering which overtook all the inhabitants of the city and its neighborhood. Fortunately, our roof being slate, not tiles, the damage in this vulnerable part was slight, but the plaster crumbled down everywhere, a godown was overthrown, and a considerable portion of the brick fence fronting the road fell down. The last caused a good deal of trouble, for some of the frightened imbecile children became uncontrollable, and we had tremendous difficulty to keep them from running away. However, none were killed or wounded, and we were thankful.

"Saved in this manner, we wanted to help some of our fellow-citizens in the city who suffered the great losses which you read about. And there was St. Margaret's School completely reduced to ashes, a school always so dear to me, and in which I taught so many years. This noble Christian school was looking for a building to house its three hundred and fifty pupils (the original 600 reduced to that number), but not even a shanty could be found, and they were helpless.

"Why couldn't we put more of our own children into some of the rooms," we asked, "and let the suffering school have the use of the vacated parts of our buildings?" We found this could be managed with comparatively little trouble, and at once made the offer to the school. The Bishop as well as the school authorities were very glad to accept our offer. The school came over and opened its fall session on October 16. So our ground is now quite lively with the bustle of our three hundred girls. A majority of them have gone through the recent awful trials, and seem to be happy to come back to their school work after a forced long vacation. About fifty of them stay with us as boarders. Almost all these girls have some sad story to tell. Some have lost their parents, some their brothers or sisters, and all of them in a single night have become homeless and possessionless people in this wide world. God works in a mysterious way, and we may not understand His purpose, but time will show that all is well.

We are happy to feel that in this way we can share more of the great suffering of the Tokyo people, and we are doing something to alleviate its acuteness.

Our plan for raising a fund for building a hospital, so indispensable for the efficiency and support of our own work, had to be given up. For some years to come we shall have to do our work under many handicaps and difficulties. It seems that this is always the fate of such kind of work under circumstances like ours.

We are all deeply grateful for the generous and prompt relief activities of the American Government and people. You don't know how they helped us. St. Margaret's School itself is using the tents, the army cots and blankets of America."

"Your very kind letter of ——— has been read with much appreciation. The postal money order arrived by the last mail. I do not know how to thank you for this very thoughtful kindness. It will be sure to be used in the most worthy manner possible.

I am glad you heard Bishop Reifsnider's experiences. Oh, it was such a bitter experience for us all. But I sincerely hope that what to our finite minds seems loss may prove spiritual gain, and that the character of many thousands of people will have been purified through suffering."

The Grace of Gratitude.

Gratitude comes very near to being the crowning emotion of the soul, and he who has learned the habit of it has learned the way to the greatest fullness and rapture of life. The grateful soul may not be the one to whom life has dealt most bountifully and beneficently, but it is all one as if it were, for the fullness of the heart makes up for any lack. He who has gratitude is as if he had the best that a thousand worlds had to offer, for his gratefulness multiplies and magnifies his blessings a million-fold; while he who has not gratitude is poor and miserable and unhappy with a universe at his feet. It isn't what we have, but how we appreciate what we have, that makes life either full or empty, either joyous or futile. There isn't a life that has ever been lived that hasn't felt rich and full and abounding in the hour of some fine gratitude, and there never was a man so poor and bereft that his soul didn't seem crowned with blessings when he looked up into the face of God and tried to express his thankfulness.

The joy and richness that come through gratefulness are no mocking, make-believe things at all; they are among the most real and abiding possessions of life. And just as we learn that great lesson of gratitude, and yield ourselves to the throbbing of that finest emotion of the soul, will life take on a steadfast joy and glory and fullness. Gratefulness is always the doorway into real happiness.—Selected.

A common fault with most of us when we pray in our readiness to yield to distractions. Our thoughts go roving hither and thither, and we make little progress towards our desired end. But what should we think of petitions if while having audience with a prince he should be playing with a feather, or catching a fly?—C. H. Spurgeon.

Easter Lilies.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Greenly white, the soft buds swell,
Shedding their fragrance, newly born,
Waiting their immortal tale to tell,
Waiting for the Easter morn.

A message of faithful trust they bring,
Glad tidings for those who mourn,
As they burst open at breath of spring,
Waiting for the Easter morn.

Within their snowy depths they hold
From earthly evils shorn,
A gift from God, a wealth untold,
Waiting for the Easter morn.

And then in sprays of beauty,
God's altar they adorn,
The crowning hour of creature's duty,
Lo! it is the Easter morn.

The Twin Easter Bonnets.

It happened, once upon a time, that two little girls were born in the same city, on the same sunbeamy April day. And it also happened that both these little girls were named Helen.

Of course, they didn't know each other at all. So neither one knew that she had a Twin. And if you'd seen them, you'd never have dreamed that they were Twins. One was just about as tall as the other. But Helen North was slimmer. And she had the bluest eyes you ever saw and the yellowest hair. And Helen West was plump and dark-eyed and dark-haired. Helen North was brought up in a blue-and-white nursery and always wore blue to match her eyes. And Helen West's nursery was rose-colored, and she wore pink to match her cheeks.

When the Helens were six years old, their birthday and Easter came on the very same day. A few days before, Helen North's mother and Helen West's mother went to the same big crowded department store to buy birthday gifts for their Helens.

Helen North's mother, nibbling sandwiches in the restaurant, decided on a bonnet for her Helen. And at almost the same minute, Helen West's mother, looking at dolls in the toy department, said to herself, "I believe I'll get a bonnet for Helen."

So to the crowded millinery department came Helen West's mother.

She picked out the dearest little round hat for her Helen, all rosy shimmering silk with pink rosebuds around the crown and dainty rose-colored ties. And Helen North's mother, a few minutes later, picked out for her Helen the same kind of a little round hat with ties, only instead of rose-colored, it was blossom blue, trimmed with forget-me-nots. Both bonnets were boxed and addressed to be sent on Saturday morning.

Just here, into the story comes Jimmie, red-haired and freckled.

Jimmie was one of the little boys who sometimes, during rush seasons, helped deliver packages from the big department store. Saturday noon, he was given two big boxes from the millinery department and told to deliver each at the address written on it. One was for Miss Helen North, 126 West Street. The other was for Miss Helen West, 621 North Street.

Jimmie was whistling and thinking about the white rabbit he wanted to buy some day when he had enough money. But he did his part—that is, he left a big box at each address.

Just after lunch, Mary North opened her box and found the loveliest Easter bonnet—a soft, shimmery, rosebuddy thing.

"Pink?" cried Helen North.

"Pink!" cried Helen's mother, looking over her shoulder.

Just about the same time, Helen West opened her box and found the dearest Easter bonnet, blue as Easter skies and wreathed with forget-me-nots.

"Blue?" cried Helen West.

"Blue!" cried Helen's mother, looking over her shoulder.

Then each mother looked wonderingly at the address on her Helen's box.

"621 West Street," said Helen North's mother. "There is a West street over near the Park. There might be another little Helen on it and she might have been expecting a pink bonnet. I wonder—"

"Oh, Mother," cried Helen North, "do let's go and find out—and maybe she'll have my bonnet!"

Mother laughed a little. But there was no harm in trying—especially as West Street was much nearer than the big department store.

So she and her Helen, wearing her old hat, but carrying all by herself the big box, set out for West Street. And half way there, they met a gay, bright-eyed little woman, with an eager little girl, tugging a big hat-box.

While Helen North's mother was thinking what to say, Helen West cried out:

"Oh, little girl, are you Helen North? And have you my new pink bonnet in your box?"

Of course, the mothers being mothers, had to stop and talk and explain and apologize and wonder, and then find out that they knew some of the very same people in the city, and that they really ought to know each other.

But the two Helens didn't wait for any of these things. They set the boxes down on the curb and opened them and each one screamed with delight when she saw her own bonnet. And long before they had tried them on, they were the best little chums you ever saw. And by the time the old bonnets were put into the hat boxes, they had discovered that they were Twins.

"We must celebrate some way," cried Helen West's mother, when the little girls had told this wonderful fact. "Just think—our little girls Twins."

"And Twin Helens!" cried Helen North's mother. "And tomorrow their birthday! What can we do?"

"Go to the movies," said Helen West. "They're for children today," said Helen West's mother. "Why not?"

So Helen West in the rosebud hat and Helen North in the forget-me-not one and their two mothers, talking happily together, went to the Moving Picture Place.

Just outside, looking at the wonderful pictures of what was to be inside, was a wistful-faced little boy with red hair and freckles.

"Hi, look at the rabbit!" he cried, as the little girls came up.

"I've got a live rabbit," said Helen West, while the mothers went to buy the tickets.

"I'm going to have," said the boy.

"If I can ever earn money enough. I carry packages—and everything. But we eat it up. Mother and I do eat up so much money."

"I wouldn't like money to eat," said Helen North daintily. But Helen West was tugging at her mother's arm.

"He's just as clean, and he's got the loveliest freckles," she cried. "And he wants to go. Say yes, Mother, please, for my birthday present."

So Jimmie went to the moving pictures with the two Helens and their mothers, and saw the wonderful things the white Easter Rabbit did. And afterward he went with the two Helens and had ice-cream and delicious little cakes that just melted in your mouth. And when he went home, he took a bag of cakes and buns to Mother, which Helen North had asked as her birthday present.

"So you needn't eat money tonight," she cried happily.

Neither of the Helens nor the mothers nor Jimmie, himself, knew that he was the very same Jimmie who had made the mistakes in the delivery of the bonnets. If they had, I'm sure every one of them would have said it was about the happiest mistake any little boy ever made.

For that day was only the beginning. If the two Helens had been really truly Twins, they couldn't have had better times than they did all that summer. And the very best times of all were those that had Jimmie in them.—Christian Observer.

Mary's Lullaby.

M. B. Garvin.

As the light shines in the sky,
Mary sings her Lullaby.

"Sweetest babe that e'er was born,
Yet to wear the Crown of Thorn.

Many days of grief Thou'll know,
Many hours of pain below.

Soon forsaken Thou will be,
On the Cross of Calvary.

When Love's sacrifice is paid,
And for Sin atonement made.

Thou wilt join the heavenly throng,
For no tomb will hold Thee long.

Left to Thee the Father's love,
And Thy place in heaven above.

Interceding for our Sin,
Helping us to enter in."

Mildred's Picture.

Most of the time Mildred's pretty little face wears a pleasant smile. But once in a while, when things go very wrong indeed, such a cross scowl comes instead that mother stops her work and, without saying a word to Mildred, goes to a box on the closet shelf and takes out a little picture. Then, still without speaking, she goes to Mildred's side and holds the picture where the little girl cannot help seeing it.

Then—and it never fails to happen—away goes the scowl, and with a merry laugh Mildred says, "O Mother, was I looking like that again?"

Though she has heard the story of the picture many times, Mildred never tires of it, and usually before it is put away she has coaxed her mother to tell it again.

"It was taken when you were not quite two years old," mother begins. "We had gone to the country to visit your Aunt Elsa. She had a new camera and of course wanted to take a picture of her little niece. So she set you down in a nice sunny place on the lawn and, going off a few yards, got the camera all ready. But as she looked up before taking the picture, there you were, crawling up to look at the funny little black box. Of course, she could not take your picture when you were too near, so, telling you to sit still, she moved a little farther off. But when she looked up from her camera this time, there you were creeping toward her. She tried again and again, but you would not stay where she put you.

"Poor Aunt Elsa! It was hot out there in the sun, and she was getting tired. 'This is the last time I shall try it,' she said. She set her camera down, picked you up and carried you back to the place you had been at first. Then, giving you a shake, she said, very sternly, 'You naughty, naughty girl! You stay right here!' As she said the last word she set you down—hard! Then she ran back to the camera, and this time she got your picture. In her hurry she didn't notice the expression on your face, but when the picture was developed, we all had to laugh when we saw that funny scowl, which showed very plainly how you felt at being treated so. But you were soon smiling again, for after the picture was safely taken, Aunt Elsa let you look at the black box, all you wished."

"I'm glad things happened that way, aren't you, Mother?" Mildred generally says when the story is finished, "because that picture is so useful now. I can't help laughing when I see it, and when I laugh, away go all my cross feelings. Wouldn't it be a good thing if every little girl had a picture like that?"—Exchange.

Easter Joy.

Inspire me with Thy Life,
And fill me with its Power,
Else shall I miss the holy joy
Of Easter's sweetest hour.

I needs must empty me of Self,
I needs must yearn for Thee,
Ere Thou canst come to fill my shrine
With Thine immensity.

But Thy Life Thou bidst me live,
And wilt Thyself prepare
The inmost home and heart of me,
That Thou mayest enter there.

Then when in Easter's sweetest hour
I seek Thine Altar-throne,
Thy Resurrection Joy may fill
The life that is Thine own.

The "Wrong Side Up" Day.

"It isn't fair for Dale to go to grandmother's. Why did Aunt Hannah go there, too? And Daddy is away. The day is wrong side up," and Dana Lewis looked across the street at the house of neighborly Aunt Hannah.

All morning as Dana ran errands for her mother, who was ill, she thought of the jolly times Dale and her cousins were having at grandmother's in the country. They would ride ponies after the sheep and cows, and then the delicious Thanksgiving dinner the cousins ate together at a low table when there were small pies and puddings for each once. She could scarcely keep the tears back when she ran to the refrigerator on the back porch for the bread, milk and custard for their lunch.

"Where did these come from?" she cried as she saw the queer orange, yellow, red and green faces grinning at her in rows on the refrigerator.

"Mother, look at this orange doll," and Dana held an orange face, while they laughed at the eyes and nose and mouth cut in the rind. On top of the orange was a frilly orange-paper hat, while around the lower part was a skirt. Then she brought to her mother a pear doll with a face in the large part of the pear. And it had a lettuce-leaf hat and skirt! The peach doll had pink cheeks and hat and skirt, while a large red plum-and-apple doll had green-and-white paper hats and skirts.

Then another jolly thing happened. For when Dana reached for the cantaloupe doll with its cornhusk hat and skirt, she lifted the lid of the box on which the fruit faces had been placed on the refrigerator and shouted:

"Mother there are food faces every place." And lifting the napkin in the box, Mother Lewis and Dana saw round bread-and-butter sandwiches with bits of cranberry jelly for eyes on top of each sandwich, with strips of pimentoes for nose and mouth. How they laughed when Dana lifted a cooked-chicken leg with olives stuck in for eyes and with celery strips for nose and mouth.

"Look at pickle doll with a red hat," she said.

For pickles had a slice of a beet for a hat which was stuck through with a toothpick on one end of a pickle, with faces cut in the pickles.

There were pumpkin pies with eyes of whipped cream and tiny frosted cakes with candy and nuts for eyes.

"I will get your milk, and we will have a fruit-face lunch," Dana cried as she opened the refrigerator door. But she stopped and giggled at the watermelon face grinning at her from inside the refrigerator. For it had a face cut into the rind.

"Where did these come from?" she asked as she showed her mother the melon doll. "I will put this back in the refrigerator now," she said, as she skipped to the back porch, when, what do you think she found? On top of the refrigerator and smiling at her was a huge bowl of ice cream with red cherry eyes and dates for nose and mouth.

"I thought I heard the door close," she cried, as she looked out and saw Enid Hull skipping across the yard.

"Please stay and eat this lunch with us. I'll call your mother. Did you bring all these and when?" Dana asked.

Enid explained that Aunt Hannah had prepared and brought over all the funny lunch faces and had placed them on and in the refrigerator. But she had asked Enid to bring over the ice cream at lunch time, after Aunt Hannah had gone to grandmother's. Enid's papa tended to Aunt Hannah's furnace and yard.

What a jolly time the girls had finding names for the faces as they ate them.

"Polly Pear was sweet, but Charley Chicken was the best," Enid declared while Dana said that the day had turned "right side up."—Presbyterian Banner.

The Biggest Orange.

Herbert was hungry, and the big bowl of golden oranges upon the table in front of him seemed to invite him to take one. Not that Herbert would have, of course, but he walked over just to smell of them. He knew they came from Peter's uncle's ranch in California.

"Get away from there!" called a sharp voice.

Herbert started and looked around. No one was in sight, but he scampered back to his seat to wait until Peter came down. Peter would offer him an orange.

The one upon the top was the largest and the brightest, the smoothest and shiniest orange that Herbert had ever seen.

Then Peter came running into the room. "Mother said you were here," he said. "I was training my dog in the yard. Did you hear me?"

"Did you say, 'Get away from there'?" asked Herbert, turning red and commencing to laugh.

Peter nodded but looked puzzled. Then he saw the oranges. "Have one?" he invited.

He walked toward the table so that his back was between the bowl and Herbert. When he held it out to the other boy, the biggest orange was gone from the top.

On the way to school Herbert kept wondering about that biggest orange. Of course he would not have taken it himself, but he could not help but wonder where it had gone. Then he saw that Peter's pocket bulged out. Peter had taken the biggest orange himself. Peter was a pig.

When they were in school, Kurt Malcomb came in late and brought the teacher a red apple. Herbert looked at Peter. Perhaps the biggest orange was for Miss Thurston, too. But Peter did not come forward.

When recess came, Herbert ran over to his friend. Maybe Peter was going to share the fruit with him; perhaps that was why he had taken the biggest one.

But Peter did not seem to want his friend around. When he turned to speak to another boy, Peter hurried off just as fast as he could go. Herbert decided he had gone out behind the wood pile to eat the big orange all by himself.

"Peter is a pig!" said he, and ran to the farther side of the school ground to play ball.

Soon after, Jack caught at his sleeve. "Oh, Herbert," said he, "there's the biggest orange I ever saw on your desk. Why didn't you bring it out?"

Herbert brightened. So Peter had meant the orange for him after all; or perhaps he was ashamed. He ran into the school house as fast as he could, but there was no orange on his desk. Jack had been mistaken.

"I hope I don't have to walk home with Peter," thought Herbert after school. "I'll pretend to go and get a drink, and he will think I have gone and start on."

Peter was not in sight when he came back; so Herbert went to the closet for his hat and coat and the gay cretonne bag that held his books. There was something in the bag, something round and big. Herbert took it out. It was the orange, shiny orange! But it did not feel like an ordinary orange; it was queer and tinny.

Herbert ran out to the gate as fast as he could. Peter was lingering down the street, and he smiled when he saw the orange.

"It's a trick orange," he said. "Uncle sent it in a box with the others to fool me. I'll show you how to open it."

It was filled with candy, Herbert's favorite kind. Peter laughed. "I was afraid you would touch it this morning," he said. "I wanted to surprise you. I went across to the store at recess to get the candy. I put it on your desk, and then I decided to take it outside. I couldn't find you; so I hid it in your bag. How do you like my surprise, Herbert?"

"I think," said Herbert, and his friend wondered why his face was red, "I think it is the finest surprise I ever had."—Dewdrops.

An Ill Wind.

"I don't see why grandmother says that 'it is an ill wind that blows no good'," exclaimed Harold crossly, as he jerked his gray and white cap down over his eyes. "I'm sure this wind is no good."

The wind, as if making fun of him, twitched at his cap again and nearly snatched it from his head. Harold scowled.

"Horrid old wind!" he cried.

The wind had hurled the sharp edge of an autumn leaf into his eye. As he raised his hand to his face, the wind snatched the gray and white cap, whirled it high in the air, and then neatly lifted it over a stone fence.

Harold raised his head just in time to see the cap sail away, and cried out angrily. Now he would have to go in the yard and get it! He forgot the stinging pain in his eye. Harold was bashful and he didn't know the people that lived in that white house.

Harold sighed as he struggled with the gate. It seemed as if even gates were unfriendly in the city where he didn't know any one, and where it seemed so hard to get acquainted.

At last the gate was open, but the cap, which he expected to find just inside the gate, was caught in a small evergreen tree in the center of a flower bed surrounded with a low fence of wire. Harold did not like to climb it without permission.

He rang the bell and after a very long time some one opened the door.

"M-m-mmy c-c-c—" Harold stammered, his face growing red.

The lady in the door glanced at him over her glasses. "Dear me! That must be some new kind of language!" she said. "Wait a moment until I call my nephew; perhaps he will understand." She beckoned to Harold to follow her.

Harold was more embarrassed than ever within the house, but he was trying his best to make himself understood. "I-I j-j-just w-wanted—" he began.

Then there was a wild shout, and a boy his own size came dashing through the doorway. "Harold Norton! Whoop-pee!" a voice shrieked.

"Bobby Deane!" Harold shouted back, forgetting to stutter.

"This is my aunt's house!" Bobby cried, jumping around. "How did you know I was here? I was just telling Aunt Martha that there was a boy in this city that I knew, but I didn't know where he lived!"

It was an hour before Harold went through the gate again, this time with his old-time friend's arm around his shoulders. The wind tugged at his cap.

"Isn't this old wind horrid?" laughed Bobby.

"Not much!" Harold said. "I guess this isn't an ill wind, after all."—Little Learners.

Three Easter Eggs.

Kate Goldsboro McDowell.

Johnnie and Bettie screamed with delight, for there in Chick-a-dee's nest were three large, fresh, white eggs.

"How fine! Just laid for Easter," said Johnnie. "We'll take 'em right away to mother and ask her to dye 'em."

"Let's have one pink, one blue, and one violet, and Johnnie, you take the pink," proposed Bettie.

"No, 'cause I don't like pink. I'll have the violet, and you can have the pink one yourself."

"I won't. I like blue, that'll be mine; and whose will the pink one be?" asked Bettie.

"Why, we can cut it in half and each have a part of it," answered Johnnie.

"Whoever heard of such a thing? Nobody but a greedy boy would think of that. What good will it do? We'll have to eat it right away, so it won't be an Easter egg at all," and Bettie looked vexed.

Then in a moment she said:

"I'll tell you what, Johnnie, let's take the pink egg across the street to Mary Smith, the little blind girl."

Johnnie's lip curled with scorn:

"Why, Bettie, that would be foolish. Mary can't see it, can she? Do you think she can feel the color?"

"No, but it will please her just to know that we thought of her,—let's do it, Johnnie!"

"No, I won't, and that's flat. I'm going to eat my part of the pink egg and keep my other one to look at 'till after Easter."

Bettie's face got red, and, tossing her head, she walked away from Johnnie as she said: "You're just a selfish boy!"

That was the morning of Easter Even. In the afternoon the eggs were colored, violet, blue and pink. Johnnie went out, and, after he saw pretty Easter flowers everywhere and heard the church organ playing sweet Easter music, he went in and said to Bettie:

"Bettie, about that pink egg—I don't care. Let's take it to blind Mary Smith, 'stead of cuttin' it in two. If she can't see it, we can tell her the color, and she will know it's an Easter egg."

Bettie cried out: "Oh, I'm so glad! You're the nicest boy I know, Johnnie, even if you did say I'm foolish."

Then hand in hand they went across the street and gave Mary the egg. A look of joy came into her face and she softly rubbed her hand over the egg and smiled as she thanked them. If they had kept the egg themselves, do you think they would have felt as happy as they did that Easter?

Kettle Talk.

"I don't feel well," the kettle sighed. The pot responded, "Eh! Then doubtless that's a reason, ma'am, You do not sing today."

"But what's amiss?" the kettle sobbed: "Why, sir, you're surely blind, Or you'd have noticed that the cook is shockingly unkind."

"I watched her make a cake just now— If I'd a pair of legs I'd run away—O, dear, O dear! How she did beat the eggs."

"Nor was that all, remember, please— 'Tis truth I tell to you— For with my own eyes I saw Her stone the raisins, too!"

"And afterwards—a dreadful sight— I felt inclined to scream— The cruel creature took a fork And soundly whipped the cream!"

"Now can you wonder that my nerves Have rather given away? Although I'm at the boiling point, I cannot sing today."—Author Unknown.

MEMORIAL

Of the Ministerial Union of Richmond to Its President, the Late Rev. H. J. Williams.

The Ministerial Union of Richmond has learned with mingled feelings of sorrow and rejoicing of the death of its President, the late REV. H. J. WILLIAMS, pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church of this city, and desires to place on record an expression of its high appreciation of his worth and usefulness as a minister of Christ.

We bear testimony to his character as a Christian man, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," one who loved his Saviour in sincerity and in truth; to his loyal and self-sacrificing labors in the pastoral office, "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," and ministering tenderly to the needs of his people, graciously sharing their joys and their sorrows; and to his generous-hearted cooperation with his brethren in the Lord in all of the great enterprises in which the Church is engaged.

For many years Brother Williams has been an active and highly esteemed member of the Ministerial Union, ready to accept and efficiently perform to the best of his ability any task assigned to him by his brethren; and at the time of his death was, as President, filling, with eminent satisfaction to all, the highest office in the gift of the organization. The Union has no member more beloved and trusted for his unfeigned faith and untiring devotion to the cause of Christ.

His presence will be sadly missed by us; but we rejoice in the assurance that he has departed "to be with Christ, which is far better."

Resolved. That the bereaved wife and children and other relatives, and the people of his church, to whom he had endeared himself by many years of faithful service, be assured of the loving sympathy and prayers of the Ministerial Union.

Resolved, further. That copies of this memorial be sent to his family, to the Third Presbyterian Church, and to the religious and daily newspapers of this city.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D. Bishop.

The Beginning of a Promising Mission.

A Churchwoman teaching the village school and three winter residents, who are Church people, met this past winter at Caxambas, a village of about one hundred souls on the western coast of Florida, situated on the Island of Marco, unique among the Ten Thousand Islands for its ridge of hills seventy-five feet high, overlooking the Gulf of Mexico, which is only a mile away, and the fascinating mangrove islands of this group.

These people are sixty miles from the nearest priest of the Church as well as from the railroad, and forty-five miles from the nearest church building of any kind. So these Church people, with the approval and consent of the Rev. F. A. Shore, rector of St. Luke's Church, Fort Myers, planned to have Evening Prayer on Sundays in the schoolhouse and to invite the neighbors. The first of these services was held on February 17, with about fourteen people present, only three of whom had probably ever been present at a Prayer Book service before. There were three Prayer Books and five Hymnals of various editions available.

The teacher has appealed to the Missions House and has received a gift from the Prayer Book Society of twelve Prayer Books and twelve Hymnals, for which the children express great appreciation, trying eagerly to find the places and asking the price of one, and one woman borrowed a Prayer Book and Hymnal to take home. The teacher, being also a musician, had taught the school children some of the Church hymns. The Church music appealed greatly to the children and they were willing to practice once a week after school, where they learned more hymns, the evening canticles, and then the responses to the Commandments and the Gloria in Excelsis, so that when Mr. Shore made his visit on March 20 there were two churchly beautiful and helpful acts of worship offered. This service of Evening Prayer will be continued until May 1, when school closes, as the winter residents leave April 10. There has been an average attendance of fourteen at these services, and at the week-day evening service at the time of Rev. Mr. Shore's visit the congregation numbered forty-eight; at the Holy Communion the next morning, also a week day, there were fourteen present.

It is hoped that this is the beginning of the erection of a new Episcopal Church at or near Caxambas, Fla., the lot on which it is to be built having already been given by Mr. John Johnson, of Boston, Mass.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. H. B. Heald.

The parish, the city, and the diocese have met with a great loss in the rather sudden death of the Rev. Harry Briggs Heald, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburgh, which took place on Thursday morning, April 17, after a five days' illness with pneumonia.

Mr. Heald was born in Moravia, New York, on September 12, 1879. He attended St. Stephen's College, Annandale, and graduated in 1902 from John Hopkins University, and in 1907 from the General Theological Seminary. Mr. Heald served at St. John's Church, Minneapolis, Minn.; St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill.; St. Augustine's Church, Willmette, Ill., and at Port Chester, New York. For the last three years he has been at St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburgh. Funeral services were held in the church at two o'clock on Saturday afternoon, by the Bishop of the Diocese, and a large number of the clergy were present. The body was later taken to Port Chester, New York, and interment was on Easter Monday in Kensico Cemetery, New York. Mr. Heald is survived by a wife and two young daughters.

Mrs. Anna May Krantz, wife of the Rev. George F. Krantz of St. Timothy's Church, McKees Rocks, entered into rest on April 16, and was buried from Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, on Good Friday afternoon.

There was a wonderful attendance at the services of Holy Week, at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh. Bishop Mann made the addresses for the first four days, to congregations that filled the church. On Good Friday the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer, D. D., conducted the three hours' service, at which there were present 3,323 persons. In the evening eight hundred attended the singing of Stainer's "Crucifixion," by the large vested choir. J. C.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Grace Church, Honesdale, the Rev. Glen B. Walter, rector, is building a large auditorium to their present parish house. The "house" was a dwelling converted into a parish house, but they could not get a sufficiently large assembly room for their Church School and parish entertainments. They hope to have it completed by the time the Bishop makes his annual visit for Confirmation—the first Sunday in June.

St. Elizabeth's, Allentown, is moving forward rapidly since they are in their new church and under the direction of Mr. Arthur Wood, one of the postulants of Leonard Hall. By far the largest congregation was present on Easter Day, and the largest number communicated than in the whole past history of the mission.

Just recently they have received some very acceptable gifts, and the mission is now well equipped. The next need will be a rectory and a rector. It is growing too fast and getting too big to be handled by the Leonard Hall postulants.

Good Reports: From every part of the Diocese reports are coming to the office that the Easter congregations and communicants set a new high water mark. Why shouldn't they be good—these reports, the world is growing better notwithstanding all theological quibblings and greasy investigations.

Archdeacon Presented With Sedan: The Bishop and Executive Council presented the Archdeacon with a Dodge Sedan car on his recent birthday, April 1. This sounds like an April 1 joke, but if one could see him try to manage it in heavy traffic, after having been used to a simple Ford, one would realize that it is no joke at all, but very serious business. He is getting the neck and will soon be more comfortable in it than his old "Henry," which carried him all over the diocese.

Personal Notes

The Rev. F. H. Harding, of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, has resigned his parish of Grace, Camden, and has taken charge of St. Stephen's Parish, Milledgeville, Georgia, Diocese of Atlanta, with especial oversight of the work done by the Diocese among the students of the State educational institutions. As Mr. Harding was the Secretary of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, in addition to his rectorship at Camden, this office has had to be filled by the Bishop's appointment and the Church is hereby notified that all mail for the Secretary of the Diocese should henceforth be sent to the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, of Chester, S. C.

The Rev. B. D. Chambers returned to his parish in Clarke County, Virginia, in time for Palm Sunday services, having been absent since the latter part of January on a trip to the Holy Land and Egypt.

The Rev. Joseph H. Harvey, who has been assistant in the Episcopal Missions to City Institutions, St. Louis, Mo., and Missionary, 1920-24, has accepted a call to St. Peter's Church, Talladega, Ala., and expects to be in residence by June.

The Rev. A. R. Price, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Greenwood, has resigned his charge and has taken the rectorship of St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, Kentucky, Diocese of Lexington.

The Rev. W. L. Kinsolving, who had charge of the summer services at St. George's Church, New York, for two years, is now in Warrenton, Va.

The Rev. D. J. Williams, missionary-in-charge Grace Church, Buena Vista, Colorado, and Chaplain Colorado State Reformatory, has resigned to take charge of St. Andrew's Church, Roswell, New Mexico.

The Rev. Malcolm W. Lockhart, rector of St. John's Church, Fort Smith, Ark., has accepted a call to be rector of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, La.

The Rev. George A. Stams, formerly of St. Paul's Church, Mason, Tenn., has accepted a call to the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Chattanooga, Tenn., and St. Paul's on the Mountain, Sewanee, Tenn., with address at Box 531, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Rev. David R. Covell, rector of Trinity Diocesan Church, Washington, D. C., has accepted a call to be Executive Secretary for Religious Education and Social Service for the Diocese of Los Angeles, effective after June.

The Rev. J. F. McCloud, of St. James' Church, Macon, Ga., has accepted a call to be assistant rector of Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn., and will enter upon his new duties about May 15.

ORDINATIONS.

In St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas, on Monday of Holy Week, the Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Capers ordained to the diaconate the Rev. Sylvester Parker Robertson. The sermon was preached by the Rev. George Belsey of Boerne. The candidate was presented by the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, rector of St. Mark's. Mr. Robertson was confirmed in St. Mark's Church in September, 1923. His seminary work was done at Boston University. He served in the Congregational ministry for eleven years and came to San Antonio from Haverhill, Mass. After his confirmation he served as lay assistant to the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, and will serve as his curate. During his short stay he has greatly endeared himself to the people of St. Mark's.

On Sunday, April 6, in Calvary Church, Montgomery, West Virginia, the Rev. Robert Audley Brayshaw was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese. The sermon was preached and the candidate presented by the Rev. Howard Paul Pullin, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Beckley, West Virginia. The church was filled with members of Calvary Church, and many friends and parishioners of Mr. Brayshaw in other places. Mr. Brayshaw is in charge of the churches in Montgomery, Ansted and Hansford, where he has done excellent work for a year.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Norman Inwood, a retired priest of the Diocese of Long Island, died at Sierra Madre, Calif., Saturday, March 29, after a long and trying illness. Services were held in the Church of the Ascension, Sierra Madre, by his friend of Seminary days, the Rev. V.

D. Ruggles, and the Burial Office was said by the rector of the parish, the Rev. W. M. Shaw.

Back-Door Chances.

Mrs. Willard listened eagerly to Margie Horton, although her hands mechanically poured the milk over Junior's cereal, snatched the sugar bowl from baby's clutches and buttered the toast exactly to Mr. Willard's liking.

"Margie Horton, I envy you your Americanization classes," she declared; "think of all the good you do to those Polish girls, for instance."

"Milkman, mumsey," said Junior briefly.

Margie Horton smiled as Mrs. Willard scamped across the dining-room and pattered out into the hall. Then her smile faded as her sharp ears caught a scrap of the conversation.

"Do you talk Italian to your milkman?" she demanded as her little hostess reappeared.

"It does please him so," apologized Mrs. Willard. "I picked up a little Italian when I was in Naples the year I went abroad with Aunt Susan. The old cobbler near the station discovered I knew a little of his language first and he made such a fuss over it that I always talk to any of the Italian people I meet."

Before Margie Horton had time to make any comment the grocer clerk appeared. He was a handsome young French Canadian and took Mrs. Willard's order in an alert, intelligent fashion. As he rose to go he remarked pleasantly, "The leetle boy is better. My wife do what you say."

"Oh, I made such a pretty cap for baby yesterday," said Mrs. Willard, "and I made a pattern for Mrs. Dupois. This is the way it goes. Fold on this edge, do you understand?"

Margie Horton watched the eager young face as it bent over Baby Willard's fleecy cap and compared it carefully with the pattern.

"I understand," said the young man gratefully, "it will keep Victor's ears warm. Thank you." He smiled at both women as he went out.

"I like that boy," said Mrs. Willard; "don't let me forget to show you Victor's picture. He's adorable."

"Eleanor Willard," demanded Margie Horton, "how many other Americanization classes do you hold?"

Jack Willard paused at the door. "She gives our big Swede iceman our church paper; the little Russian Jew who buys our junk borrows our books and as black Rosa's baby is a month younger than ours she—"

"Jack, will you stop?" cried Mrs. Willard; "don't you understand that the only way I can meet our new Americans is by means of my back-door acquaintance? And that's such a drop in the bucket!"

"But that's the natural friendly way," said Margie Horton, her tired dark eyes suddenly radiant; "when we all do that, we'll all be better Americans."

"You're the most encouraging person," Mrs. Willard said gratefully. "Excuse me a minute, Margie. Junior, Junior, don't forget this is the day when you leave your magazines out for Joe Dombrowski. He'll be disappointed if you don't hurry."—Mary Davis.

If there is one thing more than another of a practical kind which we as Christian men and women need to learn, it is this, that devotion to God which can adorn and sanctify the hardest drudgery of life is not only a more difficult but a far more honorable thing than that which flares out only upon high occasions.—George H. Knight.

A PERSONAL MESSAGE FROM THE EDITOR

Today the "we" and "our" and other large vaguenesses of editorial expression shall be for a moment laid aside, because I want to speak in person, and—as it were—face to face with the Southern Churchman readers. Many of you are my friends whom individually I know; many others of you in the wide family who love the old paper I do not know; but I have a bond with you, nevertheless, because we have been thinking together through these recent years of many subjects which concern the Church's life. I want to tell you, therefore, in this direct fashion of a communication which I recently sent to the Board of Directors of the paper. Under date of April 14, I wrote:

April 14, 1924.

To the Board of Directors of the Southern Churchman.

My Dear Friends:

A month ago I submitted my resignation as Editor of the Southern Churchman at a meeting of the Board.

Your non-acceptance of the resignation, the earnest desire of members of the Board that I continue with the paper, and the affectionate urging also of the staff of the paper and of many of those who are closest to it in interest, have made me desire more than ever to continue my connection with it. I love the Southern Churchman and am proud of its high opportunity for service, and I value with a deepening gratitude the fellowship of those with whom I have worked on its behalf.

I am bound to the paper also by the desire to continue the definite purposes which I have followed in shaping its editorial message. Those who, like yourselves, are familiar with its editorial pages for the past few years, will know that steadily and very definitely the paper has sought to advance certain principles and to maintain very definite causes in the Church.

To begin with, the Southern Churchman had devoted itself wholeheartedly to furthering that great movement of missionary devotion which culminated in the Nation-Wide Campaign. Always it has maintained that there can be no vitality in our Christian life unless it is followed with that missionary fervor which the Nation-Wide Campaign has helped to evoke and in which the Southern dioceses, and particularly the Church in Virginia, has had high privilege of leadership.

The Southern Churchman has tried to interpret also the Social Gospel of the Kingdom of God. It has sought to relate the ideals of Christianity to the practical duties of business and citizenship. Its advocacy of Christian race relationships, its steady condemnation of the masked usurpation of the Ku-Klux Klan, its part in the protest against such industrial principles as the maintenance of the twelve hour day in the steel industry, and other editorials on many subjects of social concern, have all been simply the detailed expressions of the single purpose of interpreting Christianity as the leaven which must enter into all our life.

Above all the paper has been eager to add the full measure of whatever influence it might exert for the forces working toward some constructive international order. It has espoused the World Court and the League of Nations and held up with unremitting emphasis the responsibility of all Christian people, in the strength of the ideals of Jesus, to build such Christian world relationships as shall bring to an end the ancient paganism of war.

Particularly in relation to the Church itself, the Southern Churchman has tried to maintain and set forward that evangelical simplicity which is inwrought into its long tradition. It has sought with fair understanding and with positive conviction to point out the danger to the Church of that extreme sacramentarian and sacerdotal emphasis which under the name of being catholic, would tend, as a matter of fact, to make this Church self-complacent and sectarian. It has championed every movement for understanding with other Christian bodies, not only through such means of discussion as the proposed World Conference of Faith and Order, but through the clear realities of action such as the entrance of this Church into the Federal Council of the Churches.

Finally, the recent theological discussions in the Church have seemed to me to give the Southern Churchman an opportunity to make its particular contribution to a living faith. It has realized that it spoke to a constituency which included people both old and young, both conservative and progressive. It has been conscious that it must not leave out any element which is precious to any group, that it must never touch with anything but reverence the sensitive religious instincts of the older generation, nor yet must it fail to go forward with living approach to help, if it may, the restlessness and disquietude of the new. Steadily through these recent months, both in its editorial and in its news pages, the paper has tried to carry forward that ideal which I expressed on its editorial page almost exactly a year ago, on April 7, 1923:

"So the Southern Churchman will continue to stand for exactly what it has been standing for ever since the present editor has known it. . . It will try to express the simple and vital religion of its evangelical and missionary inheritance. It will exalt Our Lord Jesus Christ as the one perfect Incarnation of the Father, and as Master of all our life. And this it will do in dependence upon the Holy Spirit, who continually can bring new and fresh interpretations to ancient faith; and it will remember and try to make its own, the motto of the old Virginia Seminary, 'Seek the truth; come whence it may; cost what it will'."

I need hardly tell you how deeply reluctant I am even to think of relinquishing the editorship of the paper which has been the symbol to me of such vital interest, and through which I have had such happy fellowship with co-workers of the Board and of the staff. But I cannot escape the realization that I must not indefinitely hold this position. Indeed I have held it longer already than seemed possible when I gave up my residence in the city where the paper is published. I have had to carry the work in conjunction with the great responsibilities of Grace Parish. This, in justice to the Parish and in justice ultimately to the paper also, I must not too long continue to attempt. Therefore I am again laying my resignation before you, and with warm appreciation of the spirit which has made the Board formerly unwilling to accept it, asking that you do accept it now. I shall not specify any definite date for it to take effect, but shall be glad to continue the work of the paper for a short time to come—until the summer if necessary, in order to give the Board opportunity to provide for the future.

The Southern Churchman has behind it a long and honorable record of service for the Church. I am confident that the same ideals which have inspired it and which inspire it now, are those which the Board desires to carry forward. To all that has been right in the religious consciousness of yesterday the paper will seek to add those conceptions of the ever-living truth which today and tomorrow may reveal. For such a future, as for the past, all of us who love the paper will want to cooperate.

Faithfully yours,

W. RUSSELL BOWIE.

The Board, according to my request, has accepted the resignation which I placed in their hands; but they have asked me to continue the editorial direction of the paper until new arrangements can be made; and have asked me also to make occasional contributions in the future. How far I may be able to do this I do not know; but I shall at any rate carry out the Board's request to continue the editorship until a new editor is installed.

Announcement as to whatever new arrangement may be perfected will be made in due time.

Meanwhile, I want to pay my tribute of affectionate admiration to those co-workers to whom is due much of my own great happiness in the work of the paper, and much of the appreciation which the Southern Churchman has won from its friends. The Rev. R. Cary Montague as associate editor, Miss Fenton Williamson as the editor's secretary and the real creator of the make-up of the paper week by week, Mr. John H. Cooke as the business manager and Miss Susan Cooke as his assistant, Mrs. Conrad H. Goodwin in charge of the Family Department, and the Rev. Karl M. Block as special contributor for the page concerning the Young People's Fellowship,—have largely made the paper what it is; and I trust they may be able to "carry on" to make it the still better thing which we trust it is going to be.

Always the Southern Churchman has been signally blessed in the loyalty of its readers. They have given to the paper more than a casual support; they have given to it a pride of affection which one gives only to something rooted in dear traditions. I hope that in the years to come this company of readers will strengthen the paper more and more to bear its continuing witness to that simplicity of religion which has been the heritage of "Virginia Churchmanship" ever since at Jamestown the Church came to the shores of the New World.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Whereas, During his ministry as rector of St. Paul's Church, Dr. Walter Russell Bowie, the present editor of the Southern Churchman, became associated with its staff and has for several years been its editor; and

Whereas, During the period of his association with the editorial staff, and, later, under his entire direction of the editorial policy, the paper has made marked progress in every way, and, through a large and increasing circulation, has been a vital factor in the constructive work of the Church; and

Whereas, Notwithstanding Dr. Bowie's acceptance of the call to become rector of Grace Church, New York, he has been willing and able, upon request of the management of this paper, to continue as editor of the Southern Churchman, without change in its editorial policy, and to the satisfaction of the many friends of the paper who had been most solicitous that Dr. Bowie should do so; and

Whereas, Through his leadership, though from a distant city, he has been able to direct the policy of the paper in accordance with his message and purpose as declared in the editorial of April 7, 1923, that

"The Southern Churchman will continue to stand for exactly what it has been standing for ever since the present editor has known it. It will try to express the simple and vital religion of its evangelical and missionary inheritance. It will exalt Our Lord Jesus Christ as the one perfect Incarnation of the Father, and as Master of all our life. And this it will do in dependence upon the Holy Spirit, Who continually can bring new and fresh interpretations to ancient faith; and will remember, and try to make its own, the motto of the old Virginia Seminary, 'Seek the truth; come whence it may; cost what it will'";

Whereas, Dr. Bowie has tendered his resignation to this Board of Directors; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board accept Dr. Bowie's resignation with regret and with deep and grateful appreciation of the service which he has rendered to the constituency of this paper and to the Church; be it Resolved Further, That in the future conduct of the paper the Board will set before it the same ideals for which it has always stood.

FROM THOSE WHO KNOW

Whereas, The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., has tendered his resignation to the Board of Directors of the Southern Churchman, and

Whereas, That Board has regretfully accepted the same; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Office Staff, that we who know him best through close personal association, do most honestly and sincerely regret the severance of a relationship, which has been both pleasant and inspiring, and that we take this opportunity of expressing to him and to those who know him through the columns of the Southern Churchman, our deep appreciation of his thoughtfulness and constant resourcefulness continually exerted for the progress and benefit of the paper, and wish him abundant success in carrying forward the great work he is now doing in New York.

tion with the publication of the Southern Churchman can appreciate all that Dr. Bowie's management and ability has meant to the success of the paper in recent years.

It was he who originated and edited for some time the "Christianity and Community" page. Soon after his return from overseas he recognized the importance of the growing movement among the young people in the Episcopal Church, and the need for it to have expression. With this end in view he enlisted the services of the Rev. Karl M. Block, who, by his knowledge of this work, has made that page a distinct and important feature of the Southern Churchman.

It was his plan to secure special articles from leading Churchman last year, and this year he suggested asking prominent secular writers to contribute the articles, which our readers have so much enjoyed, from the pens of Messrs. Bradford, King and Cabot, Mrs. Robins and Misses Montague and Bates, which will be followed by others.

We have no doubt that through the loyal support which our subscribers have always given to this publication, and the cooperation of the incoming Editor, the Southern Churchman will continue to render valuable service to the Episcopal Church, and through it to evangelical Christianity in ever-widening circles.

AFTER-THOUGHTS ON HOLY WEEK

By Katharine Lee Bates

Professor of English Literature at Wellesley College.

TO the Divinity of Jesus Christ and to the mystery of that divinity my heart would set no limits, but my mind chooses to dwell on such aspects of His earthly life as I find human in quality though superhuman in degree.

Some twenty-five years ago I was in Seville during Holy Week—the picturesque Semana Santa that hushes the sound of wheels and fills the streets by day and night with strange, gleaming, spirit-like processions. I can see them still—the different Brotherhoods, fantastic figures in their deep capes and high-peaked caps, with holes cut for the eyes, conducting their ancient pasos, heavy platforms, each borne on the shoulders of a score or more panting men beneath concealed by sweeping draperies, each followed by a long retinue of penitents. Upon these litters, of which nearly every Brotherhood displayed two, one carrying a Passion group and one a Madonna, the wooden images, mainly seventeenth century examples of polychrome sculpture, glittered in the costliest raiment, silks and satins, velvets and damasks, laces and cloth of gold, and in ornaments, bought, bequeathed, or lent by dames of high degree to their favorite Virgin for her festival, of the richest and rarest jewels. The changing colors of the processional costumes—the blues, whites, crimsons; the greens, ashens, sables; the violets, ambers, pearls; the silver shields and rainbow plumes of the Roman soldiers in escort; the yellow twinkle of innumerable tapers; the resplendent robes, the precious crosses of tortoise shell and ivory, the gold, gem-studded crowns of the Christs; above all, the scintillating Madonnas, whose platforms, ablaze with candles and with lamps of finest workmanship, were escorted by troops of the Civil Guard in gala uniform and by pealing bands of music, while all along the way acclaiming throngs rose to welcome Our Lady of the Star, Our Lady of the Angels, Our Lady of the Bitterness, Our Lady of the Utter Grief, Our Mother of Healing, Our Lady of Refuge, Our Lady of Victory, Our Most Holy Lady of Hope, Holy Mary of Anguish, Our Lady of Tears, and the rest—all combined in a series of dream pictures, magical, marvelous, immortal in memory.

But what had all that to do with Jesus of the Gospels?

Good Friday is the day when grief reigns throughout Christendom. About it there is an element of convention. In Spain the women wear purple, with knots of black ribbon in lieu of the usual bright flowers, in their hair, or black mantillas if they are on the streets. Even their ever-waving fans are black and often edged with jet. In Greece the devout keep a fast of excessive strictness. In Lutheran churches, as in Catholic, organs are hushed, and altars, fonts, pulpits draped in black.

Why?

Is this universal grief for the bodily suffering of that gentle Galilean who, nearly two thousand years ago, His back and shoulders torn by the scourge, His forehead pricked by the thorns, His hands and feet pierced by the nails, hung for a few tortured hours on the cross? I do not think that Christ Himself is sorry for a pain that is over; that was bravely borne and that has served so great an end; for in so far as the hard heart of mankind has learned the blessed grace of pity, it has learned that grace from gazing on the crucifix. From other suffering and, physically speaking, worse because more protracted suffering, we turn away our eyes. How many tears have we shed for the million and more martyrs of Armenia, eldest and saddest daughter of the family of Christian nations, those million and more martyrs who within this latest human generation have been put to death for their faith, often by unprintable torments?

In saying that the bodily suffering of Christ, which the crucifix, the pictures and sculptures of Christian art, Good Friday services, have insistently pressed on our vision, our imagination, our sympathy, for nineteen hundred years, has made the world more merciful, I do not forget the racks of the Inquisition, nor the ferocities of the Crusades, the fires of Smithfield under Bloody Mary, nor the persecutions of witches and Quakers by the Puritans. But against these I am remembering St. Francis of Assisi, St. Columba of Iona, Florence Nightingale, John Howard, John Woolman, the Brothers of Mercy, the Little Sisters of the Poor, the Red Cross, and all the humble, unselfish multitude of healers and protectors that down the ages have ministered in the name of the Crucified to the suffering of man and beast. I think that Christ is glad to have endured that agony unto death which is slowly—so slowly—making the world more pitiful.

Is our Christian grief, then, for the anguish of His spirit in that He, the generous young Nazarene, eager to pour forth love and blessing on all the world, with a smile that rested on the lilies of the field and followed the birds of the air to their nests, the scamper of the foxes to their holes, He whose tender voice drew little children to His arms and comforted, as He walked the paths of Galilee, as He sat beside the wells of Samaria, the weary faces and the lonely hearts of those whose wonderful chance it was to look into His eyes and speak with Him, He whose divine overflow of loving kindness, whose irresistible faith in the power of soul over flesh opened the eyes of the blind, strengthened the limbs of the lame, till wheresoever He went the sick were laid at His feet and even the lepers clung to Him for cleansing, He whose purity shone on sinful hearts till the stains of vice and wrath and greed faded out and left them white as snow—is it for this we grieve, that He whose life was love died in the midst of hate, smitten, spat upon, derided?

As Christ looked forth, with dimming eyes, from the cross, He saw the city of His yearning: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, * * * how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Standing about the cross, watching His pangs with malicious triumph, He saw the chief priests, the scribes and the elders, those pillars of religion and learning, the most respectable citizens of Jerusalem, and heard their continuous taunt: "He trusted in God; let Him deliver Him now." The passersby on the high-road, hurrying to or from the city, intent on their own affairs, He saw pausing for a moment to enjoy the spectacle of an execution, the execution, for their better relish, of a false prophet, and heard them, too, revile Him, "wagging their heads and saying: 'If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.'" He saw the Roman legionaries lounging on the ground, throwing dice for His garments, blood-stained and torn as those poor garments were. Crucifying felons was all in the day's work for them, yet they may, for very boredom, have joined in the general mockery. Hate all about Him but not within Him. It was not hate that had the victory. Those dying eyes looked out upon that jeering throng with the old love, the old compassion: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

There is no greater miracle than that. Other religions may tell of herald star and broken tomb, but what myth-maker could invent those words?

But once more, does Christendom still grieve, as Christ's bewildered followers, the sick whom He had healed, the hungry whom He had fed, were grieving then, as His scattered disciples were grieving, as even His mother and John the Beloved, His mother's sister and Mary Magdalene, those four whom the courage of their love brought to the foot of the cross, were grieving, for His failure, His defeat? They had thought it would all have been so different. The disciples, impatient and proud, could hardly wait for the entry into Jerusalem; and that waving welcome of the palms, those joyous shouts of Hosanna only six days before, had confirmed their expectation, at times a little dashed by His strange sayings, that all Judaea would hail their Master as the King of Israel.

If we could re-write history, what would it be? Would the Jews have acclaimed Jesus of Nazareth their Messiah, would Syria have glowed with one conquering flame of love to God and man, would the beautiful evangel have sped out into all the world and won the uttermost parts of the earth to the sweet worship of the Prince of Peace? Would we be dwelling today in "that great city, the holy Jerusalem, * * * having the glory of God"? For why might not the shining Zion be builded on this star of ours as well as on another? We have all the materials for heaven here on earth—the golden reed of righteousness to measure the city, the precious stones of beauty, mirth, fellowship, labor, love.

But Time answers like Pilate: "What I have written, I have written." The record of Christianity for nearly two thousand years is before us. Has Christ failed? There are those who claim that He has. They point to the misconceptions of Him by the Church that calls itself His own—that parades the carpenter's son as a royal figure laden with gems and gold, that presents the wandering heretic of Galilee as a bigot of this or that theology, that blasphemes the Lover of all life by cursing and persecuting and slaying in His name. They point to a war-wrecked world, well-nigh in chaos. They remember how four years ago the Pharisees of politics let loose the mob that varies with every wind and hunts on every cry against that apostle of peace who strove to bind the nations of the globe in a league of brotherhood. Their hearts, sick with hope deferred, refuse to pray the still unanswered prayer: "Thy kingdom come."

Did not Christ Himself have His moment of despair, the supreme agony of His holy passion? Was His inspiration, His mission, but an error, a delusion, a phantom of the mind? The giver of the water of life thirsted. The light which lighteth the world was darkened. There came no angel, as in Gethsemane, to strengthen Him. "And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice: * * * 'My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?' * * * and gave up the ghost."

His Kingdom comes, but so slowly, so slowly, winning heart by heart, spreading from soul to soul. Yet surely Christ's kingdom comes. We have learned something of mercy—not much, but something. Criminals are no longer put to death, in Christian countries, by lingering physical tortures but by the swiftest and most nearly painless methods science can devise.

On Good Friday do we commemorate defeat or victory? As I see it, it is triumph. Had there been no Easter, this Son of Man who was the Son of God, lifted up on the cross of agony and shame, of love's last sacrifice, would have drawn all men unto Him. The Penitent Thief was with Him that day in Paradise.

CHRISTIAN BROAD CHURCHMANSHIP

By the Reverend James Sheerin

Part II

IN the endeavor to be thorough there can be no valid objection to starting out with an accepted platform of word and deed. It will be a working basis of breadth, simple and clear enough, but not always pleasing to the man who demands a definite and invariable verbal faith. A little modesty about faith is worth much boasting of steadfastness and certainty. We should remember Cromwell's much quoted plea, "I pray you, gentlemen, by the mercies of Christ, that you imagine that you may be mistaken." Few Churchmen better combine working and thinking than James Adderly, that aristocratic, socialist theologian of England, who has been many times High, occasionally Low and always Broad. He resents what he calls taking the Christian religion as if it were "a solid lump left on earth 1900 years ago." Therein he agrees with Bishop Lawrence's remark, "The faith once delivered to the saints is not a tightly packed parcel, but a living, vigorous body, with soul and spiritual powers." Insisting on development in faith as well as action, Adderly declares: "The cardinal doctrine of Christianity is the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. We are as truly living under His dispensation as the first disciples lived in the presence of the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity. We misunderstand the Spirit as they did the Son." He adds a very pertinent question: "If the Church of England does not stand for liberty to make free inquiry, and if its view of dogmatic authority is exactly the same as that of Rome, what is its special position in Christendom?" He lays down three essential principles, by which the Church may continue to work and prosper:

1. A common love of Christ.
2. A common desire for the furtherance of the Kingdom of God.
3. A common belief in the necessity of individual penitence.

If these are following faithfully, he contends, they will generate the spirit of unity better than any legislative action or formal conference.

Few men have been broader and firmer in faith than the late Bishop Henry Codman Potter. For that reason he was truly Broad. Addressing a Chautauqua audience he declared: "The task of the Church is to translate the mind of Christ, first by sympathy, then by painstaking curiosity. The Church has justly been severely criticised for its lack of interest in the mental, moral, and physical upbuilding of the masses." In this he laid down a broad principle of social service, in obedience to which he himself was a shining example, even though his inheritance and environment tempted in other and pleasanter directions. Men like Adderly and Potter have a firm faith that the Holy Ghost not only did not stop speaking with the death of the last Apostle, but that His voice is no weaker today than it was when the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds were formulated. A Churchmanship that follows such a lead is apt to be generous in several directions, both human and divine; and, being so, is truly broad as well as Christian. Such a Churchmanship would be, for example, fair to both the thinking and the sinning man. The Roman Catholic Church was called by one of our Bishops, "the forgiving Church." He based that complimentary assertion on the pardoning work of the confessional. (It is possible that forgiving is sometimes a less fitting word for this work than excusing. But any man worthy of the description "Christian Broad Churchman" will be so human and Catholic in his sympathies as to share the heartache of a world in its mental vagaries as well as its sins. For this reason he will believe in the Church being comprehensive, that old abused and feared term. Seldom has the fact of comprehension been better stated than in words from the London Spectator quoted in the New York Churchman by and with the approval of Bishop Potter, and strange as it may seem, agreed to by the present Bishop of Vermont, who is ultra orthodox in the High sense:

"In a recent communication to the London Times a correspondent, while agreeing that the life and soul of the Church of England lies in its being comprehensive, wants to know how far comprehension is to extend? That is, on the face of it, a reasonable question; but it is just one of those questions which, if pressed remorsefully home, will ruin the Church. We should answer it by saying that the Church should try to comprehend all zealous, honest and religious men who are sincerely willing to be comprehended, and also willing to see comprehension extended to others. No doubt there must be limits to comprehension. We should not be too curious in our efforts to define them, but should rather be content with the knowledge that, in practice, there is always more danger of the Church being too little than too widely comprehensive. To ask for a rigid statement of what can and what cannot be done and believed in the Church, must end in exclusions. Those who ask so loudly for limits to be placed on comprehension mean that they want their own special doctrines comprehended, but not the doctrines which they dislike. Although we must not set rigid and unyielding limits to comprehension that need not prevent those who believe some of the practices and tenets comprehended to be mischievous from combatting them by spiritual means. Let those who hold that extreme ceremonial and sacerdotal doctrine are injurious fight them by preaching and practicing a better doctrine, not by disciplining their opponents, or by driving them out of their churches. Persecution never yet made converts to the side of the persecutors" (London Spectator, September 24, 1898).

The true Broad Churchman is, then, sympathetic and helpful in man's amusements, his labors, his studies, his spiritual aspirations, his search for truth, his social and moral hopes, etc. There is no vital limit. Nothing that is human is foreign to him. He humbly admits that truth is always beyond him and greater than anything he has discovered. He agrees with George Tyrrell that the "perpetual struggle after the ideal is essential." Like a great philosopher, he is content with the search. "If," said this seeker after truth, "God should appear before me with all knowledge in one hand and the search for knowledge in the other, I should choose the search." The joy of conflict belongs to a man like this. He is content with little because he knows there is so much. The urgent desire is the great thing in philosophy as well as religion. The true Broad Churchman believes that the day is coming when requirements for admission to membership in the Christian Church will return to the simplicity and strength of Him who said, "Seek and ye shall find." The honest seeker will always be welcome, no matter how deficient in exact theology. Heresy trials are an offense to this basic principle. Indeed, heresy-seeking is itself the one great heresy, so contrary is it to the spirit of Him who said to disciples over fond of that way, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Condemn as we will the laissez faire policy in ecclesiastical management, it is at least nearer Christian than the use of violent measures. "Muddling through," said to be the successful way of the English political and social worker, may seem unworthy of the orthodox man who is sure that he knows just what religious truth is, and who would enforce it with legal sternness, but we may justly surmise that it is quite agreeable to Him who said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly." It is even subject to proof that such a policy, in a world of uncertainties, is in the long run far more honorably successful than the pushful disciplinarian process so loved by some and so disturbing to Church growth and peace.

Daniel Webster illustrates this kind of fundamentalism: "The Pilgrims had been great sufferers from intolerance," he contends. "It was not unnatural that their own faith and practice, as a consequence, should become somewhat intolerant. This is the common infirmity of human nature. Man retaliates on man. It is to be hoped, however, that the greater spread of the benignant principles of religion, of the divine charity of Christianity, has, to some extent, improved on the sentiments which prevailed in the world at that time. No doubt the first-comers, as they were called, were attached to their own forms of public worship, and to their own particular and strongly cherished religious opinions, yet a more friendly feeling toward all who profess reverence for God and obedience to His commands, is not inconsistent with the great and fundamental principles of religion. I might rather say, it is itself one of those fundamental principles."

James Adderly deserves another good quotation in this connection. Repeating with approval Bishop Creighton's famous claim, "The Church of England is the Church of the New Learning," he goes on to define it as the Church which welcomes scientific discovery and historical criticism as well as philosophy's suggestion; the Church which frankly confesses that it cannot see everything at once, which allows that it is possible for it to make mistakes, and admits that it falls short of absolute possession of truth.

Now this is what I call a truly Christian Broad Churchmanship, and as such I prefer it to "Broad Churchmanship as is," or a hard and fast Modernism. When Bishop Shipman was up for Suffragan Bishop in New York and some would cast him down in disgrace, I was one of those who did my bit to uphold him, without in the least asking about his ecclesiastical views, of which I knew next to nothing, except that he seemed to be peculiarly gentle and Christian, a virtue not always obtainable in "My Lords, the Bishops." In one of my communications which appeared in the Living Church, I said I was interested in preserving the status quo of the Church. Since then (I am not quite so egotistic as to trace this to my remark!) letters in Church papers have been full of scornful reference to the status quo as something to be abhorred. Yet I am willing to go on record as still believing that the status quo may be, and is frequently, a fine thing in the Christian religion. It is at times just as desirable as normalcy in politics, whether international or domestic. While it does politics, whether international or domestic. While it does not sound idealistic to zealous advocates of progress at all costs, it seemed to be needed politically if the nation was to get its breath for a time before going on to larger and better things than anything we had had since the war began. The same thing is apparently true of the Church at this moment. The Episcopal Church has a very beautiful status quo which we may safely defend in any presence. It is a status wherein there is a union of faith and reason found in like degree in no other Church—wherein there is a liberty less one-sided than Unitarianism, because, for example: it does not have to shut out orthodoxy in the interests of heterodoxy: it may be difficult to do; it is indeed very difficult when one's faith hinges on material facts that can easily be shaken; but what we should do is to rejoice in those very things in the Episcopal Church, which some orthodox critics consider its weakness. It seems to be the only Church in Christendom that frankly declares in its doctrinal and liturgical statements, "I am weak that ye may be strong!" If men find fault with its lack of definiteness, and would add a harsher discipline and plainer statements of disputed points in ritual or dogma, it is because they have failed to appreciate or understand its essential Christian character, by which, in spite of its undoubted faults—possibly because of them—it seems to have become an admirable institutional fulfillment of Our Lord's teaching, that the way to attain one's real life is to be ready and willing to lose the obvious. To be so brotherly as to approach all mankind with a welcome; to be willing to have a part in the religion that is common to man, to be a Church gladly sharing all the better racial inheritances, as well as sympathetic with the aspiring human soul everywhere—this is to be a true Catholic Church, and he who willingly rejoices in it is a true Catholic. He is also a true Broad Churchman!

Church Publicity

By the Rev. Thomas F. Opie.

Publicity is the basis of success in the business world. The Church has lost lamentably by its too conservative view regarding advertising. Using the word in its derived sense, any method that is honest and not too undignified, might well be used to turn the public to the Church—to "ad-vert" the public, as the true meaning of the word has it. Using the word PUBLICITY as an acrostic, we may get some significant thoughts as to Church publicity.

P stands for placards, which should be used freely not only for special occasions, but for the regular announcements of the Church's program. It also stands for publications. Where feasible the church should have at least a small publication of its own, of weekly or monthly appearance. P also stands for personality. While all egotistic personality, on the part of rector or pastor, should be suppressed, all publicity should have character, personality, distinctiveness.

U stands for you! If not orthoepically correct, this is at least euphonic and suggestive. Every man, woman and child in the church should be a publicity agency for the Church of Christ. Indeed he is just that, whether he so intends or not! He is a great "display ad"—advertising what is the nature and effect of the church on his own life. Be careful what "you" stand for!

B stands for bulletin-board, which every church should have. It stands for black-board, which every church should have—and which every church should use. It also stands for budget, which leads me to suggest that every church should put publicity in the annual budget. It is a big item in every big business—why not in the church's business, which is the biggest business in the world? If it gets business for business, why not for the church?

L stands for latitude. The scope and comprehensiveness of church advertising should be as broad as human life and as comprehensive as the wants, the aspirations and the ideals of man. It covers a wide field of worship, entertainment, social diversion, education, uplift, praise, prayer and pardon—all of which have universal appeal and drawing power.

I stands for imagination. Pity the pastor—pity the church officer—pity the Christian of whatever type or standing who has no imagination. Use it in publicity methods and in publicity matter or content. Imagination rules the world, said Napoleon. Surely it rules the advertising world, for no advertising matter with real appeal ever was devised without it!

C stands for cards, which should be used freely, fully, frequently—by mail by hand and bulletin space. It also stands for calendar, an excellent method of church publicity—and for coherency, which every reading or display ad should possess!

I stands for the idealism which every piece of publicity should advance, no less than for the "insipidity" which characterizes so much of the average publicity reference to church services!

T stands for truthfulness, a thing not always adhered to, even by writers of church publicity. The plain truth is more impelling than varnished and embellished falsehood! Stick to the facts and the status quo!

Y stands for you, yourself—especially if you are not a convert to church advertising! Publicity is the church's vital asset. The church stands for publicity—"Publish the glad tidings." The Bible is the greatest publicity agency in the world! It tells the "good news" of God and of Christ—of pardon and of peace! Christ said, "What I tell you in secret, publish ye from the house-tops." The Church must "advertise," if it is to "turn" men to the Saviour and make its message known to mankind generally.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

VACATION ACTIVITIES.

MANY Leagues adjourn for a considerable period of the summer. It is felt to be wiser to discontinue the devotional meetings when enthusiasm still runs high and interest does not begin to lag than to drag on through the summer, when membership is depleted by vacation and few like to go indoors for a meeting of any character. Perhaps it will be helpful to suggest one line of distinctly religious endeavor during the heated months. In those parishes where a lawn or some other suitable space affords an opportunity for an outdoor service, the members of the League can offer to take charge of one service a month, conducting it entirely, and they can assist materially in the other services by attending, by bringing chairs, Prayer Books and Hymnals, singing in the volunteer choir, and doing those things that are usually delegated to the members of the Brotherhood or a few devoted saints to whom the rector always turns in his moments of desperation.

Perhaps the best use of the summer is that which contributes to the fellowship and social life of the League. Picnic parties and suppers in the woods, with a bonfire and group games will go far to develop a social consciousness and to hold a League together during the summer. If the day be not secularized, Sunday evening can be spent in the great out of doors, with a picnic supper and an informal devotional service. Some Leagues have combined service with pleasure and have gone to the institutions in the country, such as the Poor Farm, orphanages, etc., and have taken with them gifts of food or clothing for distribution, and have presented a prepared program for the delight of those who live in these institutions or homes.

The out of doors offers a fine stage for the practice of "stunts" and mass games, and recreation becomes re-creation for the group as well as for the individual.

Requests have come for a suggested Provincial Constitution. That adopted by the Province of Washington follows pretty closely the Constitution of the Province of the Mid-West, and is as follows:

CONSTITUTION OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE LEAGUE OF THE PROVINCE OF WASHINGTON.

Preamble.

We, the young people of the Episcopal Church of the Province of Washington, feeling the great need of association for Prayer, Study, Fellowship and Service to the Church and country, under the authority of and with the consent of the Provincial Synod, do hereby form an organization that shall be an Association of Diocesan Young People's Organizations of the Province.

Article I—Name.

The name of this organization shall be The Young People's Service League of the Province of Washington.

The Treasurer of each Diocesan Organization shall pay to the General Treasurer during the month designated, each year, before the annual meeting of the Executive Council, the required fees, in accordance with this provision. Where there is no Diocesan Organization, each Parochial Organization shall be assessed one dollar for each one hundred members or fractional part thereof.

Article X—Reports.

The chairman of each Standing Committee shall submit a written report at the Central Executive Council meeting held during month designated each year and at such other time or times as he may be called upon by the President. The report of the Executive Council, including the Treasurer's report, when approved by the Advisory Board, shall become the Annual Report of the Young People's Service League to the Province.

Article XI—Amendments.

This Constitution may be amended at any meeting of the Central Executive Council by a four-fifths vote of the members present, provided that a copy of the proposed amendment shall have been sent to each member at least one month before the meeting.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

LAUGH AND STAY YOUNG.

Hon. Chauncey Depew jovially and robustly passed his ninetieth birthday recently. He says in ten years time he may stop playing golf. He also says, "It is a good thing to laugh at yourself." As he has been practicing it very successfully for some ninety years we feel that he is an authority on the subject and is no doubt right.

Nevertheless, we would like to amend his maxim slightly, and change it to "Laugh with yourself." According to some authorities there is a real scientific value in laughing. It produces vibrations that kill or stop the progress of microbes. It also produces an atmosphere that makes life pleasanter for yourself and others. The reason that we suggest laughing with yourself is because its practice is so unusual. Unfortunately it is quite the exceptional thing for persons who think upon laughable incidents with sufficient intensity to laugh at them after they have happened. This is proved by the fact that if you walk down the street alone and laugh out loud, people will turn in astonishment to look after you, as though you were a sort of freak. On the other hand, if you walk with a deep frown it creates no comment.

We have a theory that laughter is an expression of the soul. This may sound fantastic at first, but there is a better reason for it than is apparent on the surface. We claim that we are the only animals endowed with a soul. We are certainly the only animals endowed with audible laughter, therefore, it is not too far-fetched to think that the soul gives itself expression in this way.

Whether this be true or not there can be no doubt that cheerfulness is a quality that can be cultivated through the means of meditating upon cheerful incidents. The person who thinks happily will be happy, whether alone or with companions, and the more we practice this habit of thought the easier and pleasanter it becomes.

We do not need to confine such bright and cheerful meditations merely to ludicrous or light incidents of life. We can carry the practice into our religious life as well, and select the beautiful, happy incidents of Our Saviour's life as food for meditation.

This practice will add immensely to our own joy of living, and to the joy we give to others.

A NEW VARIETY OF HOME MISSIONS.

"Letters are continually being received, telling of the far-reaching influence of the Cathedral services on Sunday afternoons, through the radio. In distant cities and towns, 'shut-ins' living nearby and lonely people back in the mountain districts have testified to the help they have derived from these services, both through the music of the Cathedral choir and the sermons preached there every Sunday afternoon.

A young man, paralyzed and helpless for many years, in the Blue Ridge Mountains near Front Royal, Va., has been supplied with a radio outfit, and, on Sunday afternoons, friends assemble by his bedside to get some account from the invalid boy of the service at the Cathedral. Through the interest of some friends a loud speaker is to be installed in this mountain home so that numbers of the mountaineers may participate in the service."

The foregoing item comes to us from the Washington news, and undoubtedly it offers some suggestive thoughts for spreading Christianity in the community.

Broadcasting of the Cathedral services will do much to familiarize people with the usages of the Episcopal Church. Although the listeners will not be able to see the choir vestments and setting of the church, nevertheless the singing of the chants, the repeating of the prayers, and the reading of the psalter will undoubtedly arouse an interest in the Prayer Book amongst those who listen that would not otherwise be felt, and perhaps will do much to abolish a prejudice among ignorant mountain people against the Church that once existed.

We recall the horrified comment of an old mountaineer who attended service many years ago in St. Thomas' Church, White Sulphur Springs, where they have quite a handsome eagle lectern. The old man went home and said, "Them Episcopalians won't do. They worships a owl."

Of course radio will not familiarize the mountaineers with the eagle lectern, but at least a responsive service will not be such a surprise as it was to the person who once said that the trouble with Episcopalians was that they spent too much time talking back to the preacher.

If rural rectors would find and report the shut-ins in their communities, in many cases steps could be taken by the more wealthy parishes to furnish them with radios, and so to start a new kind of missionary enterprise.

BETTER LET WELL-ENOUGH ALONE.

We publish herewith the following letter from the Department of Missions, because it has a bearing on the general function of this department:

"Southern Churchman, Richmond:

The Department of Missions has just received the following cable from the Council of Advice of the Missionary District of North Tokyo.

"Japan exclusion act detrimental to mission work; cannot too strongly urge upon you the necessity of petitioning the President of the United States to veto the bill."

"This would seem to be a time when Christian citizens having convictions on this subject may properly express them.

JOHN W. WOOD,

"Secretary Department of Missions."

April 26, 1924.

Of course we regret anything that has a detrimental effect upon mission work, at the same time when we already have a pretty big race problem with us, it seems unfortunate not to take the necessary steps to prevent another such question arising in this country. We heartily sympathize with the Japanese who want to come to America, but they themselves have shown that they appreciate the dangers of unlimited immigration, because they have excluded the Chinese. Another curious phase of this question is that Australia and New Zealand absolutely forbid immigration of either Japanese or Chinese, and yet neither of those countries take offense at that attitude on the part of those commonwealths of the British Empire.

We do not believe that it would attain any good end for President Coolidge to veto this bill, because the present temper of Congress, and we are inclined to think, of the country at large, is such that there can be little doubt of its being re-passed over his veto, so that the only thing accomplished would be a further agitation of the question, and prolonged aggravation of ill feeling.

THE GENERAL SYNOD OF THE CHUNG HUA SHENG KUNG HUEI

By the Reverend Edmund J. Lee.

THE Chung Hua Sheng Kung Huei which translated literally means The Chinese Holy Catholic Church, is the Church formed by the union of all the Anglican Missions in China, and includes, of course, the three American Missionary Districts of Shanghai, Anking and Hankow. The governing body of this Church is the General Synod, which, like our own General Convention, meets once in three years. The fifth of these General Synods has just been held, March 17 to 22, in the city of Canton.

Political conditions in South China are unsettled in the extreme. For several years the province of which Canton is the capital, has been in a state of civil war. In addition, the country districts are infested with bandits, while thousands of pirates lurk in the islands off the coast and the inland waterways. It was with some misgivings, therefore, that the delegates from the north went south. And we found, too, on arrival, much to suggest both war and bandits. On the steamers that took us from Hongkong to Canton barbed wire and iron bars shut off the pilot house and first cabin from the Chinese passengers, while Sikh guards, heavily armed, paced up and down, constantly alert. In Canton itself soldiers were everywhere, coolie laborers were for the most part women, the men being in the army or in hiding to avoid conscription. Military motor cars and those of wealthy citizens carried armed guards on the foot boards with pistols held ready for instant action. Arrests and executions were frequent occurrences.

On the other hand business seemed brisk and there were signs of general prosperity, while foreigners were living their lives and doing their work without apparent strain or anxiety.

As a matter of fact our whole nine days' stay in Canton was without untoward incident of any kind, so far as the members of the Synod were concerned. It did not even rain; while the only military action was a big military funeral. The people were extremely cordial and friendly.

Canton is at the extreme southeastern corner of China. Travel there involves a large expenditure of both time and money. For this reason only two of the dioceses sent full delegations. Furthermore, war conditions and brigandage, not being peculiar to Canton, prevented one diocese from sending any delegates, while another, for the same reason, was able to send but two. The result was that this was numerically, a small Synod, there being only forty-nine member in the House of Delegates as against seventy-four in 1921. On the other hand there were fourteen Bishops in the House of Bishops. Three more than in 1921, though these three were really visitors from the neighboring dioceses of Singapore, Sarawak and the Philippine Islands.

The Synod organized for work on Monday, March 17. Bishop Graves of Shanghai was elected chairman of the House of Bishops, and the Rev. Dr. Pott, President of St. John's University, chairman of the House of Delegates. In the latter house thirty-five of the forty-nine delegates were Chinese. They presented four distinct dialects, but most of them understood either the Mandarin dialect or English, the two official languages of the Synod. The necessity of translating every speech or statement made progress necessarily slow. Even so, thanks to the clear head and genial masterfulness of our chairman, we were able to work with real expedition and when the hour for closing came on Saturday, March 22, the slate was clean. The Synod had done all that it planned to do.

It is only possible to refer briefly to the principal achievements of the Synod. Much time was taken up in work on the Canons, probably one-half of the total time of the sessions. The Church here is in process of organization, and the steps in organization are embodied in its Canons. The old Canons were revised and new Canons added on new Bishops, new Dioceses, the Ordination of Priests, the Making of Deaconesses and the Discipline of the Clergy. The Committee on Canons was instructed to prepare drafts of Canons on Marriage and Divorce and on the Discipline of Bishops. When these are passed by the next Synod, our body of Canons will be complete, which means that our Church will be thoroughly organized.

The third day was, as always, a joint meeting of the two houses sitting as a Board of Missions. Stirring reports were heard of the splendid work done by our missionaries in the province of Shensi. Our workers in this Province are all Chinese and the work is financed by the Chinese Church itself, the annual budget being raised from the several dioceses by the apportionment method, as with us.

The reports testified to steady progress in the work in Shensi, and also to the growth of the missionary spirit in the Church at large, evinced by the steady increase in missionary offerings. The larger apportionments for the next triennium to meet the expenses of the rapidly enlarging work were accepted by the several delegations without a murmur. Even so, the total amount did not appear adequate; and here a dramatic episode occurred, when the Bishop of Sarawak arose, and, speaking also in behalf of the Bishops of Singapore and the Philippine Islands, said that they would bring the matter of the support of the Shensi Mission before their Chinese congregations on their return and felt sure that we could count on a generous response.

A notable step in the development of the work in Shensi had already been taken the preceding day by the two Houses voting separately. This was the formal setting apart of the Province of Shensi as a Missionary District of the Chinese Church, with the right of representation in the General Synod. This prepares the way for the election of a Chinese Bishop for Shensi, with full Diocesan powers. This action will probably be taken by the Synod of 1927.

Reference has been made above to the Bishops of Singapore, Sarawak and the Philippine Islands. They came to the Synod in company with several Chinese Christians representing the Chinese congregations in their respective dioceses. There are literally millions of Chinese in Siam, the Malay Peninsula, Bernese and the Philippines. Many of them are very wealthy and the trade of these countries is largely in their hands. Our Church has some flourishing congregations, among them totaling some 2,000 communicants. They came asking that a deputation consisting of one Bishop and one Chinese priest be sent to visit them, and that they be given the privilege of sending delegates regularly to the General Synod. These visitors were given a most cordial welcome by the Synod. Their requests were granted, and now the congregations of "Overseas Chinese" are definitely linked up with the Chinese Church.

This meeting of the Synod bore witness to a definite growth among us of the spirit of Church unity. A strong resolution was passed endorsing the National Christian Council, founded two years ago, and commending it to the moral and financial support of the several dioceses and the Mother Churches of the West. Another resolution strongly recommended that the Chinese Church take part in the preparation for the Conference on Faith and Order by prayer and by discussing in sectional conferences the questions put out by the Preliminary Conference at Geneva.

In addition the Synod urged that clergy and laity alike support, as far as possible, the work of Union congregations in places where our Church has no work and Church members were urged to connect themselves with any Christian Church in places where they were sojourning.

Finally the Standing Committee on Christian Unity was reappointed as the Commission of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Huei in connection with the World Conference on Faith and Order.

In a certain way this Synod might have been termed the Women's Synod. It did everything that remained possible to do for women in the matter of Church privileges. The previous General Synod had approved of women being elected members of parish vestries and diocesan synods and this is now the general practice with us. This Synod opened the doors of the General Synod to women delegates, and recommended that women equally with men, on being licensed by the Bishop be allowed to speak in consecrated buildings and to lead in prayer at other than the regular services of the Church. Furthermore, it was recommended that Deaconesses, equally with Deacons, be given seats in diocesan synods; and a Canon on the Making of Deaconesses was passed that should further the rapid development of the order in the Chinese Church.

Finally, women representatives of nine dioceses meeting at the same time with the Synod, organized with much earnestness and enthusiasm the Chinese Women's Missionary Service League, and adopted a constitution which was later formally approved by the Synod.

This account has already grown to alarming proportions and must be brought at once to a close. By way of summary, however, this meeting of the Synod has unquestionably made a valuable contribution toward the development of the Chinese Church. It was characterized by a fine spirit of unity that was in itself an evidence of the presence of the Spirit. We commend the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Huei to the prayers of our brethren at home that He who has begun this good work may perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ.

Social Service at the Coming Council.

A number of the delegates have already been elected to attend the Diocesan Council which meets in St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, on May 21. On Tuesday night before the opening of the Council there will be a special service for the discussion of Social Service. Brief addresses will be made by Dr. Mary Brydon, the Rev. Messrs. F. D. Goodwin and R. Cary Montague, after which there will be an open discussion of problems confronting the Diocese in this field of Christian activity.

A Beautiful Tribute.

A memorial of an unusually helpful kind is being planned by the members of Grace Church, Richmond, in memory of their late beloved rector, the Rev. Landon R. Mason, D. D. A fund of at least $5,000 is being raised, the interest from which is to provide a scholarship at one of the diocesan schools for a deserving boy or girl, to be known as the Mason Memorial Scholarship. The Easter offering of Grace Church, amounting to almost a thousand dollars, went for this purpose, and a thousand dollars is to be used in the same way, from the sale of the church property when this congregation moves up to the present building of Holy Trinity Church; these sums, together with scattered contributions, make almost half of the necessary amount already in sight. Any friends of Dr. Mason, who may wish to assist this cause may do so by sending their contributions to Mr. C. L. Cooke, Treasurer of Grace Church, 316 East Grace Street, Richmond, Va. It is a beautiful idea, and a fitting tribute to the sweet personality of Dr. Mason.

A Pleasant Surprise for the City Missionary.

Friends of the Rev. R. Cary Montague, City Missionary of Richmond, gave him the most delightful surprise a few days before Easter Sunday. On Thursday morning his automobile was "borrowed" to go to see a charity patient, and when it was returned, it was brand new, the very latest model. About twenty-five organizations from almost every church in Richmond had contributed to the fund that made this rejuvenation of the Ford possible. No more useful expression of their appreciation of Mr. Montague's services could have been devised by these good people than that of providing him with this improved transportation, as his old car was beginning to need frequent attention to keep it in running order.

Memorial Pulpit: On Easter night in St. John's Church, Mathews, Kingston Parish, the handsome oak pulpit to the memory of the late Rev. John Robert Matthews was used for the first time. This pulpit has been erected to the memory of Mr. Matthews by admiring and loving friends and the congregation and Woman's Guild of St. John's Church again thank those who contributed to this work of love around which sacred memories and tender feelings will ever cling.

Piedmont Convocation: The one hundred and thirteenth semi-annual meeting of the Piedmont Convocation will be held at Emmanuel Church, Middleburg, the Rev. Campbell Mayers, rector, beginning Monday evening, May 12, and continuing through Tuesday and Wednesday. The speakers from outside of the Convocation will be the Rev. Karl Morgan Block, of Roanoke, and the Rev. Roy Mason, of Charlottesville.

The Observance of Easter in New York.

Each year it is the duty of your New York correspondent to report Lent and Easter with more people in churches than on any present season of the name. If such report were accurate in former years, it is much more to the point in 1924. Primarily, this advance is due to larger number of services. The Lent just ended saw several halls, heretofore vacant, rented this year and noon day services carried on in them. It also saw Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational and other churches issuing Lenten Cards, using terms long used by the Church, but belonging to the nomenclature of the ages. People attended these services and so swelled the numbers.

A pioneer in noon-day services, Trinity Parish has reached the point where at the very beginning of the Lenten season crowds fill the edifice. St. Paul's Chapel has also reached this stage. John Street Methodist Church, a near neighbor of St. Paul's, is also getting crowds such as it never gained in former years. On up town the same growth is seen. This year in New York Lutherans maintained two noon-day series. Good Friday saw one of the worst storms of the year, but only in small measure were numbers in the churches affected.

Easter day was sombre, but seven thousand people attended a service at dawn on Columbia University grounds. Methodists on Washington Heights gained the first $500,000 of $4,000,000 needed to erect a church and apartment houses, to be known as Broadway Temple. Jews celebrated their holidays simultaneously with Christians, and the Rabbi of the foremost Jewish Temple in the world, Emanu-El, New York, argued in his sermon that Jews did not crucify Christ. At the Cathedral, Bishop Manning preached. Here and at St. Thomas, St. Bartholomew's and others, vast crowds attended. In some churches, for the first time at Easter, 1924, held Holy Communion services at seven, eight, nine and eleven, not because they are numbered with the ritualistic churches, but to accommodate crowds that had to be served by a single priest.

The Actors Guild.

The Actors Guild, with headquarters at the Church of the Transfiguration, has now a membership of two hundred and forty-five, and has just changed its membership requirements to take in persons of all faiths, although its Council is and will remain in largest part Church communicants. The chairman of the Council is the Rev. Randolph Ray, rector of the parish, which has granted the Guild the use of a room as social parlor. The president of the Guild is Mr. George Arliss. Recently new chaplains have been appointed in four cities, and prominent Church clergy in other cities have been asked to serve. The four accepting are the Rev. Drs. Van Allen of Boston, Hadley of Syracuse, Van Etten of Pittsburgh and Nelson of Cincinnati.

The older organization, the Actors Church Alliance, long having the Rev. Walter E. Bentley as leader and splendid worker, is also active among Church communicants in the theatrical profession, and held its annual service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Low Sunday, the Rev. Randolph Ray being the preacher.

To Revive Archdeaconry System.

It is the announced policy of the Diocese that the Archdeaconry system is to be revived, as means of giving different districts a larger measure of local self government. For the present the two Suffragans are to serve as Archdeacons, and divides the archdeaconries between them. The system has been tried in the Diocese for many years, and at times has found favor, at other times has been discarded. When two Suffragans were chosen it was announced by some that the system had gone forever. Most of the successful work of extension was done under the system.

Easter Pageants.

Three Church Schools in Savannah celebrated Easter in pageantry at the annual festivals Easter afternoon. "Prepare ye the Way," or "The Easter Messenger," was the title of the Christ Church pageant, and it showed in an impressive way the lessons studied during Lent, as it brought out the seasons and colors leading up to the Resurrection season. At St. John's Church "An Easter Pilgrimage" was made during the festival, by representatives of each department to the symbols in the chancel, the congregation taking part in a service of worship. St. Paul's Church School had its pageant on the lawn by the church, and was given by the members of the Young People's Service League. The pageant depicted the discovery of the Resurrection of the Risen Lord, and showed the characters of those going to and from the empty tomb. Junior choirs assisted in all of the festivals as well as the adult choirs in two of the services.

In St. Paul's Church, Savannah, the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, rector, the Church School Service League has an organized choir of thirty boys and girls who sang at the Children's Lenten service every Wednesday afternoon. The members of the League studied "The Honorable Japanese Fan" during Lent, and made the palmetto crosses distributed to the congregation on Palm Sunday. Easter Monday an Easter egg hunt was held and the proceeds given to the rector for his parish charity fund.

The Church Attendance Campaign at Christ Church, the Rev. David Cady Wright, rector, Savannah, ended on Palm Sunday, the goal of five thousand at the service of Morning Prayer, having been reached that day and for two Sundays previously. On the final Sunday the rector made a plea for cooperation in realizing his vision in the plans he has for parish development. At the fifth annual Easter sale of the Church School the sum of $150 was realized for the Children's Easter Offering.

At Holy Trinity Mission, Blakely, where there are 20 communicants, members of the Woman's Auxiliary held a prayer service every Monday and Friday afternoons, conducted by one of the members. Prayer, alms-giving and fasting were emphasized, and to these were added the less familiar words as excellent Lenten monitions, "reality, definiteness and patience." During Holy Week, the Vicar, the Rev. H. Scott-Smith, of St. John's, Bainbridge, had services on Monday and Good Friday. The members of the Mission raised the necessary amount for a Communion Service, which was used for the first time on Easter Day.

Successful Preaching Mission.

A most successful preaching mission was conducted in St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, from March 27 to April 6 by the Rev. J. A. Schaad, as missionary. The following churches of the city cooperated in the movement in a splendid spirit and participated: Calvary Church, St. Luke's Church, Grace Church, St. Mary's Cathedral, Holy Trinity Church, Good Shepherd, St. John's and St. Alban's.

The keynote of the mission was sounded in the opening service when Dr. Schaad preached a powerful sermon on "Conscience" and throughout the mission the consciences of the people led them to renewed consecration and dedication of their lives.

During the mission Dr. Schaad spoke to members of the Woman's Auxiliary on the general subject of China as seen through an American girl's eyes; the missionary having a daughter serving as a missionary at Anking. One of the outstanding features of the mission was the broadcasting of the services on Sunday morning, April 6, over WMC radio station of the Commercial Appeal, to an invisible congregation of twenty-five thousand people. Many responses have come in expressing their appreciation for the help received from this sermon on the text, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever."

As a result of this preaching mission about fifty new members were added to the Cathedral and the Dean, the Rev. I. H. Noe, has been compelled to hold another confirmation class to instruct the many candidates received as a result of this mission. The spiritual influence of Dr. Schaad will have an effect upon the spiritual lives of the people of Memphis for years to come.

Out-Door Service Planned.

A great out-door service is planned to be held in the amphitheatre on the Cathedral grounds on Sunday afternoon, May 18, with the Bishop of Washington as preacher. At this time a service flag will be presented as the permanent possession of the Cathedral. This flag is the outcome of an undertaking of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, by which was compiled a record of the names of all the men of the Episcopal Church who were in the military and naval service of the country during the World War, with a special record of those who fell in action. All of these are represented by this great service flag and this, with the roster of names, will be permanently placed in the Cathedral.

New Church To Be Consecrated.

The new building of St. James' Church, Indian Head, will be consecrated by the Bishop of Washington on Tuesday morning, May 13, and as many as possible of the clergy and laity are urged to attend this service. This building is the first to be erected by the Phillips' Foundation.

Church School Service League Meets.

The spring meeting of the Church School Service League was held at St. Margaret's Church on Saturday afternoon, April 26. At this time the members of the League of St. Margaret's Sunday School presented a Japanese missionary play, entitled "The Honorable Japanese Fan."

The Churchman's League of Washington held its third meeting of the season at Cosmos Club on April 29 at 8 o'clock. At this meeting officers for the ensuing year were elected. The speaker on this occasion was Dr. Thos. E. Green, director of the speakers' bureau of the Red Cross, and his subject was "A Challenge and Its Answer."

Messrs. Mercer and Hadley, lay evangelists, held a series of daily services at the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, from Palm Sunday to Easter, inclusive. The attendance has been good, as it was during the week preceding, at All Saints, Mobile, when the aisles had to be utilized for seating room. The talks of these laymen are striking, and even startling, without being sensational. They succeed in being simple and direct as well as notably earnest, and so arrest. They address their message to men, women and young people in separate groups as well as in general.

Good Friday and Easter in San Antonio

The three-hour services were held in St. Mark's, San Antonio, on Good Friday, and, during the entire service the church was well filled, and very great interest manifested. Easter was a bright and perfect day, and there were three celebrations of the Holy Communion: at seven, nine and eleven o'clock. Eight hundred and sixty-three communicants received. The sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. S. Arthur Huston. An overflow service was held on the lawn at eleven o'clock. The sermon was preached at this service by the Rev. Mr. Robertson, curate of the parish.

St. Paul's, San Antonio, had one hundred and forty-seven to receive at the services of the day, and hundreds were turned away, who were unable to get into the church. There were actually more communicants than they have on the communicant list of this church, showing that there were a number of visitors present. So far, as reports have been received at this writing, the Easter services have been well attended throughout the diocese, and a large percentage of the communicants of the diocese received on this day.

Easter Throughout the Diocese.

Easter in Dallas was marked by great rejoicing. From all over the Diocese come tales of unprecedented congregations and liberal offerings.

In Weatherford the new church was crowded in the morning and in the afternoon the Knights Templars had a special service.

In Paris, the offering reached the sum of five hundred dollars.

In Dallas, Bishop Moore celebrated at Christ Church, Oak Cliff (where there is at present no rector), in the morning and at the Cathedral at noon. There were over eight hundred communions made at the Cathedral and the offering amounted to sixty-three hundred dollars. At the noon service the crowd was so large that not only were one hundred and fifty extra chairs placed in the Cathedral, but many people were standing throughout the entire service and still more were unable to obtain admission.

At the Church of the Incarnation (the Rev. C. E. Snowden, rector), there was great rejoicing over pledges of ten thousand dollars as a payment towards the lot upon which it is expected to build a new church. As soon as an additional sum of ten thousand dollars has been received the lot will be entirely paid for. The Children's Lenten offering also amounted to seventeen hundred dollars, creating a new record.

The Lenten Round Table Fellowship was a great success in the City of Dallas, and particular stress was laid upon the course on the Life of Our Lord, given by the Rev. E. H. Eckel of Fort Worth. The members of his class presented him with a copy of Headlam's Life of Christ at the last session.

As the result of the Pilgrimage Services in Dallas, a fund was placed in the hands of Bishop Moore to enable him to send two clergymen from mission stations to summer schools, it being in the option of the clergy to decide between Evergreen and Sewanee.

There is a profound feeling of unity and rejoicing throughout the entire Diocese this Eastertide.

On this mound, where in the olden time the red man welcomed the rising sun, almost three hundred Christians welcomed the Risen Son of Righteousness.

Cincinnati Notes.

Easter in Cincinnati was marked by chilly, cloudy weather, and yet all reports point to large attendance at the churches and generous offerings, in spite of the numerous drives for contributions for many worthy causes, past, present and future.

The Lenten noon-day services at Keith's Theatre, four days each week, totaled the highest attendance in six years. The grand total was 19,332, an average of 716. The speakers were the Rev. Dr. Wm. J. Scarlett, of St. Louis, the Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb, of the Cambridge Divinity School; the Rev. Dr. S. S. Marquis, of Detroit; the Rev. Dr. J. Howard Melish, of Brooklyn; the Rev. Frederick S. Fleming, of Chicago; the Rev. Reese, Coadjutor, and the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, Executive Secretary of the Diocese.

Confirmations were numerous, and the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, D. D., at Christ Church, presented one hundred and three, the largest class in the history of the parish and probably in the history of the Diocese. St. Andrew's Mission to the colored race was crowded on Palm Sunday when the Rev. E. H. Oxley, D. D., presented thirty-five. There were a large number of adults in the classes.

At St. Stephen's, Winton Place, thirteen were confirmed, all adults but two and seven of them men, only the children having been brought up in the church. The Church School's Easter offering was over $150, as compared with $45.92 a year ago.

St. Phillip's, Northside, is going ahead as a united parish and three hundred attended three services held by the rector, the Rev. Ben C. DeCamp.

Christ Church, the Cathedral, where a Mission by Dean Jones has just closed, the Advent, Grace, Avondale, Epiphany, Redeemer and others report excellent attendance and many communions.

The will of Miss Mary T. Hart, which disposes of an estate valued at $340,000, bequeaths $500 to the Protestant Episcopal Free Hospital for Children. Miss Hart was a prominent social worker of the Roman Catholic Church.

Death of Clergyman's Wife.

Mrs. Virginia Showell, wife of the Rev. John Letcher Showell, priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Lubbock, died of pneumonia early Sunday morning, April 6, having been confined to her bed only four days. She had made for herself a place in the community in which she lived and in the district, being active in all sorts of civic affairs, as well as a dominant influence in the life of the mission, and an indefatigable worker for Woman's Auxiliary interests. She had also won a place in the hearts of all who knew her, which will not soon be filled by another. Preliminary services were held in the church at Lubbock, the Rev. Messrs. E. H. J. Andrews and Frank Eteson officiating, and the body was then taken to Vienna, Md., for interment. The Rev. Mr. Showell and little daughter, Elizabeth, will remain East.

Mr. J. C. Prude, of Colorado, member of the Council of Advice of the District, an earnest Christian and devoted Churchman, passed to his rest in Passion Week, at a ripe age, and after a lengthy illness. He will be greatly missed in the District.

The Rev. E. H. J. Andrews has recently received for St. Mark's Church, Plainview, a beautiful silk church flag for processional purposes. It was given by Miss Jane Ely, of All Saints' Church, Elizabeth, N. J., the rector's former parish, in memory of her sister, Florence, a member of that congregation. The Woman's Guild of St. Mark's has ordered of R. Geissler, New York, an oak reteros, and Judge and Mrs. Meade F. Griffin are giving a memorial marble font.

The place of publication of the North Texas Adventure, the monthly District periodical, has been changed from Stamford to Plainview, and is now under the editorship of the Rev. E. H. J. Andrews, chairman of Publicity.

Miss Mabel Cooper, representing the Department of Religious Education of the National Council, has recently visited a number of the Church Schools of the District in the interest of the work among children, holding thirteen conferences with teachers and parents, and making many addresses.

"A Teaching Mission on Religion and Health."

On Palm Sunday night the Rev. F. C. Sherman finished a most inspiring series of addresses and sermons in a "Teaching Mission on Religion and Health" in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., the Rev. R. P. Kreidler, rector.

Dr. Sherman preached every day at noon and every evening during Passion Week. Between four hundred and five hundred persons heard him daily at the two services. From the very start of his Mission on Passion Sunday,

Dr. Sherman made a deep impression upon the people who kept coming in increasing numbers. Not only was his appeal met by the attentive congregations made up of Church folk, but fully half of the people present had had hitherto no connection with the Episcopal Church. So interested were those who attended that a special conference was arranged for Saturday night, when a "question box" was conducted and Dr. Sherman endeavored to answer the many queries that had arisen during the week of the Mission. The notices in the daily newspapers were extensive and gave wide publicity to the movement of the American Guild of Health.

Many who appreciated Dr. Sherman's strong presentation of his subjects on Religion and Health felt that he had answered many of the modern problems concerning these two great subjects. Many private interviews were held. It was felt by those deeply interested in the Mission that Dr. Sherman had done great good for the Church in the community. He offered a sane presentation of many difficult problems and had clearly shown the great place spiritual healing could hold in the life of Christian people. He was urged to return next fall and some went so far as to feel the necessity of establishing a School of Applied Christianity, such as Dr. Sherman has established elsewhere. Those who observed the effects of the Teaching Mission on Religion and Health, were unanimous in their praise of Dr. Sherman's preaching power and the clarity with which he taught day after day to eager attentive congregations.

WESTERN MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Joseph Francis is confirming for Bishop McCormick, who is in Europe, and spent Palm Sunday in Grand Rapids, where he confirmed two classes at Grace Church, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, rector.

A new plan was tried this year—the children were confirmed at the Church School service at 9:30 A. M., thus visualizing confirmation to the Church School. Adults at the eleven o'clock service. There were sixty-nine candidates in all.

In the afternoon the Bishop visited St. Phillip's (colored) Church and confirmed an unusually fine group of adults, a class of twenty-eight.

For the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

The first of a series of dinners to be given in behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund in the Diocese of Pittsburgh, took place on Thursday evening, April 24, 1924, at the Fort Pitt Hotel. The Rev. Alleyne Carleton Howell, D. D., of St. Stephen's Church, was chairman, and Mr. Warren H. Turner acted as toastmaster. The addresses were made by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, Bishop of Pittsburgh, and Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council. They were illustrated with moving pictures. There were about fifty present, consisting of rectors and key men from the parishes of the city and its vicinity.

National Field Department Conference.

The annual conference of the Field Department of the National Council was held in Pittsburgh on April 23 and 24, on the former day and evening, at the Fort Pitt Hotel, and on the latter at Trinity parish house. About thirty Diocesan Executive Secretaries and other clergymen were present, and discussed plans for a more business-like administration of the Church's work. The Rev. R. P. Mitchell, of New York, National Field Department Secretary, was elected Chairman. Among other matters discussed was the program for the next triennium. Among those present were Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council; Mr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the same; and the Rev. C. E. Jackson, G. F. Patterson, L. G. Wood, G. H. Madara, B. H. St. Mary's Church, Paul's Valley, is again in the limelight in this District. Over $1,900 has just been raised by the local people towards the cost of repairs to the little church building. The Bishop has promised an extra thousand dollars and it is hoped to start work at once. The Bishop expects to have a resident clergyman for this work, and to which will be added the Missions at Purcell and Sulphur.

St. Philip's, Ardmore, had one hundred and forty-eight people in attendance Easter Sunday morning, which is a splendid figure when one takes into consideration that this work has been for so long a time without a resident clergyman.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Activities at Pennsylvania State College.

The Rt. Rev. J. C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of Erie, was a recent visitor to Pennsylvania State College, on the large colleges of America. Bishop Ward officiated at the early service held at St. Andrew's, the Rev. Edward M. Frear, chaplain. After his evening duties were over at the College Chapel, he again visited St. Andrew's to give a special address to the evening group. At the close of the service he went to the rectory to meet the State College students from the Diocese of Erie, and any others who found it possible to enter the already over-crowded house. The students assisted Mrs. Frear in serving the refreshments. Every one enjoyed the Bishop's hearty good fellowship.

That same day also Mr. John Henry Frizzell gave an address at Morning Prayer on his work as a member of the staff of the National Chapter, Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Mr. Frizzell was for many years a member of the faculty at Pennsylvania State College, was one of the early lay readers of the parish, a charter member of the local chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and for many years its director. The congregation, students and faculty, were deeply impressed by his vigorous portrayal of possibilities for work with men and boys within our Church.

St. Andrew's Church has enjoyed a record attendance recently, particularly on Palm Sunday and Easter. On the former day, the congregation exceeded the seating capacity by ten per cent, and chairs had to be brought out for use.

Entire Town Observes Good Friday.

It is believed that the observance of Holy Week and Good Friday in Tyrone, stands as a sort of example to other towns. During Holy Week there were daily evening services at Trinity Church, and, in addition, under the auspices of the Ministerium, union services were held each evening in one of the Protestant churches. On Good Friday, in addition to the three hours' service conducted in Trinity Church by the rector, the Rev. F. T. Cady, a union three hours' service was held at the Lutheran Church. Every store in town closed from noon on Good Friday until three o'clock, so that on the whole, the entire town joined in observing the day.

A new altar rail has recently been erected in the Church of Our Saviour, Montoursville, the Rev. H. W. Brueninghausen, rector. The rail is composed of four brass standards, and a top rail of oak. The gateway can be closed by a sliding oak rod. It was dedicated by the rector on the Fifth Sunday in Lent.

York: On the Fourth Sunday in Lent, Bishop Darlington visited St. John's Church, York, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, rector, and administered Confirmation to twenty candidates.

In the afternoon, he also visited St. Andrew's Chapel in the same parish, and confirmed a class of ten candidates. At St. Andrew's he also dedicated a new lectern and prayer desk presented to the chapel in memory of the late Robert A. G. Ault, by his widow, Mrs. Ault. Mr. Ault served the church for many years as a lay reader, and his labors have contributed measurably to the present flourishing condition of St. Andrew's Chapel. Addresses were also made by the rector, the Rev. G. F. Caruthers, D. D., of Columbia, and Mr. Francis Driver, the lay reader in charge.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. J. P. Tyler, D. D., Bishop.

Activities at the Cathedral.

A Quiet Day was held in Gethsemane Cathedral on the Feast of the Annunciation. The day's devotions were conducted by Dean Cowley-Carroll, the topics being the general subject of "Benediction." The addresses given throughout the day were, "The Peace of God Which Passeth All Understanding," "The Grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ," "The Love of God," "The Fellowship of the Spirit," and the closing one from the Deur Miseratur, "And God even Our Own God shall give us His blessing." The Men's Club of the Cathedral have undertaken a splendid piece of extension work for the parish. They have underwritten the cost of a publicity campaign to be carried on until June. The method will be by the publication of a weekly Cathedral Bulletin of a program of all parish activities for each week, which is distributed at the services and mailed to over two hundred Church adherents; by the insertion of a display advertisement in the Fargo papers each week for the Sunday services; and by mailing follow-up letters to prospective members of the parish organizations. Already the results are very noticeable in the increased attendance at the church services.

Men's Club Organized.

The annual parish meeting of St. Paul's congregation, Grand Forks, was the largest in recent years, and as the outcome of the gathering of such a large number of men a Men's Club has been organized and promised to be a most useful part of the Church machinery. Extensive alterations are being made in the basement of the Guild Hall. The new kitchen at the rear is being completed, the dining-room enlarged, and the present kitchen will be fitted up for a primary class room. The total cost when equipped will be in the neighborhood of $2,500. The ladies of the Guild to earn money during Lent have conducted a most successful lunch room on the third floor of the Ontario store.

An Outstanding Piece of Rural Work.

A record piece of rural work has been accomplished by the Rev. C. E. Beach, who is in charge of the Missions at Park River and Langdon. In the little nearby village of Easby there are seventy-five residents. During Lent Mr. Beach held the first service of the church ever held in this little town in the one and only church in the place. Eighty souls attended this service, some coming in from the nearby farms. He made arrangements to hold a service there every other Thursday and at the first two services had a total of 144 present. In addition to this evening service in the church he holds a twenty-minute service at the school house at the close of the school at four o'clock for the school children. Every other week Mr. Beach goes to Langdon for his work there, and on his way on Saturday afternoons, "between trains" he holds a Bible class in the school house at Easby at which he has had an average attendance of twenty-five, mostly children, with a few adults. This Bible class was requested by the G. F. S. Branch in this little community, and at one of the services had an admission service for the G. F. S., at which six new members were admitted.

Good Work Among the Indians.

The work among the Indian children at four of the Government Schools in North Dakota, is steadily growing. At the school at the Fort Yates Agency there is a fine Sunday School of seventy-six pupils, which is conducted by Mr. Paul Abraham, one of the government employees at the agency, a full-blooded Indian, educated, and a good Churchman. From the school at Bismarck there were eight Indian girls confirmed at St. George's Church in January, and one more with the last class in March. On Easter Day at Trinity Church, Wahpeton, thirty-one Indian boys and girls from the school in that town were baptized and fifteen confirmed; this good work having been brought about by Mr. Earle G. Lier, a postulant for Holy Orders, who is holding services twice a month in Wahpeton.

The Men's Club of All Saints' Parish, Minot, are backing the publication of the "All Saints Messenger," a weekly bulletin of the affairs of the parish, which has been in successful operation for some time.

Almighty God, Who hast given Thine only Son to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin and also an example of godly life, give us grace that we may always most thankfully receive that His inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavor ourselves to follow the blessed steps of His most holy life; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Simple Trust.

W. B. Lydenberg.

How sweet the life of him who trusts in God!
 Peace lays her hand in his and guides his steps
 To where flow never-failing streams; soft is
 The bed she makes for him, refreshing is
 The sleep she brings, and through the night of fear
 She watches at his side; when morning breaks
 She whispers in his ear a song of joy,
 And puts upon his lips a word of thanks,
 And strength within his limbs; she fills his arms
 With food that satisfies, and on his brow
 She puts the light of love, truth in his words,
 And honor in his name; and when death strikes
 His fragile form she lifts his fluttering soul
 And lays it in the bosom of his God.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Greeks Brought to Christ.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The Greeks came to the Temple to worship; they were, therefore, proselytes converted to Judaism, or else Greek-speaking Jews. But they were European tourists. They arrived during a great speech of Our Lord's, or they would not have known He was there. They waited, or He would not have seen them. We, who have been tourists, recognize the state of mind. They introduced themselves to Philip, who had a Greek name. Philip told Andrew, who was mate of the boat; and Philip and Andrew told Jesus.

The narrative does not say Our Lord saw the Greeks. His answer may be addressed to Philip and Andrew. Comment seems unanimous that he did see them. It was the kindly thing to do. Our Lord's speech is luminous if addressed to Greeks, strangers, Europeans, and His last public act. It is obscure if addressed to two apostles to whom He said many later things. We take it that He saw the Greeks.

But, if this be true, we begin to understand why God the Father spoke, later; for it was the closing of Our Lord's public ministry, as the baptism of John, with the Voice there, had been its opening. Our Lord had finished His last great oration. His teaching was done. Never again would He sway a great crowd with a great speech. In the quiet of that realization He sat and saw the widow give her mite and was a little comforted. Private teaching there would be still, suffering hideous, past realization, there would be, but His last sermon was preached and He knew it and sat realizing it.

To Him in this pause, came the message from the Greeks. I think He took them as representative. Certainly Christendom at large has since taken them as representative. They said something, for He "answered."

"The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified," ending, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

Our Lord knew that He must die for our sakes, that we may receive His nature.

Suppose He had not died. Suppose He had chosen to exercise His power, overthrow His enemies and reign? There are implications here so stupendous that he who dare unravel them can see, as by a lurid lightning-flash, deep into what it was that Satan wished. The third temptation in the wilderness was not the only time the Arch-tempter had hopes of the fall of God. Our Lord went on:

"If any man serve me let him follow me; and where I am there shall also my servant be; if any man serve me, him will My Father honor. Now is My soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father save me from this hour?—but for this came I unto this hour. Father, glorify Thy name."

Then came there a voice from heaven saying, I have both glorified it and will glorify it again. The people therefore that stood by and heard it said that it thundered. Others said, An angel spoke to him.

Here, in a clear-cut and quite commonplace way, is told the most stupendous miracle Christ ever caused. It uses a few dozen words, half of them comment of spectators. That God should speak in an audible voice to men—not to one man in a vision, but to many quite ordinary and normal men—is unheard of, outside of Rabbinical legend and the Book of Job. Rabbis had a technical name for it—the Bath Quol. Comparing various rabbinical stories we are struck by certain common elements. The Voice settles some point disputed between Rabbis. It is known to all who hear it as the Bath Quol. The miracle recorded here differs in these points. But this was the last voluntary public appearance of Our Lord as the baptism by John was the first. There had been a voice from God at the baptism, as John bore witness. It was fitting that there should be a voice from God now, at the close of the ministry. Many bystanders held that the final seal on a man's inspiration was the Bath Quol. They believed it given to great religious teachers. It was fitting that the Voice at the end of the ministry should be audible to all.

It was subject to misinterpretation, as all facts are. Nothing seems easier to see than a fact. Really, nothing is harder. The power to admit that fact is one of the rarest in human nature. Place before any group of men a fact new to them and observe the result.

Not one in ten admits it. The attitude of most is, We will not have it so. So pathetically true is this that the difference between a great genius and an ordinary man is largely the ability to see facts. The dry comment of John is exhaustive and laconic. It was the Voice of God. Nobody believed it. The human mind reels and staggers before the awful implications involved.

No greater, more majestic thing can happen in all the fathomless profound of human experience. It is awful past awe, pathetic past tears. God spoke to man and in heart-breaking stupidity man did not know it. Some said that it thundered. Then was answered the question as to why God does not speak to man often or always. He did—and they did not know it. It was right that it should be done once and the record kept for witness. If God, in an audible voice today were to speak the words men need most to hear, we do not guess, we know what would happen. Some would say it was supernatural. Most would say it thundered. As for the effect: it would not be the changed lives of any great number of men, the reform of the city, the upspringing of good or the overturning of evil. There would be no effect at all.

Our Lord's next saying, concerning the Prince of this world and the judgment of this world, is inexplicable on the plane of this world. Olshausen takes it that the reference is to another stage in the progressive fall of Satan, marked when Gentiles sought to enter the Kingdom of God. To us, the reference seems that God spoke to men without a mediator and men did not know it. This was necessary. The simple obvious and easy plan had to fail before any other could be put in practice. God knew it would fail. It was not done to increase His knowledge, but ours. The logic of events cries out for it, and until done the ground was not clear for the other, the terrible plan, that would not fail.

But when God spoke to man and man did not know it, then a judgment was irrevocably and automatically passed upon the Power that brought man to such a state. That such a thing could be was, itself, the judgment. To that greater public opinion of the Universe where the dead and angels, and, perhaps, intelligences other than both make up the thinking public, the event must have been conclusive. One of their peers had so managed the government intrusted to him that, when the Father spoke to men, men did not know it. No comment need be made as to the character of that peer.

As to what language God spoke—which seems to trouble some—it seemed to Hebrews to be Hebrew. But we doubt greatly if it were really any language. It is to the spirit God speaks. Probably, if any Greek understood, it seemed to him Greek. To each it seemed his mother-tongue because it would be heard by the spirit of each.

Jesus spoke of being lifted up. Our Lord, we think, spoke without irony, holding it really exaltation. To those who knew His many predictions of crucifixion the thing must have seemed a grim jest, an iron jest, more bitter than cursing; for crucifixion was held the most degrading of all deaths. The people answered:

"We have heard out of the Law that Messiah abides forever, and how say you the Son of Man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of Man?"

This was sane exegesis, and its explanation rests on the resurrection. Only through resurrection can the Son of Man, when lifted up, abide forever. But Our Lord had told them of the resurrection. They knew the answer and could not believe it. He therefore went on:

"Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light believe in the light, that ye may be children of light."

This is the end of Our Lord's public teaching.

Within.

Jesse Joutite.

From the midst of the worry and turmoil and din,

From the grasp of the busy day,
I may slip apart to the soul's "within"—
It is not so far away.

And there in the flash of a moment's space
A lasting respite gain;
A glimpse of my Master, face to face
Wipes out the stress and the strain.

From the very midst of the urgent throng
That press me on every side
I can slip away, and not be long
Till I rest at the feet of my Guide.

The touch of His hand is a potent power
To ease the curse of the strife;
I return to conquer the busy hour;
To redeem the day of life.

From the shadow of grief and sorrowful woe
That steal of the spirit's best,
I can slip away, where soon I know
I can lean on the Master's breast.

No time nor place the whole day through,
Nor noise nor trouble nor din;
But what He patiently waits for you
If you will go "within."

"Easy to Live With."

"Are we easy to live with? This is an essential test of the genuineness of character. How we appear to society is comparatively a slight matter, for that chiefly means the estimate of people who do not know us; but how we appear to those who live with us is a very significant matter. A few shallow, hollow courtesies suffice to secure popular favor, only sterling character persuades those who live with us. There is something wrong about persons who are habitually and really difficult to live with. We may explain and excuse our incompatibility by a variety of specious and flattering ingenuities; but usually people hard to live with are guilty of serious moral deficiencies. The more we imbibe the spirit of Our Master, the more shall we win the good opinion of those with whom we live. If when we finish our friends can write for our epitaph, 'He was easy to live with,' little more need be said.—Selected.

"The Village Of In-the-Skies."

"The Village of In-the-Skies" is not an African village, though there are many Africans among the inhabitants of that city. "Musoko wa mu diulu," literally translated back into English, "The Village of In-the-Skies," is an African name for Heaven, the city of God.

That wonderful city of Heaven as pictured in the Bible presents the sharpest kind of contrast to an African village. It is a durable, indestructible, ever-lasting city, while every African village is a temporary, changing, decaying thing, fighting its pitiful losing battle with the elements every year. Pouring rains wash down the mud walls, violent winds pull off the thatched roofs, white ants eat up the wooden posts, lightning and fire come to destroy what wind and ants and rain have left. An African village is an excellent example of things temporal which pass away. This year, a house may be new and in a way attractive. Next year the roof looks ragged. Then the walls begin to weaken and break, then the tenant moves out to a new structure. The roof blows away, the posts decay, the rain beats down the broken mud walls, the grass springs up, and the place of that house shall know it no more, neither shall the passersby.

"The Village of In-the-Skies" is beautiful. What magnificence that wonderful village does possess! There are trees there, undying trees, and doubtless yet more beautiful than palm or pine, oak or mango, or maple, and a clear crystal river of unpolluted water, where no crocodiles lurk to destroy those who choose to delight themselves beside the still waters. As African villages, on the contrary, are the very antithesis of beauty, the "Village of In-the-Skies," with its order and beauty is a thing of great price.

"The Village of In-the-Skies" is holy and happy. And its holiness makes the unholiness and unspeakable iniquity of an African village look yet more exceeding sinful. The crookedness of the paths about an African village is but a reflection of the perverseness of the human hearts that know not God. What darkness that can be felt and what misery that cannot be told there are in the average African village. What a relief it will be to multitudes to be eternally freed from such environment. No polygamy, no intrigues, no child marriages, no slavery, no cannibalism, no extortion, no fears, no liars, no thieves. No graves, no "madilolos," or wallings for the dead, no tears. What a happy village Heaven is!

Do you wonder that two of the most popular hymns in the Buluba Hymn Book are the one beginning, "Nengimbe musambu wa musoko muimpe, Musoko wa Nzambi kulu" (I will sing a song of the village beautiful, the village of God in the skies), and the other, "Musoko udi muimpe kulu" (A village there is beautiful in the skies). These joyful hymns are sung over and over again, and God only knows what wells of satisfaction and comfort they have been to suffering souls serving God in uncongenial surroundings in numbers of wicked, and ugly and unhappy African villages.—Rev. J. H. Longenecker, in Christian Observer.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Nest in the Spout.

The Sparrow hath found her an house and the Swallow a nest in the House of God that standeth hard by to where I and Keturah we live, and the Pigeons also, they dwell there, and prosper and are happy.

Now in the summer time, when rains are infrequent, they make their nests in every old place imaginable, and lay their eggs and hatch their young. And there is a window high up that overlooked a place where a Gable projecteth and there is an Eavespout and a Downspout. And the Downspout hath an Iron Grating over the top inside the Eavespout. And a Pigeon builded her nest above that grating. And it was a cool and well-ventilated nest.

And I and Keturah we saw it, and we said, That pigeon taketh large chances.

But the latter rains delayed, and the little birds hatcheth, and they lay there shockingly Nude on top of the few sticks of a nest that were on the top of the grating in the Eavespout. And the Mother Pigeon brought them food, and I began to think that they would grow and get away before the Rains came and the storms blew.

But there came a night when there was a Storm.

And I wakened and Keturah wakened also.

And I knew what was in the mind of Keturah.

And I said, It is foolish of us to be troubled about it. There are Pigeons enough, and they increase until they be a Nuisance. Nevertheless, I am not happy to think of them in that place.

And I rose, and I went into the House of God. And the tempest was beginning to break, and the lightning flashed.

And I stretched forth my hand, and took the frightened little things, and I brought them inside. And I carried them out, and place them in a sheltered corner on the ground under where the nest had been. And the Mother Pigeon found them there and sheltered them till the storm was past.

Now that did not hurt me, nor greatly interrupt my sleep. For though I was wetted in the rain, yet Keturah had my Bath-Towel ready, and I was soon dry, and I went to sleep sooner than I should have done if I had thought of those little birds drowning in the cold rain.

And I said unto myself, It is not that the Pigeons are worth it, if a man were to value his time and his labor; but there are other measures of value than those that may be estimated in cash.

And I said, I will never deny that in the sight of God we men are worth saying.—Selected.

The Fire and Cloud.

Lend me, O Lord, Thy softening cloud,
When sunshine makes a heaven below,
Lest in the desert I be proud,
Forgetful whence the sunbeams flow.

Lend me, O Lord, Thy fire divine,
When darkness hides Thee from my soul,
Lest in the desert I repine,
Forgetful whence the shadows roll.

Be Thou the shade on my right hand,
When in my strength I stand alone;
And when in night I lose the land,
Be Thou my star, my guiding One.

Cloud of the Cross, Light of the Crown,
With eve and morn my path beset,
Let pride on Calvary's steep lie down,
Let faith arise on Olivet.

Thy cloud that meets me in the day
Is but the shadow of Thy wing,
Concealing from my sight the way
That faith alone may homeward bring.

The fire that meets me in the night
Is the full brightness of Thy face,
Revealing through my tears a light
That leads me to Thy dwelling-place.

The Prophets.

Eugenie du Maurier.

The prophets were men, chosen of God, to foretell things that were to take place. They were teachers, too, who told the people the punishment that followed sin; and they begged those who were sinful to ask pardon of God. Isaiah was the prophet who foretold that Christ would give sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the dumb, and that He would help the poor and crippled.

Daniel is one of the prophets children love to hear about. He was thrown into the den of lions, because he was not afraid to let the people know that he prayed to God and trusted Him, and, after spending a whole night in the lion's den, came out unharmed. He chose to follow the law of God and to please Him rather than to please the rich and sinful. To Daniel was given the knowledge of when Christ would come. The angel Gabriel came to him in a vision and from that vision Daniel knew when Christ would come, and how He would die. All this Daniel told to the people.

Ezekiel was the prophet who foretold that Christ would raise the dead to life.

The last and greatest of the prophets was John the Baptist. It was of him that Jesus said: "There hath not risen among them that are born of women a greater than John the Baptist." His mission was to prepare the people for the true knowledge that Jesus was the promised Saviour. Saint John had spent many years in the desert when God called him to preach. He said to the multitude: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He recognized Jesus and exclaimed: "Behold the Lamb of God." John, who had baptized Jesus, was put in prison for telling a wicked king what a sinful man he was for not keeping God's law. Even while in prison John continued to hear of Jesus, by sending messengers to ask questions. At last he sent to ask if He were indeed the Christ. Jesus gave to the followers of John that answer as it is given in the Gospel: "The blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead rise again, the poor have the gospel preached to them." All this was but another way of saying that He had done the things which the prophets had foretold. Then Jesus added: "Blessed is he that is not offended in me."

John was in prison. John was to die a cruel death because he braved the anger of a wicked king. None went to comfort him.

Jesus knew He was to be betrayed by a trusted friend, and was to die like a criminal. But blessed is he who is brave enough to follow Jesus even when that following means prison and death.

The Twins Build a Dog House.

One lovely morning Sally washed the breakfast dishes while Sam went on an errand to Grandfather Holcomb's. Since grandfather lived just across the road, Sally hurried. She was hanging up the dish towel when Sam came back carrying a number of boards.

"What are you going to do with those boards?" she asked.

"Granny gave them to me," explained Sam, "and I am going to make a dog house."

"A dog house?" replied Sally, "what for?"

"Well," said Sam as he took a handful of nails from his pocket, "maybe we shall get a dog; lots of people do, so I'm going to get a house ready. Granny said that she'd save all her bones for us too."

Sally was delighted. "O Sam!" she cried. "Then all we need is the dog!"

"That is all," answered Sam, "and I've got eight cents saved and you have eleven."

"But," said Sally, "we need a bicycle ever so much more than we need a dog, so that Billy can ride to and from Mr. Knapp's farm; you know we do, Sam."

"Of course we do," agreed Sam, "but that needn't keep us from making a dog house. I'm going to get the saw and the hammer."

Mr. Knapp's farm was two miles away, and Billy, the twins' twelve-year-old brother, went there to work every morning and returned in the afternoon in time to deliver evening papers. It was a long, hot walk to take every day in addition to his working, and mother thought perhaps Billy wasn't strong enough to keep it up all summer. Some afternoons when grandfather wasn't busy he would hitch up old Fan and fetch him, but every one thought that Billy really should have a bicycle.

The twins were interested in everything that Billy had to tell them about the big farm, especially Lassie, the big collie dog and her six puppies.

"You see," explained Sam, sawing a board in two, "I'm not worrying about getting a dog yet; we shouldn't have a place for him now anyway, but such things do happen, you know they do, Sally."

They sawed and hammered away, and mother came to see what it was all about. She couldn't stay long, for she had to get back to her sewing, but she thought that it was a good plan to make a house and said that, even if they didn't get a dog, the house would be fine for Biddy Speckle and her brood when the eggs were hatched.

When the house was nearly done—and it was really a good job for two eight-year-old children—grandfather came. He inspected their work and said that he had some hinges that they might use for a door. Then he told them that Mr. Knapp wanted him to do some work at the farm,—grandfather was a carpenter,—and he thought that, if he started before dinner, he might get through in time to bring Billy back with him.

"How should you two like to go with me?" he asked. "Ask your mother and get your hats; I will ask granny to pack enough lunch for you."

After agreeing most joyfully the twins raced to the house, and by the time old Fan and grandfather and the lunch basket were ready they were ready too.

Old Fan jogged along until by and by they came to the farm. There were the big rambling farmhouse, the great red barns, the rather untidy-looking barnyard. There were tall trees and bright flowers and chickens, ducks and doves everywhere.

"Did you ever see a lovelier place to play?" whispered Sally as Mr. Knapp, a big, jolly, red-faced man, came up to them.

"Play anywhere you please, children," said Mr. Knapp. "I don't think that you can get hurt."

"May we see the puppies?" asked Sally timidly.

"Of course," answered Mr. Knapp, and he led the way to the barn. There in a clean box stall lay beautiful, gentle Lassie and round her played her puppies.

"Oh, the darlings," crooned Sally. She sat down on the floor and lifted one into her lap. "What's this one's name?" she asked.

"That's Bob; he's the biggest of the lot," answered Mr. Knapp.

"And who is this?" asked Sam, patting the smallest one, who sniffed at his bare toes.

"That's Scamp," answered Mr. Knapp. "He's always getting into mischief and leading others into it too. He got into a trap set for a rat the other day and lost two toes."

Then Mr. Knapp and grandfather went away, and the twins played happily with the puppies.

Just before dinner a big automobile drove into the yard, and Mr. Knapp and a gentleman came to the box stall. The gentleman picked up one puppy after another, and the children could hardly believe their eyes and ears when he said that he would give Mr. Knapp fifty dollars for Bob.

"I'll take him with me on my way back this afternoon," said the gentleman, and he and Mr. Knapp left the barn.

"Fifty dollars!" gasped Sally. "Let's not play with them any more. We might hurt them; and besides, there are so many other things to see."

Soon Billy came, and they all ate their dinner under a big shady tree. Mr. Knapp brought out a pitcher of cool milk for them.

After dinner grandfather and Billy went back to their work, and the twins went to play in a big shed near the barn. Old wagons and sleighs and machinery were stored there, and back against the wall where it was almost hidden by cobwebs they found a bicycle.

"It's a perfectly good one, Sally," cried Sam excitedly, "a splendid one!"

They wheeled it out, and Sam and Sally took turns trying to balance themselves on it. They pretended to take a sleigh ride in an old cutter and were having an altogether happy time when Mr. Knapp came and asked whether they knew where Bob was.

"He's gone, and so has Scamp," said Mr. Knapp. "The man who bought Bob may be back any time after him, and I must find him."

"We'll look," said Sam.

"We'll be sure to find him," said Sally.

They ran here and there about the yard and at last Sally shouted: "There is Scamp, Mr. Knapp, right over there behind the barn by that pile of lumber."

They all hurried over to where Scamp was sniffing at a hole in the plank.

"Why," gasped Mr. Knapp, "that's where the old well is!"

Sally picked up Scamp, and Mr. Knapp pulled away the plank and looked in. A pitiful whimper came from the well, and deep down in it they could see a small dark wet head and two tiny forefeet resting on some rubbish.

"He'll drown," said Mr. Knapp. "We haven't a ladder long enough to reach the bottom. Besides I'm too heavy to climb it if we had, and all the men are in the field."

"Couldn't I do something?" asked Sam. He was winking to keep back the tears, and Sally was sobbing into Scamp's soft coat.

"I have an idea," said Mr. Knapp and he hurried away to the barn. Soon he was back, and grandfather came, too.

"I wonder," he continued, knotting a new rope about the handle of a big wooden pail. "I wonder, Sam, if you would be afraid to go down in this and get him."

"N-not if grandfather will help hold the rope," answered Sam.

Grandfather said that he would hold it with both hands; so Sam climbed into the big wooden pail, and Mr. Knapp and grandfather lowered him carefully down into the well until he could reach Bob. He picked up the shivering, dripping puppy, and they were quickly drawn up.

"We'll fill that well up tomorrow," said Mr. Knapp, covering the opening with several new planks.

He took the cold, wet puppy and carried him back to the box stall, where Bob snuggled up to the soft warm coat of his mother. Sally put Scamp down, and he licked his shivering little brother.

Mr. Knapp watched them for a minute and then asked: "How would you two like to have Scamp? You deserve something for saving Bob, to say nothing of the fifty dollars he is worth."

"Oh," breathed Sally, "to keep for our very own?"

But Sam slowly shook his head. "We should like to have Scamp, sir, but I guess, if you want to give us anything, we need the bicycle most for Billy to ride to work on."

"The bicycle! What bicycle?"

"That one," said Sam, pointing to it.

Mr. Knapp looked at the bicycle. "It's Mark's old one," he exclaimed. "Why, Billy can have it if he needs it; we haven't any use for it."

"Thank you, sir," said the twins soberly.

Sam and Sally wheeled out the bicycle.

"Aren't you going to take Scamp?" asked Mr. Knapp. His eyes were twinkling.

"Are you going to give us the puppy too?" they cried.

Mr. Knapp laughed. "Of course," he said; "no telling what mischief he'll get into next, and I'm too busy to keep watch. Besides I think you ought to have a dog."

It was a happy group that started for home a short time later. Sam and Sally and Scamp rode in the front seat with grandfather, and Billy and his bicycle rode behind. Billy whistled between his teeth as he pinched the tires and examined the brake. The twins and grandfather laughed and joked.

"We must put the door on Scamp's house," said Sally presently.

"Yes," answered Sam, "and tomorrow we shall make a house for Biddy Speckle. I think there are boards enough. I knew we ought to make a dog house, only we didn't make it soon enough!"—Youth's Companion.

The Discontented Little Spruce Tree.

A Danish Legend.

Once a discontented little spruce tree lived in a wood. The reason the little spruce tree was discontented was that it was covered from top to bottom with short, stiff little needles, though all the other trees in the wood were covered with leaves that fluttered in the wind and were never stiff and straight.

One day the little spruce tree said, "All the other trees in the wood have pretty leaves. I have only prickles. Nobody touches me. I wish I might have leaves like the others, only much prettier. I wish I might have leaves of shining gold!"

When the spruce tree awoke in the morning it was covered with leaves of gold that shone in the sunlight and brightened all the wood.

The little tree was so proud all that day that it wouldn't look at the trees with common green leaves. "No other tree has leaves like mine, and I am now the most important tree in the forest," it said in its heart. But that evening an old miser came with a huge empty sack and stole every gold leaf. Then he went away with his huge sack full of leaves and left the poor little tree naked and shivering in the moonlight.

"Oh," it said, "I wish I might have leaves of glass!"

The next morning when the little tree awoke it was covered with sparkling leaves of glass that shone like diamonds in the sun; and when the gentle winds came singing through the wood the glass leaves made tinkling music. The little tree was then prouder than ever until a wild storm came and broke the leaves into tiny bits that soon covered the ground below.

The poor little naked tree wailed with grief. "Ah, me," it said, "Now I wish I had asked for common green leaves!"

When the little tree awoke the next morning it was covered with the prettiest soft green leaves that had ever been seen in the wood; but an old goat came along and ate every one of them and the little tree was left bare again.

"Oh!" cried the little tree. "Why did I ask for gold or glass or green leaves? If only I had my old prickles back again I should be so happy!"

The next morning when the little tree awoke it was glad to find that the prickles had come back; all the dear little old straight prickles once more covered it from top to bottom. It had not realized before how comfortable the little prickles could be, or how pretty they looked. But after that the little tree was contented with its prickles, no matter how straight and stiff they were. From that day to this no little spruce tree has ever been known to ask to have its leaves changed.—Selected.

Pussy-Deer's Stolen Trip.

"There, Pussy-dear, I'm sorry to leave you, but Grandpa Tracy is ill, and Natilee, mother and I are off to his home in an hours' time. Mother says that kittens might be in the way, and so Dollie, next door, is going to keep you." With the explanation Anne embraced the black kitten serenely sleeping on the porch and hurried away to dress. Very soon everything was ready, and the big car stood waiting at the gate.

"Don't wake Pussy, Natilee," Anne said as they tipped by. "I don't want her to see us go." The little girls were comfortably seated, and soon tearing along toward the Tracy's at a rapid rate. The twenty miles were rapidly driven, and they were all happy to find Grandpa better. After finding out that Anne and Natilee began having a good time on the farm. Each morning they would visit the cows, horses and colts, making friends with all the barnyard animals. One day Anne received a card from Dollie. "We are going to stop by and see you all tomorrow," it said. Then at the bottom a postscript, "Pussy, dear is well." Natilee and Anne gasped, "Who'll keep Pussy-dear while Dollie comes?"

"Oh," comforted Anne, after thinking for a moment, "she's only coming for a day, you see!" Natilee and herself then began planning a happy visit for Dollie. Bright and early the next morning up rolled the car with their little friend and her parents. Mrs. Sams jumped out, lifting carefully a basket by her side.

"This is something for Grandpa Tracy," she said. Anne took it, and as she did so something inside began to move.

"It's alive!" she cried in astonishment, but Dollie's mother shook her head. Just then, as if to assert that her little mistress was quite right, there came a clear "m-e-o-w" from under the cover of the basket. In an ecstasy of delight the children knelt and opened it quickly, and Pussy-dear, black and merry as any one after her stolen drive, jumped out.

"You precious kitty!" Anne said. "You just had to find a way to come, and now that Grandpa Tracy is getting well, you can stay, too, for a nice visit and change of air."

Every one joined together in a great laugh, while Mrs. Sams remembered that she had left the basket open to put something extra in just before the car came to the door, and, hurrying in, closed it without looking inside again.

"We are so glad," said both Anne and Natilee, clapping their hands as they led the way happily. Pussy-dear was in the procession also, enjoying the frolic as much as any of the guests.—Kathleen Hay, in Child's Gem.

No One Can Do Your Work.

No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I have come into the world to do! He may do a higher work, a greater work, but he can not do my work. Obituaries

MRS. OLIVE CARY MacDONALD SMITH. Died, in Naples, March 11, 1924, OLIVE CARY MacDONALD, wife of Chard Powers Smith, of New York, and only child of Gordon MacDonald and Belle Cary MacDonald, late of Montgomery, Ala. She was the great niece of the late Col. John B. Cary and of the late Col. W. Gordon McCabe.

Living as a child in Montgomery, later in Cambridge, Mass. (where she graduated from Radcliffe in 1914), and for shorter periods in New York, and different parts of Europe, she never settled permanently in Virginia, but the love of the old State and of her "kith and kin" there, instilled by her mother, was a part of her intense and radiant personality. As a broad culture distinguished her mind, so gallantry and tenderness glorified her spirit, and it was meet, in remembrance of her lifelong devotion, that she should be brought back from across the seas to sleep in Hollywood on the James.

MRS. W. GORDON McCABE.

MRS. LOUISE FAUNTLEROY SEABROOK Just at dawn, on Good Friday, April 18, 1924, that day on which we commemorate the death of the world's Redeemer, the beautiful spirit of MRS. LOUISE FAUNTLEROY SEABROOK passed from this earthly life to that "long, sweet life, unmarked by years, one bright unending morrow." Born in Staunton, Va., daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Archibald M. Fauntle-roy.

For several years an invalid, separated from home and friends, she had resided in Albuquerque, New Mexico, where she died. Highly gifted by nature, of rare beauty of character, she was tenderly beloved by relatives and friends, to whom, as well as to herself, this separation was most painful. But with heroic Christian fortitude and patience, a shining example to those around her, she bore both this separation and her bodily suffering and illness. Now, all suffering ended, she has passed to her heavenly home, "beyond this land of woe, where trials never come nor tears of sorrow flow."

She leaves to mourn their loss two little sons, several brothers and sisters, and a large circle of friends. Interment in the family lot Thursday, April 24th, at 2:30 o'clock, Mount Hebron Cemetery, Winchester, Virginia.

Who Sat Beside Mother?

"Mother, hasn't old Miss Jones a funny voice when she sings? I 'most laughed out loud when I heard that squeaky sound."

Little Mary Marsh was tripping home from church between her father and mother. She felt like a very good little girl, for she sat quietly through the long sermon (at least, it seemed long to Mary), and sung out of mother's Hymn Book, and had bowed her head at prayers. Another reason that Mary was satisfied with herself was that she had on her new dress and her Sunday hat. She had looked at all the little girls near her in church, and had decided that none of them had on as nice clothes as she had.

QUALITY—SERVICE.

"I like to come to church," Mary said to herself, "when I've got a new dress to wear."

And then she had found Miss Jones' squeaky singing very funny, as she said on her way home.

But instead of answering her question and saying, "Oh, yes, Miss Jones' singing was very funny," Mary's mother asked the little girl a question: "What were you thinking about, Mary, while you were singing so nicely off my Hymn Book?"

"Why?" Mary exclaimed in surprise.

"Were you thinking about the dear Lord as you sang, and how He wants to come into our hearts by His Spirit, and make us love what is pure and bright?" asked Mrs. Marsh.

Mary did not answer for a minute; she was thinking. Then, as she was a truthful little person, she said, with a queer half-smile: "No, mamma; I was thinking that if I couldn't sing any better than Miss Jones, I wouldn't sing at all."

"And how about the prayer time, when you bowed your head; were you trying to lift up your heart and ask God to make you His obedient child?"

"No," said Mary, her little face getting red, "I opened my eyes and counted the tacks in the carpet. Do you think God was mad with me, mother?"

"Oh, no," answered her mother, smiling. "He knows what a little girl you are, but I think He was sorry you were not at church."

"Not at church!" cried Mary. "Why, mother, I was sitting beside you all the time."

"Yes; but I don't think God counts where our bodies are. He is always seeing our spirits; and when we go to church and don't lift up our hearts to God, the place where we sit looks empty to Him."

Mary walked along very soberly for awhile, and then, brightening suddenly, she said: "I 'spect God saw Miss Jones at church today."

"Yes," Mary's father said, thinking it was time for him to have a part in the conversation; "and I have an idea that her squeaky voice made a beautiful sound by the time it got to God's ear."

They had reached home, and nothing more was said about church right then. But Mary made up her mind that God was going to see a whole little girl, body and spirit, too, sitting beside her mother next Sunday.—Pearls for Little Ones.

The Son of God is dressed like a servant going round washing the feet of Judas. Have you ever served at all? Are you humble enough to serve, or are you looking for the best place? When you do anything, are you very sore if you are not noticed? Are you trying to do the noticed work, and leaving somebody else to do the unnoticed work? "I am among you as he that serveth" said Our Lord. From that moment personal service becomes the distinguishing mark of a Christian.—Bishop Winnington-Ingram.

ENRICHMENT THROUGH DIFFERENCE

A meeting of the Church Congress is a valuable experience as a stretching exercise for the mind. It puts one through a course of intellectual gymnastics in which the movement of one's own thought must for a time follow the very unaccustomed movements of somebody else's. Whether by way of agreement or resistance, it calls unusual mental muscles into play. It is a good help toward staving off the stiffness of premature intellectual old age.

Consider, as illustration, the Congress held last week in Boston. Not even the most stodgy and complacent person could sit through its sessions without having his ideas limbered. No matter how "set" he might prefer to be, he was taken in hand by exponents of opposite views, who politely but firmly pulled him in different directions. His mental joints might creak, but the blood would flow with a more tonic current. Shall we Discontinue Making Creeds a Requisite of Church Membership?" he heard the question asked, and there was not to be one answer only. Instead, Dr. Foley, of the Philadelphia Seminary, with his incisive thinking and his delightfully lucid speech, gave the reasons why he thought such use of the Creeds should be discontinued; and Bishop Hall, of Vermont, promptly followed by an equally vigorous statement as to why he thought it should not. "Is the Language of the Conciliar Decrees Relevant to Modern Thought?" Yes, said Professor Frank Gavin; no, said Professor Kirsopp Lake. What is "the Christian Approach to the Solution of Industrial Problems?" Mr. William H. Barr, President of the National Founders Association, had one idea about that; the Rev. John Howard Melish had another, and Miss Mary Van Kleeck had another still; and meanwhile the listener was dull indeed if he did not have the impulse to construct for himself some more definite idea than he had had before.

We need in our Church, and never more than at this present time, the discipline and development which come from hearing men who represent precisely those ideas which we may happen to like least. In a period of controversial discussion especially, men tend to draw apart into little like-minded groups. They preen their own favorite ideas in the congenial atmosphere of general agreement. They confirm themselves in the notion that they and their friends are all right and the other people all wrong. It may be a pleasing delusion, but it is decidedly an unhealthy one, and may be subject to a rude awakening. It saves dignity to awake more gradually, by deliberately beginning to open one's ears to what the other person has to say.

In James M. Williams' "Principles of Social Psychology," there is an unvarnished but nevertheless useful description of a certain type of clergyman who "is disturbed by the suggestion of doubts from without rather than by doubts from within, and develops a series of arguments with which he answers objections from without, and which serve also to quiet doubts which may happen to arise from within. Thus he tranquilizes himself by developing a closed system of, to him, logically perfect ideas. He assumes that he is a representative of God on earth, and that, as such, it is not necessary for him to THINK. All truth is absolute truth that has been revealed by God to His priesthood, and his attitude is one of worshipful acceptance of the revelation. This he passes on to his people, with the arguments therefor, and seeks to develop in them an attitude like his own. Thus tranquilized by the logically complete circle of ideas, the intellectual impulses become quiescent."

It is to be hoped that the type of clergyman—or of layman either—who has become so satisfied with his religious formulas, that it is henceforth "not necessary for him to think," is rare; but, as a matter of fact, it may well be suspected that all of us have a streak of that tendency in us here and there. At some point or other we have established our minds in a complacent fixity; and, if we are not to become fossilized, those may precisely be the points at which we need to have our ideas broken up by some healthy questioning.

But the experience of attendance at a meeting of the Church Congress does not result only in making one's thought more flexibly alive. It does that, but it also does something more. If it loosens the tight knots of narrow and prejudiced thinking, it also strengthens the bonds of more fundamental convictions. It is impossible to listen to the earnest messages of men of opposite types of Churchmanship, striving in mutual courtesy to set forth the truth as they see it, without feeling that there is a deeper conviction underneath their different ideas upon which they all alike are standing. During the Church Congress in Boston it was impressive to see how naturally and simply men who had just been speaking on opposite sides some subject, such for example as the relevancy today of the language of the Creeds, would turn to sing the same hymn out of the same book. "The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord" and "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun" called out the same impulse of devotion from them both.

Perhaps that holds for us a suggestion as to the richest value of the ancient Creeds. Often today they are so used as to make them an instrument of cleavage, instead of the bond of faith which they ought to be. That is what happens when men insist that their articles shall bear a fixed and rigid interpretation. Immediately there is division—just as there would be with reference to the hymns—if anybody thought of doing the same thing there. If nobody were allowed to sing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" who did not first give a thoroughly correct statement of belief on "the Stem of Jesse's Rod," nor to sing "Rock of Ages" without defining "the water and the blood" which should "be of sin the double cure," the ranks of the singers of the hymns would be very much reduced. But we all sing together because we know that the one thing big enough to care about is that we should all pour out unitedly our devotion to Jesus Christ; and when we remember that the Creeds also can be treated not as hard catechisms, but as the supreme music of the Church's faith, then we know that men of different interpretations can go on saying the Creeds together, just as they are doing now.

A MEETING OF MANY MINDS

The Church Congress, Assembled in Boston, Seeks the Truth Through Differences.

By Special Editorial Correspondence.

Marked by an excellent program, and admirable local arrangements, the jubilee session of the Church Congress, which was founded fifty years ago, drew together in Boston from April 29 to May 2 a group of clergy and laity for open discussion of the most vital subjects now occupying the mind of the Church. The entire proceedings of the Congress will shortly be put forth in a published volume, and in the meantime a partial report can do scant justice to the value of the papers which were read. The historical address, for example, which was delivered at the opening session by Dr. Roland Cotton Smith, was so brilliant a piece of research and expression that it became the continuing subject of enthusiastic comment; yet its length prohibits the publication of it in the Southern Churchman. We shall give to our readers the paper read by Bishop Hall in the discussion on "Shall We Discontinue Making Creeds a Requisite of Church Membership?" and we hope to print also Dr. Foley's paper with its dramatically opposite answer to the same question.

Bishop Lawrence's Address.

In his address of welcome to the Congress on Tuesday evening, April 29, Bishop Lawrence said:

"Within the past few months there has been a lull in the public debate. Headlines on fundamentalism and modernism, on the inerrancy of the Scriptures or the fact of the Virgin birth, no longer greet us at the breakfast table. But most of the newspapers and laymen and many of the clergy have not really reached down to the fundamental issue.

"The real issue, which lies far deeper than the immediate settlement of these doctrinal questions, is whether the Christian Church is to be a Church wherein there is large liberty of thought, opinion and interpretation; or whether the Church is to be even more than ever broken up into sects wherein each contains only those people who think and believe just alike; whether in such an historic Church as ours the layman is to have reasonable liberty of interpretation, or whether he is to be limited in his interpretation to those of his bishop, his rector or the general sentiment about him. I have singled out the laymen, for I believe that they need to be aroused to the issue. Those men and women who say, 'I know nothing about these things—that is my rector's business; what he thinks is, I guess, good enough for me,' are playing into the hands of doctrinal and spiritual servitude.

"There is not a bishop, priest or layman of this Church who interprets each article of the Creed as he interpreted it ten or twenty years ago. The critical question is how far can one go in his change of interpretation and remain loyal to the faith. It is just here that the question of the method of testing arises. How are you going to decide when a man in his progress of interpretation has crossed the line of orthodoxy of loyalty, and entered the domain of heresy and disloyalty?

"One of two methods is open to the Church. The first is by law, by trial under the law. That is an historic method, definite, orderly, and sure to bring a result. The Church has its constitutional order for such a trial. If any one of us believes a clergyman to be a heretic or disloyal because of his use of some form of ritual which we believe to be contrary to the standards of the Church, we may call him disloyal, and set going the canonical processes toward a trial. We are then doing what is consistent and under law. The verdict of the court will decide as to whether our charge is right or wrong, whether he is a heretic and disloyal or not; and also whether he should be excommunicated or remain in the Church.

"But experience in the past half-century has given both clergy and laity the impression that although that man's case is settled, the question of doctrine is not settled; for thought, forms of expression and interpretations change and develop in such a way that the same problem turns up in an awkward way in another form or personality.

"Again, every one knows that an ecclesiastical trial gets the thought, interest and work of the Church out of perspective, and exaggerates the importance of what may be secondary or even trivial. Hence there has arisen a general sentiment that ecclesiastical trials in matters of doctrine and ritual are not advisable. Take any group of Churchmen today, be they bishops, priests or laymen, and if the question arises, the almost unanimous answer is, 'Avoid a trial by all means unless conditions become intolerable.'

"What, then, are we to do?" says the law-abiding Churchman. Is everybody to think and do what is wise in his own eyes? If so, we are on the way to confusion worse confounded. The fact is, and for one I believe it is a fact for which we may be very grateful, the Church has resolved itself into a spiritual, not just a legal body; wherein we are in general bound together not by decisions of courts or identical interpretations, but by bonds of a common faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and a common spirit of brotherhood; and he who is not in sympathy with the spirit finds himself spiritually outside, though he be formally within. We know men here and there who might have been tried and deposed with the eyes of the whole Church upon them, who have quietly subsided or renounced the ministry because they were not at home in it.

"Good people may cry out that there are awful risks in this. So there are awful risks in ecclesiastical trials. When we think the situation through, we discover that you must have one or the other. If we believe in the trial method, let us stand to it. But if we do not, then let us stand to that, to the principle that we of the Church are bound to each other by spiritual bonds, by a loyalty as each of us understands it to Christ and His Church. We are a family. If, then, this is understood, I want to suggest in as brief a form as I can four elements which are essential to the unity, peace and life of the Church.

Four Essentials for Peace in the Church.

1. We must have mutual confidence, confidence in each other's soundness of faith as each interprets it, in his integrity and loyalty. A family wherein the brothers and sisters call each other liars and hypocrites is no longer a family, though they live in the same house.

2. We must cultivate a broad sympathy, the habit of trying to appreciate the other man's point of view. Religious convictions reach into the very depth of men's lives and emotions; upon their faith rest their hopes in this life and that to come. Hence when their religious convictions are disputed, they are touched to the quick, and the reaction is often painful and violent. They leap to the defense of their faith, not only by standing for their position, but by knocking down the other. And a man's loyalty to his creed is often measured by the violence of his defense. Whereas he who has full confidence in his faith can afford to go slow and try to understand the other man's point of view. Perhaps the opposing disputants have essentially the same beliefs, but, as is often the case, do not understand each other's language; by tradition or local habit they are using the same words, but with different meanings.

3. Patience. It is a good rule for every clergyman or layman interested in religious subjects to read once in a while the life of a scientist or the story of one bit of scientific work. Contrast the patience of a Darwin or a Pasteur or of any student of science in the laboratory of today and realize how patiently and persistently he follows up his line of thought and experimentation, unwilling to come to a definite conclusion or conviction until all signs and acts bring him to that point, with one of us who may read two or three articles or a volume or two of theological literature, which is in harmony with our preconceived ideas, and then go forth and not only proclaim the thoughts that we have gained as truth, but question the honesty or the loyalty of those who may not agree with us.

No Christian can afford to be tentative in his deeper convictions. No one was more convicted of His faith than our Lord. On the other hand, no one of us can afford to shut his eyes intellectually or spiritually against any new ray of truth that comes to illumine or to broaden or vivify our convictions.

4. And finally, the touchstone of all sincere belief is a love of the truth and a determination to reach it. Our Lord, when accused of being false to the traditions of His elders, turned upon His accusers with the charge, "Ye seek to kill me, a man who hath told you the truth." He said, "I am the Truth."

"We must not allow any one phase of thought, be it science or philosophy, to monopolize that great title. We must believe, and we do believe, that the Holy Spirit that leads the Church into the fuller truth of Christ is the same that leads us into the fuller truth of nature and the interpretations of the Christian Creed. We cannot afford to be in a hurry to settle the questions which are now under discussion. They run very deep and demand study and the most thoughtful consideration, but for the present the matter of chief importance is that we have an atmosphere so full of mutual confidence, sympathy, patience and love of truth that we may all be led into a common spirit, and through that into a fuller knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus."

THE PERMANENT VALUE OF THE CREEDS

By the Right Reverend Arthur C. A. Hall, D. D.

THE question assigned to me is, "Shall we discontinue making creeds a requisite of church membership?" My answer is (1) No, not if we desire to retain our position in historic Christendom. From the first the Catholic Church has required a profession of belief as a condition for baptism. What we call the Apostles' Creed is a slight enlargement of the Baptismal Creed at Rome from, at any rate, the second century.

To give up this requirement might well be understood as the surrender of a definite faith. Hesitation was felt by the English bishops when application was made for the consecration of bishops for the new United States on account of our apparent loose hold upon the Creeds as shown in the omission from the Proposed Prayer Book of the Nicene Creed (not to speak of the Athanasian Hymn) and the omission from the Apostles' Creed of the clause concerning the Descent into Hell. What doubt might be entertained of our orthodoxy not only by English, but by South African or Indian or Canadian bishops if we now dropped the Creed altogether from our Baptismal service! Is this a time for creating fresh difficulties within our own communion when efforts are being made to bring about a reunion of different religious bodies? Not only would division—perhaps disruption—be caused in our Anglican fellowship, and fresh obstacles raised to union with Latin and Eastern churches, but many of the Protestant bodies would be shocked at such a proposal. Methodists, for instance, require profession of the Apostles' Creed from adults at baptism. Congregationalists of course in accordance with their fundamental principles of independence cannot have a creed (unless they are baptized into the faith of Park Street or of the New Old South); but then, however large and formidable Congregationalism may loom in Boston and New England, we may remind ourselves that after all New England is but a corner of Christendom.

2. The Creed or profession of belief, of course, does not stand alone; it is not an exclusive test of discipleship. The promise of renunciation of evil and of obedience to God's commandments always accompany the profession of belief. It is an immense pity to allow the idea of all being concentrated on belief as conditions of admission to the Christian society.

The Christian religion has its rule of life and conduct equally binding with the rule of faith. Humility, truthfulness and honesty, purity (in and out of marriage) and self-control, love and unselfish service are as much matters of Christian obligation as belief in the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Atonement, or a future life. Plain and open violation of these rules ought to be visited with the Church's discipline and suspension from Christian privileges as much as heresy.

In the Renewal of Vows, which is often made at the close of a Mission or a Retreat, all three promises of renunciation, belief and obedience are treated alike. I have often wished that something of this sort might be more frequently introduced into our public worship, at any rate in more elastic and less strictly liturgical exercises. The Creed should not be allowed to stand alone in people's minds; by itself it is an "inadequate expression of Christian allegiance."

The continual repetition of the Creed is with a view to life and conduct. We are to build up ourselves, our moral and spiritual life, on the foundations of our most holy faith, to find in it continually fresh motives for resisting temptation and for the practice of virtue. We see that we may embrace and follow; we believe that we may obey. In the long run and in general faith is a necessary element of discipleship. We must believe what Christ is and who He is, if His commandments and example are to be unhesitatingly obeyed and followed, and His help to be sought and relied on.

The central place of the promise of Belief, following that of Renunciation and preceding the promise of Obedience, has often been pointed out, and its significance. The enemies that we renounce would be too strong for us, and God's commandments that we promise to obey would be too difficult, were it not for the support given by our belief. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

3. But why, it is asked, cannot the Church be content with a much simpler confession of faith, such for instance as that reported to have been made by the Eunuch baptized by Philip the Evangelist (I need not discuss the genuineness of the text), "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God"? Why insist on the elaborate definiteness of the Creeds? Well, there is nothing very elaborate in the terminology or thought of the Apostles' Creed. But, more generally, we must answer that the simpler Apostolic and Scriptural confession cannot remain sufficient when its meaning has been evacuated or questioned. It was not for love of defining that the Church elaborated the Creed, but only to safeguard the meaning of the simpler formulas, when the force of these had been explained away. The line taken by Athanasius in word and action is enough to refute this apprehension. When words have been emptied of their meaning, the coin, as it were, debased, fresh terms to safeguard the old meaning have to be found. When it was said Jesus was the Son of God as we all are His sons, sharing in some degree His being, the Church was obliged to add or prefix the word "only," the only Son of God; and when this declaration of unique sonship was explained away by Arius by the declaration that Christ was God's Son, in a unique sense as being the first of all created beings, higher than the angels, but still Himself created, the Church was forced, in order to guard her belief, to add such expressions as those of the Nicene Creed. "Begotten not made," "of one essence or being with the Father," internal to the Divine Being and therefore of necessity coeternal with the Father. Arius taught that the Son of God had come into being out of non-existence, that "once He was not." No, replied the Church, His generation is a law of the Divine Life, rather than an event in time, however remote.

One cannot go behind (in the sense of ignoring) discussions and controversies when once these have arisen. What was a perfectly sufficient statement before questions were raised may become quite inadequate afterwards. The claim to be "American," sufficient before double or divided allegiance was defended, may need supplementing afterwards. So the fourth and fifth centuries supplement the first; the Creeds and Councils guard the Sense of Scripture.

4. Undoubtedly the Creed contains truths into the full meaning of which we have to grow; there are phrases that need explanation, like the Descent into Hell, or the Session at God's right Hand. But is not this true of other yaws? The exact meaning of "the world" as a spiritual enemy certainly requires interpretation. "The devil and his works" would, I am afraid, require and receive a good deal of explaining and explaining away by some.

All this belongs to the conception of the Church as a school of Christian instruction and training. Candidates for baptism or confirmation are not expected to be theologians, dogmatic or moral; they are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But in outline of doctrine within which their thought and life are to grow, must be accepted; surrender to the teacher's authority must precede learning and discipline. The apostle commended and thanked God for the hearty obedience of Roman Christians to the form of teaching whereunto they had been handed over for moulding of thought and life.

5. Are the "difficulties" of the Creed so great as to be a reason for its abandonment? Let it be insisted on that what we "chiefly learn" therein is belief in—entire surrender to—the Personal Living God, made known to us as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, our Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier—God, God as Man, God in men and women.

Let it be shown that the truths we profess to believe about the operation of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are not dry doctrines, but facts telling of the accomplishments of His purpose for us—the life and death of the incarnate Son, His sympathy with us in all our experiences from the cradle to the grave and beyond; His conquest of death, not the mere escaping from it; the provision of the Holy Church, with its fellowship and ministries of grace; the promise of cleansing here and of perfected life hereafter.

These are not dry doctrines, nor are they mere facts and historical events. Each clause (I quote the Cambridge pronouncement) has its "underlying religious meaning"—not now for the first time "discovered," nor separable or in contra-distinction from the literal fact believed.

For us the Eternal Son was born in our nature, that we might be reborn in Him; born of the substance of the Virgin Mary, His mother, by the power of the Holy Spirit, without spot of sin, or inherited taint, that there might be a real fresh start for human kind; for us He died and rose again that we with Him might die to sin and rise to newness of life in fellowship with God. The faith embodied in the Creed, the Creed embodying the faith, is something to be learned, and loved, and lived. Let the Creed be repeated with joyous exultation as a hymn of praise to our Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, into Whose Name we have been baptized.

CHRISTIAN BROAD CHURCHMANSHIP

By the Reverend James Sheerin

Part III

ONE of the paradoxes of that radical and brainy Anglican Broad Churchman, Benjamin Jowett, was an utterance that ran something like this: "There is more inspiration in the King James version of the Bible than there is in the Hebrew original!" Hebraically, the verse is confusing and scarcely justifies the translation, but I know of no finer sentiment in the Old Testament than that of the ninth verse of the Eighty-ninth Psalm, which the Prayer Book makes read thus: "Thy truth, most mighty Lord, is on every side." A little faith in that inspiring fact is needed today by those who are frightened at the results of the new and passing interpretations of essential truth. It is a blessed thing to be free, not indeed from legitimate research, but from the need of anxious or bitter debate. It is a more blessed thing to be able to preserve one's sense of what may be called a singing faith in the midst of sordid controversy, or in the presence of restatements of the old faith. If it happened that denials of the Virgin Birth and the physical resurrection would also mean that all the beauty of painting and poetry, and all the glorious aspirations of music, are to be eliminated from the Christian religion, we would surely be of all men most miserable! Against this unhappy outcome, however, two comforting facts remain: First, we are by no means sure as yet that, in spite of all the tumult and the shouting, it is necessary to eliminate any of those ancient and beloved beliefs; and, second, even if they should have to be changed or reduced, it will still be possible to fling about the truths that succeed them, or the eternal facts they stood for, a new and better halo of devout beauty, either in music or art. If Broad Churchmanship of the radical kind cannot do this, it is doomed to dismal failure. The "old, old story of Jesus and His love" must always be the centre of any Modernism worthy of the name Christian.

A few present-day Modernists seem able to do this. Among them I should set high Dr. Bowie, whose words ring with gospel fervor in spite of his scientific leanings. Phillips Brooks succeeded in helping conservative and radical alike because his breadth did not eliminate "the little town of Bethlehem" where "the hopes and fears of all the years met." This great preacher of Christianity was never so broad or so intellectual as to cease singing like a child:

"No ear may hear His coming,
But in this world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive Him still,
The dear Christ enters in."

It was also Phillips Brooks who laid down, in his lectures on toleration, a simple platform of true Broad Churchmanship which is as workable today as it was forty years ago. To him it was mainly the duty of extending brotherly sympathy from the solid foundation of a sure faith. His big arms of brotherly love included four concentric circles, as he called them. There is all humanity to be admired and loved. There is religion of whatever name. There is Christianity of every kind. And there is one's own particular Church. The true Christian should include all four. No one of them should be left out. The breadth of Phillips Brooks was never so lofty as to make him scorn his own Church. He was never like Father Stanton, leading English Catholic, who proudly exclaimed at the time of the Pan-Anglican Congress, "I thank God I never was an Anglican!" Nor was he like that distinguished American clergyman, who, emulating the sneering manner of commodore Vanderbilt's "the public be damned," says in mistaken breadth, "Episcopalians be damned! I am working only for the outsider!" The great need of the moment is perhaps a species of Churchman who will not be ashamed of being an Episcopalian while keeping an open and friendly mind to everything worth knowing and gaining in any other direction.

From the character of certain fathers of the American Revolution who, though they were officials in Episcopal churches, have been often described as skeptics, there could be made an admirable composite picture of an American Churchmanship which would be vastly attractive and helpful to the people everywhere, and which is of the very essence of that intangible religion which has many times induced strong-minded men of the world to lean without always knowing why towards the Episcopal Church. As one cornerstone of this American Churchmanship, I should take George Washington—gentlemanly, firm, sedate, a man of few words, diffident as to dogmatic utterance, but absolutely reliable in what he did say or do. For a second stone I should take Benjamin Franklin—self-made man of the world, sane, practical, clear-headed, moral and efficient, with a wholesome commonsense that carried him through printing shops and royal courts to the heights of useful greatness. For a third I should take Thomas Jefferson as typical of the dreamer—call him either religious mystic or political reformer—whose material buildings indicate his love of order and beauty, whose great Virginia University reveals his belief in thorough education, whose Declaration of Independence showed him an irrepressible social idealist. Perhaps Patrick Henry could be added to this list for patriotic impulse and beauty of verbal expression, while John Marshall would continue the Washington strain of upright character, bolstered by profound interpretation of fundamental principles. Alexander Hamilton could be included for cool reasoning untroubled by mere passing emotions. Then, as crowning all, old William White, unpretentious saint of the Church, careless of mere outward display, devoted to an every-day Christian character which stood the test of years, ready to cooperate with all good men, Christian or not, so long as the public good was furthered. The theologian's points we quarrel about today did not much concern these great men. Not one of them probably ever gave a second thought to such doctrines as the Virgin Birth or the resurrection of the body. Considerations of the other world they usually left to a merciful God. It was not that they did not believe in these things, but that life and the duty of the hour seemed greater and more absorbing. They lived on in their necessary environment, whether it were gay or sad—doing their bit, as the modern saying goes; helping and encouraging all with whom they came in contact, leaving thus a fairly permanent and noble state, as their enduring monument.

We may well be proud of these splendid products of the English race and religion. The true Broad Churchman never forgets them when enumerating Episcopalians, and he would emulate their achievements in character and service in such degree as his lesser endowment permits. Over and over one sees statements that Jefferson or Franklin in particular were "Atheists." Half this ignoble charge is traceable to the excessive dogmatist in the Church who will not recognize the validity of any undogmatic Churchmanship. The other half probably arises from an erroneous yet serious acceptance of that antique jest, that the Episcopal Church does not interfere with either man's religion or his politics, as though this really meant that it had no religion! Rightly understood, there is no greater truth. The simple fact is that these great men did not carry their religion on their sleeves, as emotional types do. But they were none the less profoundly religious and Episcopalian, in a noble sense very much under-estimated. A quotation from a letter of Thomas Jefferson seems fairly expressive of the attitude of all strong men who shrink from religious boastfulness or shun even the usual expressions of faith, who may be even then good Christians and "good Churchmen" in the most important sense of that much misused phrase of the over-correct:

"Say nothing of my religion," says Jefferson to the secretary of the Constitutional Convention. "It is known to myself and my God alone. Its evidence before the world is to be sought in my life. If that has been honest and dutiful to society, the religion which has regulated it cannot be a bad one."

"It is a singular anxiety that some people have that all should think alike. Would the world be more beautiful were all faces alike; were our tempers, our talents, our tastes, our forms, our wishes, aversions and pursuits cast exactly in the same mold? If no varieties existed in the animal, vegetable or mineral creation, but all were strictly uniform, Catholic and Orthodox, what a world of physical and moral monotony it would be! These are the absurdities into which those run who usurp the throne of God and dictate to Him what He should have done. May they, with all their meta-physical riddles, appear before that tribunal with as clean hands and hearts as you and I shall. There, suspended in the scales of eternal justice, faith and works will show their worth by their weight."

"I have made a wee little book which I call the Philosophy of Jesus. It is a paradigm of His doctrines, made by cutting the texts out of the book and arranging them on the pages of a blank book, in a certain order of time or subject. A more beautiful or precious morsel of ethics I have never seen. It is a document in proof that I am a real Christian; that is to say, a disciple of the doctrine of Jesus, very different from the Platonists who call me an infidel and themselves Christians and preachers of the gospel, while they draw all their characteristic dogmas from what its author never said or saw. They have compounded from the heathen mysteries a system beyond the comprehension of man, of which the Great Reformer of the vicious ethics and deism of the Jews, were He to return to earth, would not recognize one feature."

There are great utterances in this Jeffersonian quotation and none greater than the charge that men calling themselves Christians have drawn "all their characteristic dogmas from what its Author never said or saw"! In this error of dogmatists may be discerned the root cause of the unhappy divisions and failures of the Christian Church.

Few can be more aware than the writer, in concluding this essay in peacemaking, that much said or quoted belongs rather to the realms of sentiment than to the world of exact science and approved theology. Much is left unsaid that ought to have been included with a description of anything like a desirable Christian Churchmanship. No answer is attempted to some perplexing doctrinal questions which are sure to arise in spite of all that has been said. But time and space fail one, even if ability were at hand, to attempt anything like a solution of bewildering theological problems in religious metaphysic. The most that can be claimed at the end is that it is a modest effort to point the way across the desert of controversy to an oasis where weary travelers in the as yet but dimly outlined Kingdom of God may refresh themselves, with some assurance of being able to proceed a step or two further in the adventure toward the more abundant life. Meanwhile, the essential aim may chime the more readily with that great petition in poor Cranmer's Litany, which teaches us to pray not only to be delivered from all false doctrines, heresy and schism, but also from hardness of heart and contempt of God's Word and commandments. Who can say which is the most difficult work? It may be easier to get rid of false doctrines, heresy and schism than it is to live the life of Christ. At any rate, there is a perpetual need for prayerful effort to subdue that sin of sins, hardness of heart. If once that is conquered, the other task may be disclosed as not quite so difficult as had been feared.

THE CHURCH IN UGANDA.

Mr. Editor: The Bishop of Uganda, with whom I have the pleasure of stopping for a few days, returned last Thursday from a tour of three weeks through a part of his large Diocese, more than twice as large as our three Virginia Dioceses taken together. During this visitation he confirmed 2,067 of the natives. Let no one imagine that confirmation here is an easy step. It means not only ability to read, but a special religious training covering at least two years—that is, a year and a half or longer for baptism and six months for confirmation. The Diocese of Uganda has 38,544 communicants. The increase in the number for 1923 over the number for 1922 was 1,478. The increase for 1924 will be much larger. The number of baptisms, mostly of adults, in 1923 was 15,786. The number of children in the mission schools of the Church of England for the year 1923 was 137,026, an increase of 19,667 over the previous year.

I crossed Victoria, Nyanza, a week ago by steamer from Kisumu to Eutebbe, so that I have been but a short while in the so-called protectorate of Uganda. I have had many surprises in this short week. There is no church building in Virginia so large or so impressive as the cathedral here in Kampala. It is built of reddish yellow brick, with a central dome, and seats over 4,000. I went to early service yesterday in the Lady Chapel, where the language is English, and to the later service in the main body of the cathedral, where the language is Luganda. It is interesting to note, by the way, how these native languages make the changes at the beginning of the word. Buganda is the chief province of Uganda; the people are the Baganda, and the language is Luganda.

I was speaking of the surprises which meet a new visitor. They are too many to tell in a brief letter. I sat in the service yesterday behind two native girls who had on wrist watches. A number of natives rode to church on their own bicycles. Visiting one of the higher schools last week, I saw that a number of the boys had their bicycles. I have been out from Kampala in four directions in automobiles, and from what I have seen and heard I guess would be that the roads of Uganda are, on the average, ahead of our roads in Virginia.

But my intention in writing was merely to say a word about the Church's progress here. Uganda is unique among mission fields, and fortunate in not having fifty-seven varieties of missionary workers. There are only the Church of England and two branches, we may say, of the Roman Catholic Church, one branch represented by the French White Fathers, the other branch being English. It is quite different in the colony of Kenya, which lies between Uganda and the Indian Ocean. In Kenya, while the Church of England and the Scotch missions predominate, there are many different organizations at work, including the Friends, the Church of God and the Seventh-Day Adventists. I do not mean to say that the various missions in Kenya are not doing important and effective work. For they are, all of them, spreading good influences among the natives not only in direct religious teaching, but in education and in health. I only mean to say, what is a natural fact, that where the work of conversion and Christian training can be done by fewer separate organizations, the progress is likely to be more satisfactory.

I should say that the handicap to the general progress of Uganda is the unsatisfactory condition of the land question. The native chiefs are simply landlords, who exact heavy tribute from the tillers of the soil. But this is another story, and one that could be told of other lands besides Uganda.

JAMES H. DILLARD.

THE COUNTER REFORMATION.

Mr. Editor: There is a much quoted proverb—"Revolutions never go backward." Whilst the saying is not quite true, the epigram, roughly speaking, is justified, for it seems to be true that very important revolutions are never completely reversed; and yet great revolutions may encounter serious reactions which stop just short of utter reversal.

All intelligent people, Protestants, Roman Catholics and unbelievers alike, think that the religious Reformation of the sixteenth century, whether right or wrong, was an event of tremendous significance.

I am unable to take the point of view of the Church of Rome, but her intense and prolonged agitation of the Council of Trent, her repressive discipline of recalcitrants, her numerous excommunications, her vigorous employment, on occasion, of "the arm of the civil law," her accentuation of the influence of the Papacy and her flood of dialectics illustrate the importance that Church attached to the movement.

On the other hand, no person can read the history of the Reformation without being profoundly impressed with the deep thought and earnest feeling of the Reformers. And yet notwithstanding all the agony and bitterness and martyrdom and triumph of that mighty struggle we are now in the midst of a formidable Counter Reformation.

For ninety years the Church of England and the American Episcopal Church have been contending with an anti-Protestant crusade. It began in 1833 in what was known as "The Oxford Movement," amongst a group of enthusiastic students and a few professors of the University. Its adherents now call themselves "Catholic Churchmen" or "Anglo Catholics."

They have grown greatly in numbers, but far more in Romanism, especially within the last ten years; but I think it was not until the "Anglo-Catholic Congress" met in London in the autumn of 1923 that Churchmen generally realized the determination of Catholic Churchmen to undo the work of the Reformation. Every distinctive doctrine and practice of the Church of Rome, except Papal infallibility, seemed to be, more or less, favored in that assembly, not excepting a yearning for submission to the "Holy Father," as they affectionately called the Pope. The worship of the Virgin Mary was so flagrant that the Bishop of London, who was present, withdrew from the hall, presumably to signify his disapproval of the Romish heresy.

If any prominent American Catholic has condemned the recrudescence of Romanism at the Anglo-Catholic Congress it has escaped my attention. We have no reason to doubt that our ultra American Catholics heartily endorse everything that transpired there. The manifest program is to Romanize the Protestant Episcopal Church.

A symptom of the Counter Reformation appeared in the Churchman of February 22 as an item of news. It was copied from the Daily Nashville Banner. I quote a very small part of a long, elaborate account of the celebration of the anniversary of King Charles I of England.

As everybody knows, he was the one of the Stuart dynasty who, after a long reign of lawlessness, tyranny and treason, was tried by a patriotic parliamentary court, condemned and executed for his crimes.

The special feature of the strange service held in our little church at St. Andrews, Tenn., was the veneration paid to a hair of the beard of the royal convict, whom the monks of the Order of the Holy Cross call a saint and martyr.

I pass by without further comment the political depravity of the attempt to rehabilitate the character of one of the infamous Stuart Kings. As a religious function it was unique in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

"St. Andrews, Tenn.—(Special.)—With all the pomp and splendor of the ancient rites of the Episcopal Church, St. Charles' Day was celebrated in St. Andrew's Church here on January 30 by monks of the Order of the Holy Cross, who have a monastery at this place.

"The Sacrament of Confirmation was administered to a class of five by Bishop James M. Maxon, who wore his red cope and mitre. The candidates were anointed with the holy oil or chrism, after the ancient custom. This oil was specially prepared and blessed by the Bishop himself before being used.

"Father Baldwin, the celebrant, carried on a velvet cushion a relic of the Saint, a hair from the beard of King Charles enclosed in a reliquary made at the abbey of Caldey, off the coast of Wales.

"During the singing of this hymn the elements were solemnly presented and censed. Then the Bishop was censed, then the sacred ministers, the visiting clergy, the choir and congregation."

I am far from believing that all Catholic Churchmen approve of such abject superstition and slavish sentiment as the monks of the Order of the Holy Cross paraded at St. Andrews, Tenn., on "St. Charles' Day."

I recall it simply to illustrate the depths of religious degradation to which the vanguard of the Counter Reformation has sunk; and this in the twentieth century!

I cannot believe that a majority of the members of our Church who once called themselves "High Churchmen," and who are now claimed by the leaders of the Catholic party, have really become virtually Roman Catholics, and wish to overthrow the Reformation; that great religious and political revolution meant too much to the human family and particularly to the Anglo Saxon race to be surrendered without a struggle. The old-time High Churchmen, from Bishop Hopkins to Bishop Tuttle, would have followed Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley to the stake rather than have accepted what the Catholic party stands for today.

I am not impugning the sincerity of our Catholic brethren; indeed I admire their conscientiousness in refraining from submission to the Church of their passionate affection, and tarrying in a Church whose Prayer Book must be abhorrent to their devotions, only because of Rome's latest dogma, Papal infallibility, although they gladly accept the "primacy" of the Pope.

THE NEW HYMNAL: A Musical Edition. Published by the Parish Choir, Boston, under license from the Church Pension Fund. Boston. Stanhope Press.

The General Convention of 1922, by authorizing the Church Pension Fund to license the publication of musical editions of the New Hymnal, has given official authorization to any edition so licensed. The present volume will meet a real need in the Church, and without the confusion that attended the publication of the "Church Hymnal Revised," the last work for the Church of that stalwart scholar, Dr. Charles L. Hutchins. But all "Hutchins' Hymnals" bear a family resemblance; and choirs that have found the Hutchins Hymnals of 1870, 1893 and 1920 to be rich in dignified and devotional musical settings, will not be disappointed in this newest member. It is the heir, indeed, of Dr. Hutchins' latest and most ripened judgment; it lacks few tunes that appear in the Church Hymnal Revised except those that accompanied words not included in the New Hymnal; and it includes such well-loved settings as "Geneva," "O Bona Patria," Hemy's "Paradise," "Brookfield" and "Knightsbridge." The usual complement of chant settings is provided as well as plain song settings of the Morning and Evening Canticles.

There is no slur upon the scholarly edition of the New Hymnal already in use in the prediction that this volume will commend the New Hymnal to many who have hitherto found it somewhat difficult to use. No one edition could fill every need. Would it not indeed be well to have a new musical edition every few years—say about as often as the books wear out; prepared with due—but not too much—regard for the standard and familiar settings, and an open eye for the many new and fine tunes that are being written every year? What choirmaster has not one or more of his own, known to his own choir, perhaps, but never heard outside his own church walls? In this edition some of the most tuneful and least difficult melodies are of recent date.

It was a distinct purpose of the Commission that prepared the anthology adopted as the New Hymnal by the General Convention of 1916 to make ours a singing Church; and this purpose the Parish Choir edition will certainly further. The man in the pew wants to sing; but even though he holds in his hand a musical edition most thoroughly and officially authorized, if he cannot "catch" the tune he is as "straitly shut up" as Jericho was before the trumpets blew. We believe he can catch these; that the easily read topography will help him; and that many silent voices will, through the use of this musical edition, be raised to "praise God in His sanctuary."

THE IMPERIAL VOICE. By Lynn Harold Hough, Th. D., D. D. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 146. Price $1.50.

This book contains eighteen sermons on various modern topics, though not controversial, preached by its distinguished author in various notable places ranging all the way from the London City Temple to the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Detroit, of which he is the pastor. These addresses are not long, and afford much material of a useful character to preachers who are continually searching for data in preparation for special sermons. Several of the sermons were preached at baccalaureates at such prominent seats of learning as Northwestern University and the Ohio State University, and all of them were delivered in places where the speaker would feel the responsibility of being especially accurate in his statement of facts, and careful as to his choice of English.

We commend the book to ministers and lay readers.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The Young People's Fellowship Committee of Massachusetts, in their attempt to reach a greater number of young people than ever before, felt that the radio was a means of giving greater publicity to the movement and an opportunity to educate and inspire a large number who might not otherwise be reached. On the afternoon of Friday, May 2, a program was presented for this purpose from the Station WNAC, the Shepard Stores, Boston. The purpose of the Conference was given by Miss Eleanor Whipple, of the Young People's Committee, and editor of "The Fellowship," the Diocesan Fellowship paper.

"The purpose of a Conference is for the education and inspiration of those who gather together to share its messages.

"A Conference has information to spread about the subjects in hand. It offers practical helps and suggestions about the problems which are discussed and suggests improvements for methods used. New ideas are created and new thoughts stimulated. A Conference endeavors always to encourage cooperation between those interested in young people's work.

"It makes an appeal for a development of higher ideals, and better purposes, and more definite goals. It influences the desire to train for leadership. The inspiration of it all increases the interest of the people and arouses their enthusiasm for action and for serving.

"The purpose of this Young People's Conference embraces all of these things with a special use and adaptation in the field of the rapidly growing and widespread Youth Movement of the Church particularly in this nation. This Youth Movement has had its greatest advancement and widest extension within the last few years. Very marked has been the spontaneity of the formation of young people's groups throughout the country. Conferences are being held regularly in the interest of the movement.

"It is significant of the willingness of the young people to discuss and work out the big problems that confront them. It shows a readiness to volunteer to train for the responsibilities of leadership.

"Such conferences furnish programs whereby the young people, alert and interested, can conduct matters themselves and offer their services in the activities of the Church. They have developed the consciousness that there are plans for them to work out and a place for them in the Church's life.

"They realize that others should know of their purposes and work, and that others need the education and inspiration that a Conference can give.

"Their attempt to reach the outsider on a larger area of ground than that of a Conference in one place which every one could not attend has resulted in the use of the radio as a means of giving information about the Young People's Movement and what it means; showing the need for leadership for which the Church and the world are crying out; for presenting the challenge of the youth today."

The Conference opened with a prayer given by the Rev. Karl M. Block, Virginia, associate editor of the Southern Churchman.

There followed a chorus led by Miss Harriet E. Woods, of All Saints', Brookline, and assisted by the choir of the Church of the Messiah, Auburndale.

Mr. Henry S. C. Cummings, chairman of the Young People's Committee, gave an address on the Fellowship Movement and spoke as follows:

"It is indeed a very happy privilege to be speaking to the young people of Massachusetts this afternoon. A Conference such as this cannot help but carry with it a message of enthusiasm and inspiration to the many thousands interested in young people's work.

"The Fellowship Movement is an outgrowth of the war period activity, when every man, woman and child were expected and required to play some helpful part. At perhaps no other time in history was there so much need for young blood and leadership as there was during the war. At perhaps no other time in history were the efforts of these young people more appreciated or so freely given and encouraged as then. It seemed to bring out the latent maturity in youth far sooner than many believed possible. So, when the World War came to an end, it found the bulk of its citizens, its leaders, its workers among the young people of the land.

"The spirit to organize into groups for mutual counsel, for mutual inspiration and companionship, has therefore naturally spread from Church to Church, from coast to coast, and from nation to nation. The movement is characterized by an almost irresistible desire on the part of the young people to play an active and useful part in the Church, social and community life through the channels of devotional and social gatherings. There has seemed to have been periods when the Church failed to offer sufficient appeal to its younger members, and it has been to these groups that the fellowship has functioned most strongly. It has taken up the work where other forms of activity have waned in interest, and it has offered them a part in the Church life that has made them better Churchmen, better citizens, better Americans and better Christians.

"In all of these groups or fellowships there is a kindred similarity in purpose, in ideals and program, and an indescribable and unwritten bond between them. They each aim to contribute something worthwhile in the lives of their members. They each find inspiration in worship and self-expression. Through study they find development of the mind and ability to interpret life—to master its problems and to search out its truths. Through fellowship they find companionships, and friendships, and jolly good times which draw together many for the cause of one. Through service it shares a part in the needs of the community, the Church and the home. In each these qualities of worship, study, fellowship and service play an uppermost part.

"In times past the younger members of any church or community have been expected to follow others, to be influenced by them, and to be but a part of the silent congregation of inactive workers. Today these same younger members seek to not only share a part in being good followers, but have learned the constructive art of leadership, in striving to help others to follow by their example and serve. They seek to have a part in influencing and to take more than a negative part in all the opportunities placed before them. Through study they desire greater knowledge to lead; through service greater opportunity to serve.

"So, therefore, the Fellowship Movement has rapidly grown and spread. Everywhere active enthusiastic responsible youth energy is welcome. Everywhere leaders are sought and looked up to—everywhere training for leadership, for self-expression, for those things which develop and broaden one's character are encouraged and allowed freedom in their attainment.

"The movement finds expression through many channels. From its youngest to its oldest it offers some appeal, some program—some activity that draws out the best that is in each—that inspires a quest for the best—that offers opportunities for development. In some fellowships this is accomplished by demonstrations or rallies; in others by conferences or get-togethers; or by publications and broadcasts. Some by service, while others by fellowship and worship and study. On each of these one might have much to talk about, for they each represent forms of activity which young people like to have a part in sharing, which are productive of results.

"Interest wanes when there is no part for one to share. Interest requires activity. It requires work and some part, no matter how insignificant, in the great work of the Master, and His Church. Every Church has a very vital interest in the religious education of all its members, and more especially its young people. In developing religious life and thoughts as in anything, they must be inspired during the period in life when youth is receptive. The fellowship realizes the great potential power of those who make up its membership. It realizes it has a sacred duty in focusing the attention of all its members, and more particularly those who are unaffiliated with any Church, on the great truths and ideals of Christian citizenship. It realizes that in youth foundations for character and future greatness depend, and it challenges for an opportunity to play a part in such an important period in the lives of these young people of the Church.

"The Fellowship Movement includes all forms of young people's work, although it endeavors to reach particularly those between the one or another of these organizations, when otherwise they might be drifting or losing their interest. I wish there might be time to describe to you the part that each group plays in the life of the young people. They each have accomplished such admirable results and have grown in such a rapid way that they deserve to be known more in detail. However, such groups as the Girls' Friendly, the Scouts, the Sir Galahads, the King Arthur's, Fleur de Lis, Queens of Avolon, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Camp Fire Girls, Young People's Fellowships and many others offer opportunities for you each to share a part, for you each to investigate and for you each to en-

BOOTLEGGERS AND CHURCH PEOPLE.

The above is the title of an editorial which is so excellently worded and entirely to the point that we print it herewith with thanks to the Richmond Times-Dispatch, whose editor drives home his argument with exceedingly plain language when he writes as follows:

"When a preacher linked together Church people and the bootleggers, in a sermon delivered the other day, some of the uninformed protested he had gone too far. He had not gone far enough; the fact is that the bootleggers could not live without the Church people. By 'Church people' is meant those who attend church, whether they actually profess belief in this, that or the other faith, sect or denomination, or not. For it isn't the criminals nor what we carelessly speak of as 'the lower classes' that keep the bootleggers busily engaged in a profitable business, and it is certainly not the very poor.

"It happens that a very large percentage of the rich, the comfortable, the moderately well-to-do and of those in ordinary circumstances are Church people in the sense in which the phrase was employed by the preacher and in which it is used here. And it is these people who support the bootleggers. Some not so fortunately placed buy raw, home-brewed stuff only; but the Church people buy that and also buy the so-called 'good stuff,' which, whether it is actually good or not, is always much more costly.

"The dozens of kings of the bootleggers, whose capture is reported every now and then, and all their agents and retailers, and of course all the big jobbers, make huge profits by dealing with the Church people—either directly or indirectly. Those people who make no pretense at church membership or church attendance are not able, for the most part, to buy any liquor more expensive than the stuff run through copper—or dangerous lead—coils yesterday or the day before.

"Of course the preacher did not go too far. To the shame of our people, he would not have gone too far if he had said that, with comparatively few exceptions, any man who wants liquor, who has the money with which to buy it, and knows where it can be had, buys it without the slightest regard for the laws of the State and nation except such regard as is necessary to enable him to avoid the penalty for disregarding it. Until obedience to the law for the law's sake and for the sake of organized society becomes recognized as every man's solemn duty, that will always be the case.

"Certainly it is the case now. And certainly the preacher was within the strictest bounds of moderation when he spoke of bootleggers and Church people together. Without the Church people the bootleggers would starve."

Within the past six months a United States Senator has been shot in the streets of Washington, and a Virginia State official has been shot dead in the Allegheny Mountains. Crimes of this character are being committed all the time and in all directions, and it seems to us that it is time for our Church people to recognize the responsibility for this situation which the above editorial so squarely places upon them.

Everybody knows that Episcopalians are society leaders in their communities. In many places persons have been accused of joining the Episcopal Church largely for the purpose of getting into "good society."

This fact places a duty upon our people which they ought not to ignore. If the women of the Episcopal Church would make up their minds not to serve liquor at their entertainments it would have a great effect in starting a law-enforcement campaign.

It is no longer a question of whether we approve of prohibition. The issue is not a wet or a dry one. Prohibition is a part of the Constitution, and when it is ignored it is the Constitution that suffers. If persons come to the conclusion that prohibition can no longer be enforced, they have the right to start agitating for a repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, but until that repeal is accomplished it is the duty of Church people to abide by the Constitution, and the blood of the bootlegger, and the man who pursues him, is upon our heads so long as we continue to provide the market for his goods.

PROVIDING A REMEDY.

A communication comes to us from the Publicity Department pointing out the need for hospital visitation for both social and spiritual purposes, and we quote as follows:

"One of our negro Churchmen, a layman in charge of a mission, recently had occasion to spend three weeks in a hospital for an operation. Partly because funds were limited and partly for the experience of observing and practicing the need for patience and contentment, he had often preached to similar sufferers, he presented himself as a 'pauper' at a 'pauper institution,' the division for colored people in the City Hospital, expecting pauper food and treatment of which discouraging reports had been heard.

He received, so far as he could judge, the best possible faithful and proficient care. 'Just so far as the natural body needed attention, just so far it received the same.' But the point of his story follows, and is repeated, not at all for the benefit of our many faithful, broad-hearted overburdened chaplains in institutions, but for the benefit of ordinary lay people.

"At the same time," writes the observer, in The Church News of Missouri, "into the same institution, to undergo the same doubtful outcome, went also the spiritual body. In my case it was fully prepared and had at its side a kindly priest and loyal friends. But I had occasion to observe much—much that by Church people is being left undone. In other words, the spiritual body has no such preparatory methods nor care, treatment or general interest awaiting the great majority of unfortunates as has the natural body. I looked often to the beds of other sufferers. With a very few exceptions there were no kindly spiritual visitors to 'prepare' the spirit as well as the body prior to that doubtful operative journey. No smiling Churchman or Churchwoman to greet the awakening soul after its dangerous trip through etherland. . . . Visitors from the world administering to the wants of the natural body only. Very few ministers of any kind came. Here and there (as in my case) a spiritual advisor might be seen ministering to 'one of his own flock' while patients near and far looked on wishfully. What a glorious opportunity for the Church; what a vast field, neglected, where the seed is so apt to take root and bring forth. Hundreds, in a season thousands, of souls being neglected spiritually, while every modern method is being applied for the welfare of the body. In the wards under my observation during my entire stay I saw 'the Church' visit only one other besides myself.

"Not a priest, not a lay worker who made ward visitation a daily or even a Sunday obligation. Not a Church tract distributed, to encourage the faithful or to bring light and truth to the misguided.

"And was I afflicted that my eyes might be opened to the condemnation of the Church? God forbid! Rather that my experience may prove another means by which I and others interested in the extension of His Kingdom might the better observe certain things which are 'left undone' and forthwith proceed to do them, in the name of Christ and to the glory of God."

In Virginia this need has been met by the organization of a hospital auxiliary which consists of committees of visitors from various churches. Each church adopting a hospital, and the committee consisting of from four to eight ladies who go in the New Testament style, two by two, to make their visits at least once a week, keeping records of the number of visits and number of attentions rendered, and reporting to a city chairman, who in turn reports to the Executive Secretary for Social Service for the Diocese. In Virginia last year no less than 24,242 visits were made to patients in hospitals and similar institutions. The attentions rendered to these patients ranged all the way from the carrying of a magazine or a bunch of flowers, to the caring for the infant of a patient while the mother received treatment for three weeks. The record shows that 13,300 attentions were rendered during the year.

We quite agree with the plea for this kind of help from the writer of the communication above. It is a call for help that should be heeded by every rector who has a parish within reach of a hospital, which thereby creates for him an opportunity and a responsibility.

Mid-Week Student Conference

"Bridging the fatal interval between success and failure, identifying oneself with Christ rather than approving of Him; living as a Christian rather than accepting our Lord's principles as true—this is the need of the age." With these words Bishop Woodcock, of Kentucky, in the keynote address, launched the annual Episcopal Student Conference of the Mid-West at the University of Illinois on April 26. True to the essential spirit of that first, vigorous talk, the Conference concerned itself to the problem of applying Christian principles to life. More and more as discussion illuminated this or that phase of the Christian message, it was felt that there must be no compromise of Christian principles with the mental habits of the age; the fatal interval must be bridged and Christianity become a matter of life rather than theory.

The Big Ten Conference, attended by about thirty delegates from the Universities of Northwestern, Chicago, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, Miami, Kenyon College and other institutions of the Mid-West Province, was held under the auspices of the Chapel of St. John Divine at the University of Illinois. The Rev. J. H. Randolph, student pastor at Ohio State, was in charge of the program, ably seconded by Brewster Stickney, of Illinois. The purpose of the Conference, as brought out in the keynote address, was to make our Lord a more real, vital and commanding figure in the philosophy of student life. The Conference was promulgated by the joint support of the Fifth Province and the National Student Council.

During an open forum following Bishop Woodcock's speech, the problem of science and religion was broached. From the general trend of discussion, it would seem that, at least among students, there is absolutely no fundamental question in the Episcopal Church. Students could not see any essential conflict between science and religion.

The Saturday session began with Holy Communion, celebrated by the Rev. J. H. Randolph, and followed by a breakfast which served as a mixer for the students. The Rev. Horace Fort, secretary of Berkeley Seminary, then spoke on "The Church and the Age." Mr. Fort's sympathy with student opinion, his vigor, earnestness and his acquaintance with the field, went a long way towards the formation of practical Christian attitude towards the problems of the day. "Society is disordered because men try to live apart from God," said Mr. Fort. "The principles of Christ are hidden in compromise, our allegiance is split into contesting fragments. Christ, however, demands our entire allegiance. Allegiance to Christ is above loyalty to party, State or nation."

After this talk the Conference split into three discussion groups on the following subjects: "Campus Religion," by Perry Hoden, student head of the Province; "Christianity and the Church," by Agnes Hall, Secretary of the National Student Council, and "Christianity and Industry," by Horace Fort. Student opinion seemed fairly unanimous that the spirit of modern industry, as shown up in its attempts at political corruption, and its attempts to carry on low wages and child labor, is incompatible with the spirit of Christ.

During the lunch hour the Rev. John M. Page, student pastor at the University of Illinois, sketched in a short, informal talk the "chapel-less" condition of Illinois, where three hundred and fifty Church students are without a church building in which to worship. Immediately after luncheon the girls met for a short confab, guided by Miss Ruth E. Butler, of the University of Illinois, and the men gathered for a smoker at the chaplain's house. During the men's smoker the subject of war inevitably came up. The absurdity of the prevalent custom of missionaries calling upon the guns of their nations in time of danger was one interesting turn of the discussion. Opinion upon the abolishment of the R. O. T. C. was well divided. It was agreed that war is a symptom whose roots lie deeper than the problem of defense, and could only really be solved by Christian men going into business, politics and the Church, with the avowed intent of establishing the kingdom of God on earth.

The All-Conference dinner held on Saturday night was a truly brilliant affair. Early in proceedings the various units of delegates began to sing their college songs. Later all joined in with good will on familiar songs.

Following the dinner and sing-song, Bishop-elect John C. White, of the Diocese of Springfield, spoke to the students. "You are all missionaries," he said, "in student work. You should all feel proud of this Church of ours and her wonderful heritage. It is your high privilege to broadcast your Church's message on the campuses of universities. The Bishop-elect went on to speak of his thirty years' work in Southern Illinois. He said that in Bloody Williamson County, the scene of countless massacres and murders, there are many strong and seemingly vigorous churches, but they have failed. "It is a challenge to us," he said, "to see what our Church can do there."

The situation at the University of Illinois was dramatically represented by "The Hole," a one-act play, written and presented by students. April showers on Sunday morning, prolonged and intensive, interfered with plans for the annual outdoor communion, but a sheltered place was arranged for in time, and the celebration, Bishop-elect White officiating, was well attended by delegates, visitors and resident faculty people and students. At the 11 o'clock service, held in one of the University lecture halls, the Rev. Benjamin F. P. Ivins, dean of Nashotah House, preached on the subject of Modernism. A student audience of 1,500 heard Dean Ivins at the All-University service on Sunday night on the subject of Dynamic Religion.

During the course of the Conference resolutions were passed in regard to future meetings of the students within the Province, and the National Student Council was invited to meet in the Province at the next National Triennial Conference. The Conference closed with 5 o'clock Evensong. Delegates said that they took with them to their own campuses a firmer faith, a clearer vision of the needs of the age, and an overwhelming sense of an abiding fraternal relation with other students of the Episcopal Church.

Geneva and Princeton.

The twelfth annual session of the Geneva School and the fifth of the Princeton School will be held this year at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., and Princeton Seminary, Princeton, N. J., respectively, from June 30 to July 11. These schools were established by the Synod of Province II, and their aim is to give inspiration, training and opportunities for service to those who attend. To this end each day begins with a celebration of the Holy Communion, continues with content and method classes, and conferences on various methods of service, and a sunset service and various evening events bring the day to its close.

Particular care is taken to keep a good part of each day free for the development of the social life of the schools, for both old and young; the young people's leaders provide regular and organized recreation for their groups, and the hostess sees to it that there is opportunity for the older people to develop the friendships of past years and to form new ones; many new ideas are passed around with the cup of tea served on the campus.

In this 1924 session there will be classes on Discussion Methods, Story Telling, Pageantry and Drama, Christian Social Service, Personal Religion, Prayer Book, Kindergarten Methods, the Church School Service League, Church School Administration, the Church in China, the Program of the Church, Churchwomen's Opportunities and Possibilities, Girl Scout Leadership, Church History, Young People's Program, Church Music, Girls' Friendly Society, Problems of Girls, Problems of Boys, Family Case Work, the Why and How of Missions, and Bible Study; not all of these at each school. Among the leaders will be the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., who will be the pastor of the Princeton School and will also teach the class in Personal Religion for Young People; the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., will lead an Adult Bible Class. The Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., will be the pastor at Geneva and lead the young people's class in Personal Religion; at Geneva also will be Mrs. Charles E. Hutchison; Miss Julia Williamson, director of the Girl Scouts of Philadelphia; Miss Mildred H. Brown, the Rev. C. Clark Kennedy, the Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., the Rev. T. A. Conover, the Rev. There will be three study periods of one hour each, which is a departure from last year's plan, and the cost of attending the school is $21.85. The registration at each school is limited to three hundred, and not more than five delegates from any one parish can be accepted.

Full details of these schools may be obtained by writing to Mrs. R. C. Collison, 681 Castle Street, Geneva, N. Y., regarding the Geneva School, and to Mrs. G. H. Lewis, St. Andrew's Rectory, Beacon, N. Y., regarding the Princeton School.

Establishment of a New Mission Station.

The Rev. W. W. Brander, rector of St. James-Northam Parish, Goochland County, has recently established a mission on Little Byrd Creek in the section north of St. Paul's Church, West View. He is holding services at present in a schoolhouse, but hopes shortly to erect a chapel. He has secured a mission worker, Miss Mary A. Stubbs, to work in this field, and will have a Seminary student to assist him during the summer months.

Suburban Church Buys Property.

The congregation of Varina Church, in Henrico Parish, about six miles from Richmond, has purchased a tract of forty acres in a most desirable location, of which ten acres will be reserved for a future church, parish house and rectory and churchyard. The congregation is worshipping at present in the Varina High School building, and funds are being collected for the erection of a church.

The Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D., who has been holding services for several months past at St. Mary's Church, Lorraine, in Goochland County, has accepted the charge of that work to date from April 1. Dr. Dunn was compelled several years ago to give up the charge of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, on account of ill health, and is now living at Westhampton, near Richmond. His health has now sufficiently recovered to permit him to undertake the charge of St. Mary's Church. St. Mary's Church is situated on the edge of Goochland County, within ten miles of Richmond, and in line of development of suburban residences on the James River west of the city.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Cathedral Association.

The annual meeting of the National Cathedral Association was held on Wednesday, April 30, in the Cathedral close, beginning with the service of the Holy Communion in Bethlehem Chapel. At the business session, held in Whitby Hall, of the Cathedral School for Girls, delegates from the important branches of the Association all over the United States read or sent reports to be read, telling of the progress of the work in the several locations. The Bishop of Washington addressed the Association in his usual inspiring and stirring way and made several announcements of interest concerning the Cathedral. Of these, much interest was manifested in the gift of $100,000 by a New England woman for the organ to be placed in the great Cathedral. When completed, this organ will probably be the largest in this country. Specifications are now being prepared by the Cathedral organist, Edgar Priest. At this meeting it was also announced that plans are complete for the erection of the Cathedral library, which will be a memorial building, containing a remarkable reference library of books pertaining to theology, Church history, etc., for the use of clergy and laity throughout the city and nation.

Delegates and members of the Washington committee were guests of Bishop Freeman at luncheon in St. Alban's Guild Hall, and in the afternoon at 3 o'clock Bishop and Mrs. Freeman received the delegates and a number of invited guests at the Bishop's house.

The day's program closed by a service of evensong, sung by the Cathedral choir in Bethlehem Chapel.

The annual meeting of the Laymen's Service Association of Washington was held at the Church of the Advent on Wednesday evening, May 7. Dr. Glazebrook, the president, presided, and reports were read from the officers and committees. After the business meeting an entertainment and social hour were enjoyed by the members present.

Girls' Friendly Society: The annual meeting of the diocesan organization of the Girls' Friendly Society was held at Epiphany Church May 5 and 6, beginning with a Corporate Communion of all members and associates of the society, celebrated by the Rev. R. L. Wolven, of the Church of the Epiphany. Business sessions were held during the day, and on Monday evening the annual festival service of the society was held at the Chapel of the Nativity. At this service the sermon was preached by the Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, rector of St. Paul's Church, Washington Circle. On Tuesday evening a reception for all members and associates of the society was held in Epiphany Parish Hall from 8 to 10:30 P. M.

The fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the Church of the Ascension will be celebrated at Ascension Church on May 29, Ascension Day, by a special program which is being planned by the rector, the Rev. Thomas W. Cooke.

The Bishop of Washington plans to leave this city for Europe some time in the latter part of the month of May, where he goes for a much needed rest. He expects to be away from the Diocese about six weeks. Growing demands are constantly being made upon the time and strength of the Bishop, and few if any are refused, and the Church people of Washington will be glad to know that their Bishop has been persuaded to take a few weeks of rest and refreshment.

Enlarged and Refitted Parish House.

Trinity Parish House, Portsmouth, has been greatly enlarged and fully equipped throughout, making it one of the most complete parish houses in the community. Seven additional rooms were added, a fair-sized guild room and an office for the rector. Two large rooms on the second floor provide a women's rest room and additional class rooms. A well appointed stage in the auditorium adds much to the use of the building. Floors throughout are of composite and the whole heated by gas-steam. Already the building is taxed to its limit, and the Church School and Girls' Friendly and Young People's Societies especially have greatly increased. On April 30 the vestry gave a house warming to the whole parish and all four congregations in Portsmouth united in viewing, inspecting and enjoying the new building, and were hospitably entertained by the mother church. All the buildings of Trinity are now in excellent shape. The rector, the Rev. Charles H. Holmead, is completing three happy years of service.

Meeting of the Central Convocation.

The Central Convocation of Southern Virginia held its regular spring meeting at Johns Memorial Church, Farmville, Rev. F. M. Diehl, rector, April 28 to May 1. The Convocation was unusually helpful and inspiring, and there was a good attendance.

At the opening service Monday night, which was a missionary service, Rt.

Rev. H. St. G. Tucker spoke on the reconstruction work to be done in Tokyo.

The Rev. C. E. Stewart was the preacher at the communion service Tuesday morning, and the Rev. A. P. Gray at Evening Prayer. In the afternoon the Rev. M. S. Taylor led a most interesting conference on "Paying the Tithe." Dr. E. C. Eggleston, President of Hampden-Sidney College, also spoke on "Stewardship."

The preacher at Morning Prayer on Wednesday was the Rev. E. W. Melli-champe, and at Evening Prayer the Rev. M. S. Eagle. The conference in the afternoon was on "Missions," the Rev. J. M. B. Gill giving a most inspiring and enlightening talk on the subject, especially from the viewpoint of China.

Dr. J. C. Hall, Dean of the Convocation; Bishop Thomson and Bishop B. D. Tucker led the devotional services on the three mornings. The Rev. R. R. Phelps preached at the closing service Thursday morning.

Two new members, the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, and the Rev. A. M. Lewis, of Christ Church, Emporia, were welcomed by the Convocation.

Signal of Whistles on Good Friday.

Attracted by the remarkable charge of Judge D. A. R. Crum last fall to the grand jury of Crisp County, Ga., and which was printed in the Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore and in the Atlanta papers, the Rev. J. Harry Chesley, vicar of Christ Church, Cordele, asked the authorities of the Cordele Sash, Door and Lumber Company and the Beechwood Mills of that town to sound a signal of three long, clear blasts from their whistles at 12 o'clock on Good Friday that the people of the community might stop for one minute in observance of the Master of men. In recognition of this observance, Mr. Chesley, who says it was eminently fitting that lumber mills should sound this call, as though to say, "Is not this the Carpenter?" has received the following letter from Judge Crum:

Rev. J. Harry Chesley, Vicar of Christ Church, Cordele, Ga.
Reverend and Dear Sir:

Cyrenne Commandery, Knights Templar of Georgia, has directed me to express to you its very deep appreciation of the thought and reverence which prompted you in bringing public attention to the fact that Good Friday was the anniversary of the crucifixion of our blessed Saviour. In these days of thoughtlessness of much that is sacred, it is indeed well that we have one to remind us of these solemn occasions.

Our community wishes for you and yours long life and peace among men, and finally sweet companionship with Him who died that we might live.

Very respectfully and sincerely yours,
(Signed) D. A. R. CRUM.

Judge Crum, though a member of the Methodist Church, has accepted from the Rev. Mr. Chesley a copy of the Book of Common Prayer for use in court chambers, and for which Judge Crum has expressed his appreciation.

A small altar was dedicated on Easter morning in the Beginners' Department of St. John's Church (the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector), Savannah. It was made by a former pupil and was the gift of the teachers of the department to promote reverence and teach the meaning of the altar. Two tiny seven-branched candlesticks and a vase were also presented, the gifts of two little pupils and their mother. The two choirs of this parish rendered three beautiful cantatas during Passion and Holy Weeks. The boys and men sang Mercadante's "Seven Last Words" on Thursday of Passion Week and Stainer's "Crucifixion" on Good Friday night, and the women's choir sang Maunder's "From Olivet to Calvary" on Palm Sunday night.

The Rev. J. A. Schaad, who held a mission in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, in March, returned to this parish, which has no rector, for the services of Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Day. In the afternoon the Church school gave a very attractive pageant.

A mission for the deaf mutes of Burlington and Alamance County has been started by the Church of the Holy Comforter, with monthly services by the Rev. R. C. Fortune, a deaf minister of Durham. Many Pay Tribute to Bishop Talbot.

A large membership of the Churchman's Club of the Diocese assembled at their annual spring dinner to pay tribute to their Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D.

Bishop Talbot was the only speaker of the evening. His first greeting was to assure the laity present that the Church had nothing to fear from the recent controversies, that he recalled far more serious ones in his own day and the Church has remained triumphant. However, he urged that if all Christians everywhere for the next twenty years would forget all controversy and sum up their whole idea of Christianity into two words, "Follow Me," at the end of that time the Christian churches would be an effective power for righteous not only in this land, but in all international affairs as well.

The major part of the Bishop's address consisted of numerous interesting anecdotes connected with his work as Missionary Bishop of Wyoming.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: Edward Guest Gibson, President; George Weems Williams, Vice-President; Richard C. Norris, Second Vice-President; Alexander Payson Knapp, Secretary; John Glenn, Jr., Treasurer.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. Luke's, Scranton.

The culmination of the Lenten season for St. Luke's Church, Scranton, the Rev. R. P. Kretler, rector, really occurred in the confirmation service held on the Sunday after Easter, when a group of fifty-three persons were confirmed by the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D.

Several outstanding things have occurred in this parish during the Lenten season which show evidences of a deep spiritual revival in the congregation.

The magnificent organ installed by Casavant Bros., of St. Hyacinthe, permitted some noteworthy organ recitals to be held during the Lenten season, to which hundreds of people came each week.

On Easter Even nineteen children and three adults were baptized, and in spite of the rainy and inclement weather on Easter Day, large congregations filled the church at the various services and generous offerings were received from the parishioners, both old and young.

Easter at Amherst.

(From the Amherst "New Era.")

"Very beautiful Easter services were held in Ascension Church at Amherst on Sunday. The rector, Dr. T. D. Lewis, delivered an able discourse on the resurrection, presenting in that chaste eloquence that characterizes his sermons irrefutable arguments for the survival of the soul. The music was rendered by an augmented choir. Mrs. Irvine Whitehead sang, in a sweet mezzo soprano, solo passages in Stephen's Te Deum. Mrs. T. P. Campbell sang an offertory, 'Hail, Thou Risen One!' Her clear, bird-like soprano filled the auditorium, fitly echoing the joy of the season. The exquisite decorations were entirely of Florida palms and Easter lilies, memorial gifts from friends. The dark, rich verdure of the tropical foliage formed an effective background for the white emblems of immortality. The congregation that packed the auditorium went out with expressions of appreciation, indicating an inspiration to lead a sweeter and higher life."

Activities at Christ Church, Blacksburg.

The rector, the Rev. J. Hubard Lloyd, attended a students' meeting at Sewanee the first week in April. Two surplices have been made by the Auxiliary, the material for one having been given by Mrs. R. J. Davidson. They will be sent to the Japanese clergy. The Auxiliary also made a violet stole which will be sent to Japan with the surplices. Another was made by the Altar Guild, to be retained at Christ Church. Both are alike, having a design of a cross entwined with a crown of thorns, embroidered in gold thread. An exquisite lace collar to be worn with the stole was presented to Christ Church by the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde, rector of Grace Church, Washington, D. C., in memory of his aunt, Miss Maria L. Bolton, who was for many years a devoted member of Christ Church.

As an Easter present the Auxiliary sent a baseball outfit to the boys in one of the cottages at the Home for Homeless Boys at Covington.

Service was held in Christ Church at 11 o'clock on Good Friday and celebration of the Holy Communion on Easter Sunday at 11. The Easter music, especially the offertory, Schilling's "Christ Our Passover," was beautifully rendered by the choir. The church was filled with spring flowers. An unusually large congregation was present and the offering was for the Japanese Relief Fund. The contents of the Auxiliary blue boxes, also presented at this service, amounted to $40.05. The usual children's service was held at five in the afternoon and the children brought their offerings of mite boxes and flowers and greatly enjoyed the rector's talk to them on "The Journey to Emmaus."

FLORIDA.

The Late Bishop Weed.

The Finance Committee of the Diocese of Florida, at a regular meeting held at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 6th day of March, 1924, unanimously adopted the following resolution upon the death of the Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed, third Bishop of Florida, who passed into life eternal January 18, 1924:

We, and each of us, desire to express our deep sorrow and our sense of loss in the death of the Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed, D. D., S. T. D., third Bishop of Florida. The Church and State have lost a great leader and a strong man. He trod the Master's way unwavering and unafraid and laid down his life in the Master's cause after a loving service of more than thirty-seven years. He used his great talents for the good of man and to the glory of God, rather than for personal ambition or selfish and vain glory. He taught peace, charity, mercy and love in this world, and we testify to the noble work and the great good done by him; to the universal esteem and love in which he was held everywhere and by every one, whether in or out of the Church; to his charming personality, his greatness of mind and heart, and his beautiful and noble character.

He was a true and loyal friend to Florida in days of sore distress, a pillar of light and strength in dark and weary days; he has been a loving father to us for more than thirty-seven years, a source of comfort in our sorrows, an inspiration of joy in our days of happiness.

In humble pride of his memory and in sorrow of his taking off, we invoke the intercession of the whole Church for the repose and peace of his soul, and that the work which he so greatly loved may be carried on and prosper under God; that the loved ones nearest and dearest to him may find comfort and consolation at the altar where he served, and that all who knew and loved him may, in obedience to his injunction and example, look always to Him who is the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

Personal Notes

Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler, founder and director of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, arrived in New York April 29 for work on behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

The address of the Rev. Frank E. Cooley is changed from Cincinnati, O., to 28 East Fifth Street, Newport, Ky.

Archdeacon Claiborne, of Sewanee, Tenn., conducted the three-hour services, and also preached the sermon at the Easter service in Trinity Church, Trenton, N. J. (the Rev. Hamilton Schuyler, rector). These services were largely attended and the excellent addresses of Archdeacon Claiborne will long be remembered by those who availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing them.

Collect for Third Sunday After Easter.

Almighty God, Who showest to them that are in error the light of Thy truth, to the intent that they may return into the way of righteousness; Grant unto all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion that they may avoid those things that are contrary to their profession, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same; through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Son of Man.

He left the Father's bosom and His throne
And took our life of mortal woe instead.

Home, love, dominion, all were His in heaven;
On earth He had not where to lay His head.

He saw the sun, whose torch of light and heat
His breath had kindled, in the west grow dim,
A thousand lamps flashed out for homeward feet,
Not one was trimmed or candle set for Him.

And, while unseen, the keys of death and hell
And life and glory at His girdle hung.
No lowly latch for Master knew Him well,
No door for His tired footsteps inward swung.

That never soul redeemed should vagrant go
Unhoused through the hereafter, rest denied,
That all who would the Father's house might know,
A stranger, pilgrim, Jesus lived and died.

Without the walls that spurned His love as dress,
Mid faithless scorn and alien pity hurled,
He suffered, outcast, that His sheltering cross Might be the rooftree of a homeless world.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Unbelief of the Jews.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord ended His public ministry with the words, "While ye have light believe in the light that ye may be the children of light." John 12:44-50 gives another speech; but it is a summary. Was this summary made by Our Lord Himself or by St. John? Comment attributes it to St. John; justly so, we believe, partly from the synoptical nature of the matter, partly from the introduction, which says Jesus "cried" using the technical word for a herald's message, and partly from sheer instinct.

But though He had done so many miracles they did not believe. St. John quotes Isaiah, attributing the blinding of their eyes and hardening of their hearts to supernatural power—Divine, says some comment, diabolic acting with permission of the Divine, says others. Therefore, says St. John, they could not believe. The whole passage is a happy hunting-ground for Predestinarians and all other theologians who have not grasped that God works through all laws of nature and time does not limit Him. St. John, commenting, says, "These things says Isaiah when he saw His glory and spake of Him." Isaiah saw the time of Christ on earth, else he could not have reported from sight, not hearing, how the Jews treated Him. That is, Isaiah was borne forward in the spirit along the stream of time. We deal here with a truth too great for some. To pure spirit time and space are not entities. They do not govern or condition the spiritual state. In this lies solution of the problem of prophecy, explanation of the whole involved tangle of Predestination, certainty of the mistake of Mahomet, contradiction of John Calvin and reason for the overthrow of Arianism. It is not easily apprehended by most minds. Four out of five who read will hold it sheer nonsense; as is proven by the fact that there have been so many Arians, so many Calvinists, so many Augustinians, so many Mahometans. Only he who has wrought out some portion of the explanation for himself can perceive the whole. This paragraph is the plainest bald statement of matter-of-fact—and to many it will seem mysticism. Let him understand who can.

The Jews of Our Lord's day seem degenerate. That they did not recognize Our Lord is little; if He came to our day and generation, with His glory hidden, our generation would not recognize Him either. They crucified Him; but we fear that we would, too. They lied about Him; but so would we. Not for these things, therefore, do we hold them poor. But their chief man, having soldiers, arms and money, lacked resolution properly to police their chief city; and here, in St. John 12:42, we find another discreditable fact, "Nevertheless also among the chief rulers many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God."

That a man should not believe—that can be understood; that a man, believing, should flinch from acknowledgment—that can be understood; but that many should believe and all flinch seems never true of any other nation since. There surely must have been extenuating unknown circumstances. Also, the Holy Spirit, as yet, had fallen upon none of them.

But this belief of many, while it brought no open acknowledgment, created a situation. Our Lord knew of it. He had His own means of knowing the thoughts of all. Moreover, some of the chief men must have taken earthly means of letting Him know that they were not unfriendly. The very noblest would do so from sympathy; a kindly message might be pleasant to Him. The very meanest would do so from prudence; He might triumph.

Every great man in Jerusalem had his large town house, or his larger suburban mansion with gardens. Search by the authorities was difficult. Some of these houses were available to Our Lord as refuges. He could pass from one to the other, evade arrest, disappear. He could drop into the gardens of the rich and vanish. It had become hopeless for the authorities to arrest Him.

The purpose of His Incarnation would be defeated if He were not able to escape. It would be defeated if He—being able to escape—were not arrested by His Own consent. Events were rapidly shaping themselves to this climax.

Missionary Heroism.

We missionaries are none the less American because we have put Christ first and have turned our backs upon our native land to cast our lot with the benighted peoples of pagan lands. We owe, to no small degree, the fact of our being missionaries to our being Americans. Though in submerging ourselves in the life, language, and customs of another race, we have lost much that Americans hold dear, we still swear allegiance to the flag, still cling to the traditions of the land which gave us birth, still claim her as our own, and are still ready to offer up our lives in her defense. Though, of course, our primary aim to make known the Christ and though the motive that compels us is the conviction that we owe to others what Christ is to us, still we are Americans and all unconsciously live and move and have our being in a miniature America we can not leave behind. There is so much about her institutions, her ideals, her very life which she owes to the Master and which was born of His Spirit, that we feel that we are none the less true missionaries because we are one hundred per cent American.

It struck me as very strange that our Chaplain, who marched with us to the Rhine, should have left his post as a missionary in China to return to the States and enlist as a buck private. One of our nurses, I remember, had left her missionary work in Egypt, and return to the States that she might "do her bit" for the land she loved. The doctor, with whom I am now associated in the missionary service, gave months of valuable service on the firing line along the Meuse. I did not then understand what now after three years of service as a missionary is simply a matter of experience—that the missionary sees the glory of his country as his countrymen who have never known the indescribable degradation of heathen races, can never see it; that he realizes that for the sake of the world America must be upheld and maintained in her strength; that he sees great channels of blessing flowing from her to the far corners of the earth; and that he knows that the redeemed of heathen races bless God with profound gratitude for those who from her shores have come bearing the Good News of the Gospel of Christ.

Why should we missionaries so often be looked upon even by our fellow Americans as strange, impractical freaks who are rather to be pitied than otherwise, when we are simply the natural, one might say, inevitable fruits of America's Christian institutions, her lofty ideals, her passion for world betterment and world redemption, her Christian homes, her churches and her schools?

It is often thought that the missionary would not be where and what he is if some personal handicap had not closed for him the door to high achievement in either business or professional life. This idea in the light of the history of missions is ridiculous. As a boy I was a great lover of thrilling stories of heroism and adventure. I literally devoured such books as "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "The Three Musketeers." But not until finally in later life I got hold of the lives of such great missionaries as Livingstone and Carey and Morrison and Brainerd, was my thirst for the heroic quenched.

Here was adventure that made my old Diamond Dick tales look like nursery rhymes. Here was achievement I had not dreamed fell within the scope of man. Here were heroes, real men of real blood who had lived and died for a great cause, the lachet of whose shoes my old-time war-gods were not worthy to unloose.—F. J. Huegel, in the Christian Herald.

To Feel Thy Hand.

L. C. Cummings.

It is not necessary to understand my cross, if only I can walk in the darkness or light with faith that God is leading the way!

We are too apt to repine and too prone to fear, because we are trusting ignorantly to ourselves and our own seeming wisdom.

It is most difficult to give up our lives to the guidance of God to stay in the narrow path set before us.

How much more alluring and interesting it is to stray aside, and yield to our own guidance and inclinations! But in doing so we have often fallen prostrate by the wayside; for without divine help we lose the way.

Though we may be called to walk through a dark and seemingly endless tunnel of sorrow and disappointment, of apparent failure of all our plans, yet we are safe, if we but feel God's hand leading us; we walk more safely in the dark with Him, than alone by sight. We come more surely out into the Light at last. Just to feel His hand leading us and be sure that

"Thou every erring step, wilt guide me right"

"Till night is gone—and I behold the Light."

"Of Wounds and Sore Defeat."

Of wounds and sore defeat
I made my battle stay;
Winged sandals for my feet
I wove of my delay;
Of weariness and fear
I made my shouting spear;
Of loss and doubt and dread
And swift oncoming doom
I made a helmet for my head
And a floating plume.
From the shutting mist of death
And the failure of the breath,
I made a battle horn to blow
Across the vales of overthrow.
O harken, love, the battle horn!
The triumph clear, the silver scorn!
O harken where the echoes bring Down the gray disastrous morn
Laughter and rallying!

Roads.

Answer, soul of mine—which way
Hast thou made a road today?
Hast thou followed love's sure chain
Over hill and over plain?
Whichever choice, thou'st made,
There another road is laid—
Not a transient, fading trail,
Not a path that shall not fail.
Evermore some foot shall stray
O'er the road thou mad'st today.
Ah, let each of us beware
How his thoughts and motives bear!
Every road that we shall choose,
Other pilgrim feet will use,
Some will follow where we lead
Long as life shapes life, indeed.
Have a brother's care, and pray
God to mark thy road each day.

The Voice in the Wilderness.

Eugenie du Maurier.

St. John spent many years in the lonely deserts of Judea, a place of barren hills and deep, narrow valleys on the west side of the Dead Sea. In this lonely region he prepared himself to become the Voice that was to tell the people that Jesus was the long promised Saviour.

Strong with the strength gained in the hardships of the desert, John was fearless in reproving the wicked, but so wonderful in speech that many Jews thinking he might be Christ, constantly asked: "Who are you?" His answer was: "I am the Voice of One crying in the wilderness, make straight the way of the Lord, as said the Prophet Isaiah." Hundreds of years before this time Isaiah had foretold the Voice in the wilderness that would say: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight His paths; every valley shall be filled; and every mountain and hill brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough ways plain; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God."

Do you know why roads are called highways? Long ago, when good roads were not as common as they are now, roads were raised above the adjoining fields to prevent them from being covered with water in times of wet weather. In England such roads are called the king's highway because they were considered to have been given by the king. In olden times, when the king went to see distant parts of his kingdom, great pains was taken to make the road safe and easy to travel. Hollow places were filled and smoothed; hills were lowered; crooked, winding places were straightened; bridges were made safe or new ones built; and everything was done to insure a happy journey for the king, and to show him how welcome he was. To get all this done, messengers had been sent before the time of the expected visit, and the people had not only prepared the roads for his coming, but their towns, their homes, their children, were all in readiness.

St. John's mission was to tell the people to prepare for the coming of the King. It was for that he had left the desert of Judea. The world was a wilderness of people. They needed a road over which the King could travel, but that road was the road to their hearts.

Christ could not find a resting place in a cruel, wicked heart, nor in a selfish, unforgiving one. So the messenger's words bade them to repent of their sins. The ways to be smoothed over were in their own lives. Pride was a mountain they must make low, and deceit was a crooked way that must be made straight. They were to prepare for Him Who said: "Blessed are the meek; blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness."

So into every heart that is made straight the King still comes. The road of repentance smoothes and prepares for His coming. They who accept and welcome His coming are they who have heard the Voice and are ready to follow Him Whom those of old looked for, longed for, but failed in great measure to know when He came.

The First Day at School.

James was walking toward the school house, and he was walking very slowly indeed. The great day when he was going to school had come at last, but now James wished he were going anywhere but to school.

He had just moved to Ridgewood and knew very few of the boys and girls. The teacher was a stranger. He dreaded to meet her and so many strange children. Mother had expected to take him; but baby was ill in the night, so mother could not leave her.

"Can't I wait till you can go with me?" asked James.

"No, dear," answered mother. "It is much better to be there the first day. You will like it after you get there. The teacher will be kind and you'll soon make friends with the boys and girls."

James walked so slowly that all the other pupils had gone into the school. He was the only one in sight and it seemed as if he could not make his feet drag him into that school house to face that strange teacher and all those boys and girls.

"What's that?" He stopped suddenly and listened.

From a big bush by the side of the road came a sob. James went up to the bush and there, crouched behind it, was a little girl crying.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"I have to go to school," sobbed the little girl, "and I don't want to. Mother made me, but I'm afraid the boys will chase me."

"No, they won't," James comforted her. "Come with me!" He squared his shoulders manfully. "What's your name?" He held out his hand.

"Jessie Warren," said the little girl, rising to her feet and, taking James' hand, she started toward the school house.

"And wasn't it funny?" James said to his mother afterwards, "I forgot all about not wanting to go myself. I didn't want Jessie to be afraid, and I forgot that I minded."

"That's always the way when we help some one else," said mother. "We forget our own troubles. School was nice, after all, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it was!" exclaimed James fervently. "The teacher's fine, too. She tells us stories, and the boys and girls play games and have lots of fun at recess. School's all right. I'm glad I go, and Jessie is, too, now. We didn't know how nice it was or we would have run there."—Selected.

The Old Apple Tree.

Little Bobby Grey lived in the country with its grandpa, who was a farmer. Bobby's grandpa owned lots of hens and ducks and geese and turkeys, and many nice large fields where horses and cows fed upon the sweet, tender grass.

Bobby's grandpa was a very old man with a snow-white beard, and Bobby, who was only six years old, loved his grandpa and used to help him drive in the cows every night, so that they might be milked. At other times Bobby would drop potatoes into the holes his grandpa made, so that when the summer was gone there would be enough potatoes to last all the winter while the snow was upon the ground.

Close to the farmhouse where Bobby and his grandpa lived there was a big apple tree, and one day, when the apples were all red and ripe, Bobby and his grandpa went out to gather them. Bobby's grandpa stood upon a ladder and picked the apples, while Bobby, who was too little to climb a ladder, stood underneath the apple tree and picked up the apples.

It was nice and warm under the tree, and Bobby, being very little, soon became tired.

"Tell me a story of the apple tree, grandpa," he asked. "Where did it come from? How old is it?"

So Bobby's grandpa put his basket of apples upon the ground and sat down, and little Bobby curled up beside him and listened to the story of the old apple tree.

"It was a long, long time ago," began Bobby's grandpa, "when I was a little boy like you. I lived with my mother and father in the same house you are living in now. There were no trees here then, no fences, no horses nor cows, only a few hens and ducks, and two turkeys. My mother and father were very poor, and often my father had to go a long way off to work, so that my mother and I could have food to eat.

"One day I was playing in front of the house when a man rode up on a fine horse. When he reached the house he stopped his horse. 'Little boy,' said he, 'I am very thirsty. Will you give me a cup of water?'

"So I ran into the house and told my mother, and she brought out a pitcher and a cup and went to the well and drew up a bucket of clear, cold water.

"When the strange man on the horse had drunk all he wanted, he handed the cup back to my mother. Then he took from his pocket a ripe red apple and handed it to me. 'Plant the seeds of this apple, little boy,' he said, 'and when you are grown up you will have lots of apples.'

"So I said, 'Thank you, sir!' and ran to the house with the nice red apple. My mother cut it into four pieces and showed me the little black seeds inside the apple. Together my mother and I planted the little black seeds. After awhile there was a little apple tree. The rain came and watered it, and the warm sun shone down on it, and it grew and grew and grew. Ever since then that little apple tree has been growing there in the corner where my mother and I planted the seeds the man gave me more than fifty years ago."

Bobby Grey looked at his grandpa, then he looked at the old apple tree. "Grandpa," he asked, "if you and I were to take the seeds out of one of those big red apples in the basket and plant them, would they grow?"

Bobby's grandpa nodded his head. "Yes, Bobby," he said, "I think they would."

So little Bobby Grey watched his grandpa while he cut open a big red apple, and together Bobby and his grandpa planted the seeds.—Christian Observer.

The Dream Playmates.

Estelle T. Oltrogge.

One night I dreamed of the orange grove,

And the fairies danced 'neath the big white moon;

I thought I saw the bright stars move
When the June-bug played such a lively tune.

And one night I looked right up through the trees

In the face of the moon till my eyes felt strange,

And the music that came so light on the breeze

Made me wish that there never could come a change.

Tonight I may play with the angels small,

For they often come and play half the night;

So give me a bath, clean nightie and all,
Hear my prayers, kiss me and turn-off the light.

What Bennie Learned.

"Where is mamma?" said Bennie, dashing into the house quite out of breath. He had just spent his first morning at school and he had a lot to tell.

"Here, laddie. How is my big boy, and what did he learn today?"

"I didn't learn anything but 'm-e,' and I knew that already."

"'Me,' that's the easiest word for most of us to learn, and one of the greatest," said Uncle Tom behind his paper.

"But I did have the best time," went on the eager little voice. "So many boys to play with! I never knew there were so many in town. We played games at recess. And, mamma, I wish you would not send the car for me any more. I would rather walk home with the other boys."

Uncle Tom looked at him curiously over his paper. Never had he known Bennie to refuse a ride before.

"And oh, mamma," Bennie said coaxingly, "please put a lot more sandwiches and things in my lunch box."

"But, laddie, I am afraid you will be sick. I gave you such a lot."

"Oh, I did not eat all of them myself. I divided with the fellows. Some of them did not have very much lunch and they ate them quick as a wink. So I want a dozen—two dozen if you can spare that many, and some more ginger cookies."

"I will put in a plenty," said his mother softly, as she smoothed his damp curls.

"You're the bestest mamma in the world."

"Humph!" said Uncle Tom, aloud. "He did not learn 'me' after all."

Can you guess what he meant by that?—Selected.

Hallo! Mr. Leery.

I have just come upon a little idyll, says the Bookman in the British Weekly, that is a testimony alike to the charm of Stevenson and the charm that still lingers at the heart of London. Because she was born in America, the small daughter of the curator at Dr. Johnson's house, in Gough-square, had never seen a lamplighter. She knew Stevenson's "Child's Garden" and those verses of "The Lamplighter"—

"But I, when I am stronger and can choose what I'm to do, O Leerie, I'll go round at night and light the lamps with you."

but for her he belonged, like very elves and gnomes, to the world of fantasy. Then, about a year ago, when she was six, she came to England and went with her mother to live in the curator's house, next to what used to be the home of Dr. Johnson, and Gough-square happens to be one of those London by-ways where at nightfall the lamplighter still plies his calling. One evening, to her amazement and delight looking out at her door, she saw him fitting across the square doing his magic, and when he paused at the lamp close to her she gasped wonderingly, "Hallo, Mr. Leery." By the best of good chances the lamplighter knew his Stevenson, especially that poem about himself, so he laughed and said, "Hallo, are you coming round to light the lamps with me?" and in an ecstasy of incredulity she went, and helped him to push his rod up into the dark and conjure the flame out of nothing. Ever since, toward dusk, she is used to being summoned from the parlor into fairyland by a tap on the window and a voice crying outside, "Hallo, are you coming to help Mr. Leery?" There had seemed no more in common between the old Doctor and R. L. S. than between Gough-square and that hill at Samoa, but with this little incident in mind I shall never now be able to keep them apart.

How She Listened.

Two little girls said their prayers together one night. At the close one girl jumped up quickly, but the other girl knelt quietly by the bed. "What were you waiting for?" asked the other little girl.

"I was waiting for God to answer."

"Did He say anything tonight, sister?" she asked, looking startled.

"You know," was the answer in a low tone, "we said 'God bless all my friends,' and right away I thought of Sadie, because we had a quarrel today, and while I waited I seemed to hear God say, 'Tell her you are sorry.'"—Sunshine.

Consider the day's duties. They are the order of the day, issued by your Great Commander. Take each one of them as from His hand. Especially remember that routine, distasteful tasks are of God's ordering, and that He will superintend their performance with eye and arm.—Bishop Brent.

RESOLUTIONS.

For Colonel Massie.

The Sunday morning Bible class of Grace Church has adopted the following resolutions on the death of Colonel E. C. Massie, who for years was one of our teachers and a leading spirit and inspiration in the class:

"God in His infinite wisdom and mercy has taken to Himself the soul of our beloved teacher, and wishing to express our appreciation of his many noble qualities, and our affection for him, therefore:

BE IT RESOLVED, That in the passing of Colonel Eugene C. Massie this class, the Church and this entire community have sustained an irreparable loss. To each of us he was a personal friend and guide, an example of piety and righteous living. The chief object of his useful life was the propagation of the teachings of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, unto salvation. For the good of others he spent his substance and himself, and the world is better because he lived.

He is not dead, nor sleepeth; his pure soul has only blossomed into everlasting life.

RESOLVED FURTHER, That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, printed in the daily paper and a copy sent to his family.

H. H. VADEN,
B. H. RANDOLPH,
JNO. C. EASLEY, Committee.

This class is now named the Eugene Massie Bible Class.

PERSONAL NOTES.

For the present, the address of the Rt. Rev. Frank Hale Touret, D. D., Bishop of Idaho, is Nantucket, Mass.

The Rev. James M. Wright, formerly of the Diocese of Tennessee, is now vicar of Christ Church, Augusta, Diocese of Georgia.

The Rev. DuBose Murphey, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Starkville, Miss., has accepted a call to be rector of All Saints' Church, Austin, Tex.

The Rev. Benjamin Bean, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Pawnee, Okla., has accepted a call to be rector of St. Peter's Church, McKinney, Tex., and after June 1 may be addressed at 608 Lamar Street.

Ordinations.

In St. James' Church, Clovis, New Mexico, on April 22, 1924, the Rt. Rev.

Frederick B. Howden, D. D., Bishop of the district, ordained to the diaconate Raymond Elliot Brock. The Rev. Mr. Brock has been lay reader in charge of St. James' Church since October, 1922.

For the Southern Churchman.

A Dandelion.

Frederick Herbert Adler.

I saw a child down in the slums esteem you dear,
As misers love to hoard a treasure-box of gold.
Though oft I hear you called a weed,
e'en with a sneer,
I saw a child down in the slums esteem you dear.
You bring to meanest men the gift of beauty's cheer,
For God cast wide your seed, with love-ties manifold.
I saw a child down in the slums esteem you dear,
As misers love to hoard a treasure-box of gold.

Dependability a Priceless Trait.

At first glance it may seem that dependability is a pretty big word to fit into the lives of tiny individuals. But an hour spent in observation on any playground will reveal this characteristic and the lack of it also.

A group of wee boys and girls were enjoying recreation in the park. "You push me in the swing and then I'll give you a nice long one," pleaded Jimmy. So Elinor pushed Jimmy up in the swing many times until her little face was flushed and her arms tired. "Will you swing me as long as I'm swinging you?" she asked several times, and Jimmy always answered, "O, sure, lots longer."

But Jimmy didn't swing Elinor. He saw some of the boys headed for the slides and followed, feeling no compunctions whatever, although he left Elinor in tears.

Right across from these two children sat a small girl watching her baby brother two years younger. Repeatedly her playmates came along and asked her to wade with them in the pond, but this faithful little miss shook her head decidedly, explaining that she couldn't move from that seat until big sister came back from swimming in the tank.

So within ten yards of each other these children demonstrated both a lack of dependability and a true application of it in child life. And since they were too young to have spent much of their time under any influence except mother's, we must draw our own inference as to where the responsibility lay.

When a child is sent to do an errand a mother should hold him to his task and make him understand that she depends on him for the execution of that duty and nothing must be allowed to interfere. If Billy is given a nickel to go one block to the store for a lemon, he should receive from mother the idea that this is an important mission. And it is.

But if he stops and rides on a playmate's new kiddie car and loses the nickel—what then? Well, it would be much easier to give him another nickel and send him off again, especially if one is in a hurry to make lemon pudding. But there is an element involved much more important than five cents' worth of merchandise, for perhaps when Billy is twenty-one he may be sent by his employer to deposit a thousand dol-courage.

"I like to think of each group that is organized, no matter how small it may be, that it is doing just as did the disciples in the days of Christ. In that day, though few in number, they were the organizing spirit, the spark which has thrown out light through the whole world by sharing messages from our Master, which today through our fellowships and other ways we are trying to carry on! Each of us can be disciples of Christ. Each of us can help organize the young people in our church and community. We each can help, and by our united efforts and unselfish service we shall not only build up our own characters, but the character of the community in which we live.

"No one can visualize the significance and potentiality for future accomplishment of the earnest, active and devoted work of the Fellowship Movement which extends to so many parts of the world and which in most every church and community is such a live issue. Long may it continue to grow in power and influence in our midst and abroad."

lars in a bank. Where is he going to learn dependability for the big task if not from the first small duties assigned him?

So even though Billy's allowance may be only ten cents a week—or five, he should pay back the loss from his personal funds. If he is old enough to do the errand he is old enough to do it in a dependable way.

We cannot erect for our children a far-away, grown-up ideal of dependability and expect them to reach it at maturity by some stroke of magic. The vital qualities of character are developed from day to day amid the activities of their childhood and youth.

All mothers agree that it isn't easy to stop each day and translate dependability into terms that the little tots can understand, but in justice to the future it is fully worth while.—Edith L. Reid.

"ROBERT E. LEE: A CHARACTER SKETCH."

A 48-page pamphlet; price 15 cents; five or more copies, 10 cents each.

Prof. Graves, of the University of Virginia, who was a student and later a teacher under Lee's presidency at Lexington, wrote: "I am delighted with your little book. No one could have better, in short compass, collected the facts which show Gen. Lee to have been the best of great men, and the greatest of good men. I think it should be in the hands of all our young people," etc.

Bishop Candler: "I commend your 'Robert E. Lee: A Character Sketch.' It is an interesting and inspiring booklet to be placed in the hands of both young and old." And many other endorsements.

A musical selection was given by Miss Margarite Clark, violinist, accompanied by Miss Mary Barnes, both of the New England Conservatory of Music.

The Rev. Karl M. Block gave an inspirational and very interesting address on "The Goal of the Young People's Movement," what it means to the Church.

The boys of the choir of the St. Paul's Cathedral sang the chorus from Gallia by Gounod, Jerusalem, O Turn Thee to the Lord.

Another inspirational address was given by the Rev. William Appleton Lawrence, rector of St. Stephen's, Lynn, on "The Challenge of Youth," bringing out as the strongest point that the real challenge and the most worthwhile goal is the development of character rather than the material gains—"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold."

The program closed with several well-rendered piano selections by Miss Mary Barnes.

The young people feel that another step has been taken in accomplishing more publicity as one of three things most needed by all groups doing young people's work—leadership, publicity, cash!

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Our Day's Work

THE Southern Railway System is producing more than 100,000 ton-miles of freight transportation in the five minutes you spend reading this advertisement.

A ton-mile, the yardstick of freight service, is a ton moved one mile. For example, hauling 100,000 tons a mile equals a hundred thousand ton-miles.

It is a big day's work that an 8,300 mile railway system, with 60,000 employees, does every twenty-four hours. Our average daily performance in 1923 shows these results:

Trains operated	1,250
Distance run by trains	120,000 miles
Passengers carried	50,000
Freight loaded on our lines and received from other railroads	8,000 carloads
Freight movement	32,000,000 ton-miles
Coal burned by locomotives	14,000 tons
Wages paid	$220,000
Materials and supplies purchased	$135,000
Taxes paid	$26,000

If you will multiply any of these items by 365 the result will be a year's performance on the Southern Railway System.

The prosperity of millions of people in the twelve states served by the Southern depends on the faithful and efficient performance of our day's work.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Pity is the touch of God in human hearts.

"The worst kind of record is a blank one."

It is better to go to Jesus in desperation than not at all.

"A good conscience is able to bear very much, and is very cheerful in adversities."

Let us not foolishly think that we are some extraordinary soil that produces crops without travail.

Questions about Jesus, growing out of wonder and reverence will never wreck anybody's faith.

Humanity—love, hope, fear, faith—these make humanity. These are its sign and note and character.—Browning.

"The glory of the good is in their consciences, and not in the tongues of men. The gladness of the just is of God, and in God; and their joy is of the Truth."

Every morning comes the light, and a fresh chance of doing better. Is it not the sheerest folly and ingratitude to let yesterday spoil the God-given today?

"There are two kinds of discontent in this world—the discontent that works and the discontent that wrings its hands. The first gets what it wants, and the second loses what it has. There is no cure for the first but success, and there is no cure at all for the second."—Dr. George C. Lorrimer.

The noblest thing you ever did, the noblest emotion you ever felt, the deepest and most self-sacrificing love ever in your soul, that is your true self still, through all the baser life into which you have fallen.—Bishop Phillips Brooks.

CHRISTIAN PURPOSES FOR THE NATION

A recent bulletin of the National Council for the Prevention of War presents the following items of information, which go to show how pleasing a matter the "next war" might be:

That airplanes can be brought down, automobiles stopped and armies killed or rendered unconscious by an electric ray is the conclusion of a writer for The New York World of April 9 after witnessing the experiments of H. Grindell Matthews in London.

A motor cycle was started roaring sixty feet from the secret electrical apparatus. "Watch it!" cried the inventor as he threw a switch. The engine stopped.

Mice were killed. Vegetation was shriveled. An oil lamp was lighted. The laboratory was set on fire. The assistant had been—unintentionally—rendered unconscious for two hours. All of this occurred some sixty feet from the death-dealing apparatus.

Aircraft will soon be obsolete, says Mr. Matthews. So will machine guns. Hostile troops could be killed, or stopped and captured, by his ray.

No insulation of airplane magnetos against the ray is possible, he believes, since the ray will penetrate the thickest glass insulation. Besides, the ray would set the wings afire, thus bringing the machine down in any case.

Condensed from copyrighted article by Arthur E. Mann in the New York World of April 9, 1924.

Simultaneously with the announcement of the Matthews ray in England we learn through a copyrighted dispatch to the Chicago Tribune from Paris, dated April 13, that the French, too, have a "demon" ray that will annihilate armies.

The dispatch states that the discovery was made by a French scientist while conducting laboratory experiments in the autumn of 1918. The French Government, we are told, was preparing to install apparatus on the western front for the purpose of annihilating the German army when the Armistice came.

The new poison gas developed in Germany embodies carbon monoxide, in the opinion of the eminent French chemist, Dr. Pierre Louis Rahm, writing in the Matin.

The German chemists, he says, probably have succeeded in getting solutions of metallic carbonyls, particles of which can penetrate the filters of gas masks and then give off carbon monoxide. This gas, colorless and odorless, is one of the deadliest known to science.

Meanwhile, in Washington, the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate has appointed a sub-committee, with Senator George Wharton Pepper as Chairman, to conduct hearings on the entrance of the United States into the World Court. It is plain that many members of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the Chairman, Henry Cabot Lodge, conspicuous among them, are cynically indifferent to the whole World Court proposal; and it is altogether possible that the appointment of the sub-committee and the inauguration of "hearings" is nothing but a pompous pretense, designed to consume time and result in nothing. But it is also possible that the determined sentiment of the nation may make itself so unmistakable that even the lethargic Senate may be awed into attention. Men like Bishop Brent, of our own Church, and other spokesmen of the conscience of American Christianity, have gone to Washington to appear before the Senate Committee. Multitudes of men and women from all Christian congregations ought to back them up by telegrams and letters to Senator Pepper.

If the "next war" came and our sons were wiped out by the new gases and electric rays above described, we should bitterly regret whatever we had left undone in building beforehand the safeguards of peace.

Another matter now pending in Washington which is of vital importance to Christian people, because it involves grave possibilities of provoking international bad temper, is that section of the proposed immigration law which has reference to Japan. For a number of years, the immigration of Japanese into America has been controlled by the so-called Gentlemen's Agreement, under which the Japanese government undertook to deny passports to laborers seeking admission to this country. Under the working of this agreement, there has been a net increase by immigration in the Japanese population of the territory of the United States, including Hawaii, of only 16,096 in the last fourteen years. For the last three years, more Japanese have returned from this country than have come into it.

No one questions the RIGHT of Congress to pass a new law prohibiting Japanese immigration into this country; but the point in question is that Congress should choose to pass the law IN A WAY which wantonly offends the self-respect of Japan, notwithstanding the emphatic desire to the contrary of the Secretary of State and the President of the United States. As Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, one of the most eminent authorities on the Orient and our relations with Oriental nations, has said:

"The proper way to meet the situation is, in my judgment, for Congress to request the State Department to confer with the Japanese Government with a view to abrogating the Gentlemen's Agreement and finding some substitute mutually acceptable. This might be embodied in a new treaty. This is not only the Christian way to do things, but also the right international way of dealing with such problems.

"To break a treaty or a definite friendly agreement by abrupt legislative action instead of in the way provided by the treaties and by well-established customs and principles of international intercourse, is morally wrong and internationally disastrous. Many persons believe that the action of Congress in the matter is on a par with regarding a treaty as a mere 'scrap of paper'.

"There is a right way and a wrong way to do this thing, a friendly and an unfriendly spirit. Congress is doing it in the wrong way and in the wrong spirit. All that the churches are asking is that Congress take into consideration the moral questions involved. In this connection it is particularly to be regretted that the Senate was stampeded into action by the misinterpretation of the note from Ambassador Hanihara. The manifest blunder of the Ambassador, however, does not justify a wrong procedure by Congress.

"A careful study of the whole situation shows that the existing Gentlemen's Agreement has served its purpose and should be abrogated, but in a proper way.

"The serious aspect of the present situation is that extraordinary misunderstanding and much positive misinformation have aroused bitter feelings and recriminations on both sides of the Pacific.

At the moment when these words are written, the question of the legislation affecting Japan is being considered in a conference between committees from the Senate and the House of Representatives. President Coolidge is reported to be urging such a modification of the new law as will accomplish all the real purposes desired and yet avoid the wholly needless affront to Japan, which the bill as at present drawn conveys. The sentiment of the country ought to rally unmistakably to this position. It would be an intolerable blunder if Congress, through sheer callous bad manners should destroy the good will which the United States now possesses in the Orient, and rouse resentments which play straight into the hands of every militarist and jingo and loud inciter of possible war both in this country and in Japan.

MORE DISCUSSIONS OF THE CHURCH CONGRESS

The Views of Thinkers on the Creeds, on Marriage and Divorce, and Other Subjects.

By Special Editorial Correspondence.

The summary of the proceedings of the Church Congress, begun in the Southern Churchman last week with the report of Bishop Lawrence's opening address, is continued in this issue with material for which we are indebted in large part to the excellent reports printed in the Boston Evening Transcript.

WHAT DO THE GOSPELS TEACH US?

On Wednesday morning, April 30, (the first full day of the Congress), the subject for the opening session was, "What Do the Gospels Teach Us?", and the essayists were the Reverend Burton S. Easton, of the General Theological Seminary, and the Reverend George A. Barton, of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

Here is a fragment from Dr. Easton's paper:

"Specifically, what do the gospels, critically considered, teach us about Christ's own estimate of His person? The rapid advance of gospel criticism in the twentieth century, and particularly since the war, has upset many older views, but has substantiated others more clearly. Christ's conviction of His Messiahship is among the latter; the difficulties in the second gospel are now seen to be the result of a revision of an originally clear tradition to prevent its abuse at the hands of Judaizers.

"Now Messiah means vastly more than prophet. The Messiah was to do more than proclaim the kingdom and urge repentance, for even a general reform of mankind would not be the kingdom but a preparation for the kingdom; the kingdom is a supernatural gift from God brought through the Messiah. No doubt Christ used language that implied that the kingdom in some way was already present as He worked, but this was only an anticipatory stage. There was no thought that these beginnings were ever to reach a consummation by an orderly process of evolution: the development was essentially discontinuous and catastrophic. The completed work of the Messiah is as supernatural as the kingdom.

"By irresponsiveness on the part of the people and by the bitter hostility of the ruling classes it eventually became clear that Christ's earthly work would be crowned not with success but with death. Here was a collision between the Messianic conviction and the certain earthly prospect. This antinomy could be resolved only by the use of apocalyptic terms; the Messiahship would be realized beyond the grave from the heavenly realm, as a celestial Messiahship. When this conviction was reached we do not know; but there is no reason to doubt the gospel tradition that it was first revealed to the disciples at the time of St. Peter's confession. Such a secret was to be closely guarded, for the disciples knew as well as their Master the effect of disclosing so momentous a claim. But when Christ was placed on trial before the Sanhedrin there was no longer any reason for secrecy; the highest representatives of the chosen people had a right to the truth.

When asked if He claimed to be Messiah, Christ consequently answered that He so claimed in the highest possible sense the term would bear, that He claimed to be the Messiah from heaven. To the ears of the Sanhedrin this was blasphemy and for this blasphemy He was crucified."

Writing on the same question of "What Do the Gospels Teach Us?", Dr. Barton said in part:

"What the Gospels teach us depends upon how we approach them. It was long ago noted by those who approach them uncritically that each Gospel presents its own portrait of the Master—Mark, a marvelous teacher and worker of wonders; Matthew, the Jewish Messiah; Luke, the sympathetic Saviour of mankind; John, God walking in the flesh. He who simply reads the Gospels finds on their pages these different aspects of the life of the Son of God.

"A hundred and fifty years of critical study of the Gospels as historical sources has taught scholars that the Gospel of John is more of a theological treatise than an historical source; that Matthew was written by one who took considerable liberty with his material under the influence of a theory of the revelation of the Messiah to Old Testament prophecy; that Mark reveals the real humanity of Jesus; that, while Luke presents in the main an historical picture, he tones down the humanity and to a degree heightens the elements of marvel in the Lord's life. Underlying Matthew and Luke there are traceable two or more documents of which Mark was one. The portrait of the Master in these documents presents variation in detail.

"What is the picture of the really historical Christ as it is reconstructed by critical study based on these documents, when allowance is made for the idiosyncrasies of individual writers? It is the portrait of a real man, gracious and loving, pure and sinless, the depths of whose conscious life reach into the depths of the infinite as no other life has ever done, who sees truth with unparalleled clearness, whose radiant personality heals men's ills, physical and mental, who knows himself as one with God in nature and purpose, who therefore reveals God as no other can, and who knows it his mission to do so.

"In handling the details of this life scholars are divided into two groups, and some of the details of the portrait as drawn by the different groups differ. One group accepts the accounts of the temptation as historical, believes that in this experience Our Lord determined not to be the kind of Messiah the Jews expected, and that some of the eschatological utterances attributed to Him in the Gospels are later accretions. The other group rejects the narratives of the temptation as unhistorical, believes Jesus responsible for all the eschatological material in the Gospels; thinks that He expected the kingdom of God to come by cataclysm, but was more than once disappointed in this and so determined to die. Jesus, as this group of writers see Him, shares more of our human limitation and frailty than when seen through the eyes of the offer group, but as seen by either group He reveals God through a perfect humanity and is the Saviour of the world. The present writer is, however, one of those who regards the narratives of the temptation as real.

"For many readers of today some of the miracles in the Gospels are difficult to believe. We should remember that men then understood nature but little, they expected wonders, and explained what they saw in accordance with their theories of the universe. We can often distinguish between what they witnessed and their explanation of it, and gain for ourselves and for the modern world a view of the Master as attractive and compelling as that in any of the Gospels was for men in the first century."

DIVORCE AND RE-MARRIAGE.

At the second period of the morning session of Wednesday, the question of "Divorce and Re-Marriage" was discussed by the Reverend Milo H. Gates, of New York, and by Dr. Katherine Bement Davis, General Secretary of the Bureau of Hygiene of the Rockefeller Foundation.

One striking paragraph from Dr. Gate's paper was the following:

"I have spoken about the practical confusion of the clergy, being at one and the same time State agents and priests of the Church. We must cease to be State agents. We must act only as priests of the Church. I hope to see the publication of banns restored. It seems to me that the Church ought to take the stand—perfectly logical, perfectly consistent and perfectly Christian—that she will bless only the marriage of her own children. If we do this, we shall be doing just what we ought to do, and what the Prayer Book, by its arrangement of services, clearly shows should be done. We baptize our children, we instruct them, and bring them to Confirmation. After Confirmation comes the marriage service. I cannot see how we are called upon, neither can I think that we ought otherwise to officiate. I do not conceive that this question is a question here to be considered, except as affecting the Church of which we are members. The Church's ideal is clear—the union of one man and one woman for life."

Dr. Davis' paper was an appeal for very thoughtful study of social facts.

"Whether you are a fundamentalist," she said, "and believe literally that on the sixth day God created man and woman, physically complete in essentials as they are today, or whether you are a modernist, believing in evolution and that mankind has developed slowly and painfully, through countless ages from the primeval protoplasmic particle, the end result is the same.

"Today we are here on earth—the human race—composed of two sexes, male and female.

"Again—whatever may be our conception of human marriage—whether we regard it as a divine ordinance, sanctified by Jesus Christ and the Church, or whether we consider monogamous marriage as we know it in our Western civilization to be simply the result of the development of race experience, conditioned by climate, economic history and thought-trends, for our purposes in this discussion the problem is identical.

"We of the United States are representative of the countries in which civilization is based ideally on the permanent union of one man and one woman who bring into the world, condition the lives and train and educate the children who form the next generation. The fundamental and most important fact from which we cannot get away, if we would, is that the world is made up of men and women who come together to continue the race.

"Today as perhaps never before in history we are questioning all human relationships. Our Christian monogamous marriage cannot escape. If it is to endure as we know it, or even in modified form, it must justify itself as on the whole the most satisfactory relationship possible between man and woman.

"In this situation what should be the attitude of the Christian Church? It is not enough for it to reiterate its belief in the divine origin of this relationship in its present particular form. We must be prepared to meet criticism with a reasoned programme based on the best that science can furnish us. Such a programme in my judgment must be based on two considerations:

"First—A recognition of the questioning spirit of the times which cannot be ignored or repressed.

"Second—A recognition of the Church's own responsibility for a considerable part of the dissatisfaction with the married relation, as it has existed in the past and as it has largely been continued up to the present.

"In view of this we should undertake a very searching and fundamental study of the marriage relationship itself, as a pre-requisite to a complete understanding of the present day restlessness and protest. This study should include not only the economic situation militating against early marriage, the change in the position of women, economic, social and political, but more important than these aspects, if some of our modern thinkers are to be believed, the sex relationships themselves. Such a study calls for the cooperation of the foremost scientists of the day—the sociologists, the physiologists and that of the various groups studying man's mind and its influence on behavior.

"The knowledge so gained should be used by the Church in all its departments, first for the education of parents, second for the teachers of youth, and third for youth itself.

"Unless the Church is willing very soon to take a prominent part in such a programme there is grave danger that it will find its leadership superseded so far as this relationship is concerned.

"Some of us believe that regardless of our own convictions as to the divine inspiration of all its creeds and doctrine we can at least agree that it is not out of place for the Church to aid a movement that is seeking better to adjust the most vital of human relationships and thus help in the fulfillment of Christ's words: 'I am come that they may have life and that they might have it more abundantly'."

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THE CREEDS?

On Wednesday afternoon, "The Value of Auricular Confession" was discussed by Dr. Delany, of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, and by the Reverend Percy G. Kammerer, of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh.

The value of the Congress in stimulating thought through disagreement was vividly exemplified in the Wednesday evening session when the subject was "Shall We Discontinue Making Creeds a Test of Church Membership?"

The Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, the Rev. George C. Foley, D. D., professor of Divinity at the Philadelphia Divinity School, and Dr. George Emerson Brewer, emeritus professor of surgery at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, were the principal proponents of simplifying the requirements, and the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. A. Hall, Bishop of Vermont, championed the continuance of the Creed. During the discussion which followed the formal addresses, Bishop George Ashton Oldham, of Albany, also spoke in favor of the Creed, and Bishop H. R. Hulse, of Cuba, appeared on the other side of the question, saying that no man should be asked by the Church more than the Saviour asked, which was "Follow Me."

Professor Foley declared that all those whom Christ would have welcomed ought to be welcomed now. "Many desire to follow Christ," he said, "who are perplexed about some of the Church's affirmations. It is simply tragic to have to leave so much genuine goodness outside of the Church, for it is all of divine inspiration. We desire to have every follower of Christ as Lord within the family where he belongs; we therefore advocate the discontinuance of the Creed as requisite to Church membership."

Bishop Vincent's opinion was that the general effect of the use of the Creed as a requisite to membership in the Church is to make Christians think they are saved not by their own faith, but by the Church's corporate faith. He would require a profession of faith only in Jesus.

On the other side of the question, Bishop Hall declared that the Church from the first has required a profession of belief as a condition for baptism, and he thought that to give up the requirement might be regarded as surrender of a definite faith. Division and perhaps disruption might be caused within the Episcopal Church, by such action, he thought, and many of the Protestant bodies would be shocked by such a proposal.

CHAPTERS OF A MISSIONARY'S LIFE IN CHINA

A Letter from the Reverend and Mrs. Lloyd R. Craighill

DEAR Friends in America:

Another China New Year Day finds me beginning a letter to you, but this time in our own Nanchang instead of Shanghai, as last year. We woke up at three this morning to the sound of a perfect bombardment. I found myself wondering if I wasn't getting some idea of trench warfare, for the cannon fire-crackers were being set off with such a tremendous roar. Perhaps the excess of gun-powder does produce rain, for certain it is that a gentle little patter is coming down, and I pity the Chinese callers who have to go through the streets today all dressed up in their new silks and satins which spot with water.

Last night Mr. Craighill prowled around the streets before the nine P. M. service which Mr. Den had arranged for those who wanted to find in the church an escape from the ancestral worship, which was going on in so many homes. He said the streets were full of interest. For you could peer into almost any door-way and see the table spread with the evening meal which the spirits are to partake of on their arrival. The red candles glowing on the table make a spot of brilliance in the gloomy recesses of the Chinese room and often a pan of lighted charcoal stands in the doorway to assure the spirits of a warm welcome. But the childlike conception of welcoming back the ghosts of the departed with such material preparations struck me anew as I heard about it. I am glad we can believe our dear ones who have gone before are close to us in another realm.

But I'm supposed to tell you something about what we have been doing for the women and girls in this half of the year since we came back from our Kuling summer. As I think back over the fall I realize that the beautiful weather was in part responsible for making it one of the best seasons of work we have had. With such streets as we are blessed with here in Nanchang, rough, half-paved, with old worn stones full of holes—the condition in rainy weather makes us long for flying machines. But in the fall we have very little rain, and the women can come out on their little bound feet without difficulty, and schools have almost always their full quota of scholars.

The great accomplishment was the arrival of Deaconess Pitcher, who has become so firmly established already we don't know how we ever got along without her. She began to show her genius for really caring for people and taking an interest in them as individuals at once, and though pretty much hampered by the change of dialect, and her one year of language study, out she started on a round of calls with our little Nanchang Bible Woman, realizing quite rightly that the only way to get the language is to use all you have all the time. Moreover, in some marvelous way she could come back home and tell us what the women had talked to her about! Of course, she has found out all kinds of things during these calls—the friendliness and cordiality which make our visits a pleasure as well as the poverty and ignorance which show us how much we are needed. And there is nothing which helps along those long morning hours of Chinese study so much as the knowledge that in the afternoon you'll be going somewhere to use the new word you've learned.

I had the supervision of the girls' day school, which is in better condition than it ever has been, thanks to the arrival of a normal school graduate for the lower grades, as well as the return of Miss Heng, a St. Hilda's girl, who is teaching the two grades of older children. My special contact with the school children themselves has been in a club, "The Pioneers," for the older girls, worked out somewhat along the lines of the Girl Guides, by the Y. W. C. A., and which has met Sundays instead of the more orthodox Sunday-school Class. I'm a little appalled by the varied knowledge the leader is called on to have—all the way from First-Aid to tying six kinds of knots!—but it is a splendid incentive to keep on learning myself.

The women's classes for Inquirers and Catechumens have met at our house once a week, and I greatly enjoyed teaching them. This year, thanks to something Deaconess Pitcher had tried in America, and her collection of tiny pictures illustrating the Life of Christ, we had each one of the women make her own illustrated book of the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, learning a clause and adding a picture each week. They loved it, and I'm sure it gives added content to the words.

Now I'm going to give you some idea of our Christmas, for that, I'm glad to say, is becoming each year more truly a time of joy and thanksgiving to our church members and adherents. This year we could say was the best yet, and not just because there were larger numbers and more events and more presents and prettier trimmings. All this fall we have felt more deeply the undercurrent of spiritual growth in our church members, and the Christmas season was just another expression of it. You felt conscious of it Sunday in the hearty service, in our quaint Chinese guest hall which does duty for our church and which was delightfully trimmed with hemlock and cedar, as well as star-shaped lanterns, all done by the church people themselves. There were some infant baptisms that morning, reminding us of the message which the Christ Child has for these little ones in China. And Christmas Eve, after dark, we held a lantern service at which there were eleven baptisms, including my class of eight women which has grown so dear to me. After the service the congregation poured out into the courtyard, which was hung around on all four sides with lanterns on which were written the characters for Christmas. In the center of the yard were two huge lanterns on standards, symbolizing "The Light of the World" and "Love" from which the members lighted their candles and then proceeded to form a procession, carrying their lanterns and singing Christmas carols as they marched around our compound. I stood on the upstairs porch and looked down at the beauty of those dancing lights and then to the starry Heavens above, and thanked God the star of Bethlehem was still "guiding to the Perfect Light."

Christmas Day itself was full to the brim with "good will to men" if not "peace on earth"! First we had our own breakfast (Oregon apples, waffles and sausage, if you want me to be exact!) and then our tree, which had an excuse for itself in the fact that the Y. M. C. A. Allens with their two little boys are still living with us. It was just like home—cutting strings and pulling out presents to be showed off or tried on, as the case might be—and thinking of our beloved families and friends who made that part of the day for us. And then before we knew it came troops of church members to wish us "Merry Christmas" on their way to the eleven o'clock service of Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.

That was followed by a—would you call it "church dinner?"—which they had prepared themselves. They even played "Donkey Party" and "Going to Jerusalem," while they were waiting for the call to dinner. I sped back home to try in vain to collect various members of the household for our own Christmas dinner, but at four o'clock we sat down under green and red paper streamers to a real "home side" meal, ending up with plum pudding according to a recipe of Mrs. Allen's English mother.

But that wasn't the end, for the St. Matthew's School play, interspersed with musical and other numbers by various church members and friends drew a large crowd in the evening, while the next day the little school girls gave a "play" all their own, showing the transforming influence of Christianity in home life. I was proud of their poise and ability in general, and they were made most happy by gifts of soap and wash clothes and crayons, sent from America. That evening the school boys had their presents and repeated their play for the neighborhood Sunday-school children. Do you wonder that Wednesday we dropped into our chairs with a dull thud, read our Christmas books, and refused to be pried out on any pretext? And yet it really was a lovely Christmas!

I see that Mrs. Craighill in the above has given you some of the more interesting features of our half year's work, but there are still a few things concerning the work of our congregation about which I think you will be glad to hear. The most encouraging of these is the organization of a preaching band among the church members to preach the Good News in the surrounding country and in open places in the city. This "missionary" work originated among our Chinese Christians and has been carried out and supported by them. They can get a hearing when the presence of the foreigner would excite only idle curiosity or perhaps opposition.

Such things as growth in numbers make tame reading. When I report such statistics as:

Confirmations	13
Adult Baptisms	9
Infant Baptisms	8
Catechumens admitted	26

it perhaps doesn't strike a spark of interest, but if you knew Mr. Lee, the flower gardener, who was confirmed, and Mr. Kao and Mr. Hu and a number of other young government school students who were admitted Catechumens in one class, then you would feel truly thankful as I do for the spreading faith in Our Lord that those cold figures represent.

Part of this growth has been due to the Wednesday night prayer meetings, which Mr. Den has succeeded in developing in recent months into a time of free discussion and spontaneous prayer. The thirty or forty who come every Wednesday evening enter with evident interest into a discussion of such subjects as The Right of Free Betrothal, Ancestor Worship, Foot Binding, Home Relationships and the like. On such subjects China is doing some thinking today, and men and women are eager for any light Christianity can give them on their problems.

The first group of buildings is at last completed. St. Matthew's School will begin its new term in its new home on February 20. Soon the foundations will be laid for the church parish hall, and girls' school, which will complete the group. We are encouraged from the appearance of the present structure to believe that the completed whole will be a beautiful as well as serviceable fabric. The carved window frames and doors; the round door-way opening into the pebbled courtyard with its raised brick-faced flower bed against the south wall, up which we hope to train some vines; the dark red color of the wood work with just enough black to form a contrast; the gray tiled roofs; and crowning all the bell tower, somewhat like a little square Chinese summer house with its up curving roof, in which hangs our American church bell and from which you can have a most interesting and varied view of the city; all these distinctly Chinese features combined with the airiness and light and sanitary features contributed by Western architecture, make us feel that we have here a combination which will appeal to the Chinese as well as to you who may come to visit us. How I wish you might be with us for the opening reception tomorrow, when we have invited church members to come in the morning, parents of the school children, and the foreigners in the city, to come in the afternoon and inspect us. I have taken some pictures which we may be able to have published so you can see for yourselves something of what we look like.

With greetings to you all, and again a request that you continue to aid us by your prayers and interest in this work which we all share together for our Master,

Yours most sincerely,

RECRUITING FOR THE MINISTRY

A Report Prepared for the Board of Christian Education of the Diocese of Los Angeles

By the Reverend Robert B. Gooden and the Reverend Irving Spencer

THE question of securing men for the ministry is such a big one that we do not believe that any cut and dried methods can be pursued. The Roman Church makes constant efforts in every way to secure men for the ministry. They make these efforts, not on behalf of a falling Church and of a Church begging for men for the ministry, but on behalf of a growing Church, for whom it is a privilege to serve and for whom every family, ought to be glad to have one member, if possible, as a priest. We believe that it is a mistake to preach the call to the ministry in such a way that young men will think that the Church is in great need and begging for them to serve. This may be true, and always will be true, for the field is always white to the harvest and the laborers few; but, at the same time, we must remember that the Church is a divine institution and cannot fail. Work in the ministry must be presented as a privilege and as a glorious opportunity, and never as a frantic call to supply a Church starving from the lack of clergy. We feel that there is too much talk in the latter strain and not enough in the former strain.

A first suggestion for recruiting the ministry is that parents need to be educated. Systematic efforts should be made to train them that the ministry is as possible a vocation for their sons as any other vocation. In their minds today there are numerous thoughts about vocations for their children, but the ministry practically never enters into these thoughts. The reason for this, it is not necessary to discuss here. It is hardly to be expected that young men will seek a vocation that never even enters into the minds of their parents, or, if it does enter, only meets with disapproval. We cannot lay down any rules as to how this effort should be made to educate the parents, but that it must be done and can be done this committee steadfastly believes. It is a question for each rector to decide for himself. He ought to have enough interest for the vocation in which he finds himself to interest and educate the parents of the boys who are to come along and carry on his work in the future.

The second suggestion is that it is possible for the clergy to come into touch with their boys and find out what they want to be. No man has such a unique opportunity for this as the rector of a parish. How many rectors of parishes have any notion whatever as to what is in the minds of the young men with respect to their life work? If a young man has already made a decision, well and good. Encourage him in it. If he is in doubt or has not thought of the matter at all, there is an opportunity to mention the ministry as a possible career. This would include the preparation necessary and the methods to follow in order to secure ordination. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility to have some kind of vocational club which will meet from time to time to discuss questions of vocation, where the vocation of the ministry will have not only an even break with other vocations, but where it may be with propriety be presented as the most important vocation. It surely is not too much to ask that the rector should be familiar enough with the young men of his flock to know what each one intends to do for his life work. We read that the good shepherd knows his flock.

A third suggestion is that the clergy should use their teachers. By teachers we mean the heads of every parish organization, and not only the teachers in the Sunday School. As an executive, he might get together all these heads and tell them that one of their duties is to make a systematic and continuous mention of the vocation of the ministry for the boys that come under their charge. This could be done in the Sunday School, in the Choir, in the Boy Scouts, etc. In this way an atmosphere of vocation might be created where the ministry would not only not be left out, but would be included with emphasis. It is useless to expect, under the present day conditions, that the ministry as a vocation will be thought of seriously, unless it is done within the organizations of the Church through the church teachers and leaders in these several organizations, at the definite request and command of the rector.

A fourth suggestion is about sermons on the ministry. Your committee believes that sermons on the ministry ought not to take the form of appealing to boys to come into the ministry, but should set forth the glory of the ministry as a vocation. All types of men can find themselves in the ministry—the scholar, the devout, the ascetic, the man of the world, the pioneer, the man of adventure, the teacher, the writer, the orator. Such different men as Edward Pusey, Phillips Brooks, and Hudson Stuck, may find the largest field for every effort which they may put forth. Sermons that are pleas will be of no avail. Sermons that speak in the language of glorious adventure, hard service, and rich rewards—not in terms of money—will not fail of some response.

A fifth suggestion is based on the fact that the third Sunday in Advent is not enough out of the fifty-two Sundays of the year in which to stress the ministry. The Ember Season should be more definitely used for what they are intended. This committee would make a suggestion which ought to appeal to the clergy. Of all the Sundays in the Church year, the Sunday after Ascension is perhaps one of the hardest Sundays definitely to use. The poet speaks about being "betwixt two worlds; one dead, the other powerless to be born." The Sunday after Ascension finds the Church with the ascended Lord, but the gift of the spirit not yet come. His last command still lingers in the ears: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." In a week the Church is to be gladdened with the Spirit of God. Why could not this Sunday be used with very great advantage to stress the min-

SERVICE OF ADMISSION.

A serious question is raised by the publication in a number of Diocesan Handbooks of a Form of Admission Service to be used by Service Leagues and Fellowships as a means of introducing formally members who have passed their probationary period—where such an arrangement obtains—or have been duly elected into the local society. Without doubt it dignifies initiation to have some Service of Admission and there is a certain educational advantage in defining the aims of the League or Fellowship at the very beginning of ones relationship to the society of which he becomes a member.

It is the character of the service that causes comment. Most of the Leagues suggest that the service be held at the chancel rail, that members be initiated by the acceptance of certain obligations put to them in question form, and by the bestowal of some badge or pin. The greatest danger involved in this type of service is that your new member categorically assumes certain obligations, pledges if you will, under the most solemn auspices. It is true that frequently the answer gives some leeway so that the pledge is not absolute, but one questions very seriously whether we are not detracting somewhat from the solemnity of the Lord's Supper and the Confirmation Office by arranging more services at the chancel rail. We now have a similar service for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Daughters of the King, the Admission of Choristers, the Girls' Friendly Society and some feel that the time has come to call a halt. Is the Young People's Service League an exclusive or an inclusive organization? Are not all of the requirements for membership inherent fundamentally in our Christian profession? Are we not obscuring the central emphasis by singling out a few features of the Service League program and thus discounting others which are quite as fundamental? If this society is for all young people who are presumably baptized Christians and overwhelmingly communicant members, what is the special virtue of this type of Admission Service? Will this Service materially incite to the carrying out of the promises made? If not, then we have more broken pledges, in addition to the invasion of the sanctuary where the gain is questionable at best. There are some young people certainly who decline to put themselves on record in so formal a fashion and it may militate to keep out of the League those who belong, nominally to other Christian communions and who would naturally feel an embarrassment about accepting pledges in the chancel of an Episcopal Church with a clergyman in the robes of his office and all of the solemnity associated with the Confirmation Service. A more helpful method might be to have a service conducted entirely by the young people in their own meeting. It would not lack in dignity and it would thus avoid those difficulties enumerated above. In order that the meaning of this article may be perfectly clear there is appended hereto a form of service which is a case in point.

THE MACON CONFERENCE.

Leaguers From Dioceses of Atlanta and Georgia Hold Three Days' Conference at Macon, Georgia.

Even the most skeptical would have been converted to a belief in the ability of the young people of the Church to conduct their own meetings and develop their own organization had they attended the sessions of the Annual Conference of the Y. P. S. L. of the Dioceses of Atlanta and Georgia, May 9-11, at Christ Church, Macon, Georgia. In addition to the Macon delegation there were about one hundred and fifteen delegates and members from the Leagues of the two Dioceses. Twenty-four Leagues were represented. Altogether two hundred persons joined in the Conference Sessions.

The Conference began with a banquet in Rotary Hall at which addresses were made by the Bishop of Georgia and the Bishop of Atlanta, and the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, of Savannah, and the Rev. Karl M. Block, of Roanoke, in addition to shorter talks by the young people and the Rev. O. J. Hart, whose Parish League acted as host. Mr. Thomas M. Johnson, the President of the Joint Diocesan League, who is also the presiding officer of the Y. P. S. L. of the Province of Sewanee, was the executive officer of the Convention.

It was decided to maintain the inter-diocesan relationship for a year or two longer, but the Constitution of the Diocesan League was somewhat changed to allow for a full complement of officers in each Diocese. The matter of a Diocesan pin brought forth considerable discussion, but it was overwhelmingly decided to retain the pin of the C. S. S. L. until 1925 and the meeting of the General Convention. It was determined to continue working for the Diocesan objective—the construction of a boat to be named the "Georgia"—for the use of the Rev. Robert G. Tatum of Tenana, Alaska. A demonstration meeting was held with the subject, "Our Principles," with short talks on Worship, Service, Study and Fellowship. After a picnic supper a devotional service in preparation for the Corporate Communion was held on the Winship estate. In spite of most inclement weather almost one hundred and fifty attended the Corporate Communion. The Conference closed with the Morning Service and the Convention Sermon preached by the Rev. Karl Block. It was decided to give the morning offering to the Rev. Mr. Chu for his work in the Diocese of Anking, China.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR THE CHURCH.

From North Carolina comes the following news item which we take pleasure in quoting, trusting that other clergymen throughout the country will follow the example of those of North Carolina in attending their state conferences of Social Workers:

"At the recent State Conference for social workers held in Charlotte, there were a dozen or more clergymen of the Episcopal Church present and a number of laymen and women of the Church, showing the interest that this Church is taking in welfare work in its broadest sense. The conference is an annual meeting held under the auspices of the State Board of Public Welfare and there were some five hundred persons attending the various sessions. There was little interest shown in the conference on the part of organized Christianity and the writer met only two ministers of other churches than our own, though the work being done is distinctly applied Christianity—care of defectives, wayward boys and girls, prison reform, and welfare work of every kind.

"It is an interesting fact that the retiring president of the conference, Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, is a Churchman, as is also Mrs. Kate Burr Johnson, head of the State Department of Public Welfare, than whom there are possibly no more devoted advocates of reform and social betterment in the South. One of the sessions, that devoted to the Church and Social Service, was presided over by an Episcopal clergyman, the Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, chairman of the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of North Carolina. Dr. Worth Tippy, Executive Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, was the speaker at this meeting. Dr. Alva Taylor, another social reform advocate of national reputation, was on the program and spoke on industry and public welfare."

By reason of its broad view of life, and liberality in most things we believe that the Episcopal Church has a very unusual opportunity for leadership in social work, and it is indeed fine to see our clergymen taking their positions in the advance guard of the Army of Social Welfare.

With this opportunity comes, as is always the case, a responsibility which we cannot shirk. It will be remembered that St. Luke tells us in the ninth chapter of his gospel that Our Saviour sent His Apostles forth with a double commission "to preach the Kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." We feel sure that He Who included prisoners amongst those for whom He had regard and consideration, would want us to interpret "the sick" to mean those who are weak in spirit and will, and by reason of this weakness, have fallen under the condemnation of the law.

"The purpose of such conferences as that referred to above is to improve conditions of public health in rural communities, and of jails, almshouses, and other provisions for the poor and recreant everywhere. Attendance at such meetings is most certainly a part of Our Saviour's Commission.

The annual or biennial reports of the State Board of Public Welfare, or State Board of Charities and Corrections, or of Public Charities, as it is variously called in different states, should be in the library of every clergyman. These reports are gladly sent free of charge upon application to the secretary of the board. They contain information about every charitable and penal institution in the state, giving its location, conditional admission, etc.

The State Boards of Health also issue valuable bulletins giving the steps necessary to be taken for procuring free clinics.

Both these boards are always eager to have the cooperation of the clergy, and respond gladly to any inquiries relative to procuring district nurses, or placing homeless children, and it is the duty of the clergy to use the assistance which they so readily give.

WHAT SHALL A CHRISTIAN DO WITH $5,000,000?

Mr. Arthur Nash, of the A. Nash Tailoring Company of Cincinnati, is much concerned over his rapidly increasing wealth. According to his statement, the following situation confronts him:

"In 1918, the year previous to starting to try to live actually as I thought the Man of Galilee would live, do literally by every man and woman in our factory just as I would want them to do with me if our positions were reversed, and actually deal with every customer on our books as I would want to be dealt with if I were the customer, our company had done $132,190 worth of business. The first year of the Christ Crusade in our industry, 1919, we did $525,678 worth of business. The next year, 1920, which was considered a panic year in the clothing industry, we did $1,580,700 worth of business. The next year it was $2,077,559. We were hampered this year by lack of room in a building we had expected to be adequate for some time, and during the latter part of the year were compelled to move our entire factory into our present plant. In 1922 we did $3,751,181.25 worth of business, and in 1923 $5,958,508.67.

"So far this year we have averaged more business each week than we did in the entire year of 1918, and we have averaged more business each month than we did in the entire year of 1919, and we did more business in the first three months than we did in the entire year of 1920. The business for the first four months exceeded by far the entire year of 1921. Our business so far this year has practically equaled the business for the same period of the two previous years, 1922 and 1923, added together.

"Now as to the question of profits. Early in our experience, in a great meeting with the workers, the wage of the corporation was fixed on a piece work basis. It was decided that a fair remuneration for the company would be $1 per suit net profit. As our suits retail for $23.50, this is about four and one-half per cent on our turnover. This year it is evident that we will make nearly or quite five hundred thousand suits and our capital at the beginning of this year was one million dollars, so you can readily see that our profits, if we make the number of suits indicated, will be a half million dollars, or fifty per cent on our capital stock—and our earnings have approximated this percentage during this entire period.

"With all of us, the workers and myself, investing our earnings and savings in stock of the company, and with the successive stock dividends, the workers now have over three hundred thousand dollars in stock and I personally hold over six hundred thousand dollars worth.

"We are now in process of enlarging our corporation, making the capital three million dollars, and will very shortly declare another one hundred per cent stock dividend. As any one can readily see, this will give me over a million dollars worth of stock in the A. Nash Company.

"I am offering this statement to the religious publications of our country, with the privilege of using all or any part of it, for one purpose. That is because I want to know the answer to the questions raised above. I know that these papers are read by ministers and other thinkers who are spiritually minded and who think in terms of righteousness and peace."

He concludes with the following question and paragraph:

"What would a man do who sincerely and honestly wanted to follow the letter and spirit of the teachings of Jesus, if He were placed in the situation described in this article?"

"Of course I have no way of knowing how many of the religious papers, especially the official papers of the various denominations, will publish this article; but I feel certain that if it receives a general distribution, I will have thousands of replies. I ask the privilege of reserving the right to quote from any communications received.

May 25---The Day: Japan---The Object

In every parish and mission on Sunday, May 25, there is to be, in so far as the plan of the Japan Reconstruction Fund has been followed, a general offering which marks the culmination of the raising of that Fund.

Immediately after the earthquake and fire, the first week of September, every effort was directed to the raising of an little or no organization, within four months. By that time full first-hand information had been obtained from Japan, and the Emergency relief was followed by the effort, now at its height, to secure funds which would not only provide permanent physical reconstruction in Tokyo, but would fulfil the American Church's desire and determi-

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH:

No one can visit Japan and take the trouble to inspect our churches, hospitals and schools without being profoundly impressed with the blessing with which God has crowned the work and sacrifice of Christian missionaries.

This is true in a special degree of the work of the representatives of our own communion, by whose labors a native Church, with eight Bishops, two of whom are native Japanese, has grown into corporate activity and efficiency.

Many manifestations of the Japanese Government's recognition of the educational and benevolent work of this Japanese Christian Church—the Nippon Sei Kokwai—have been given in recent years; because the Church has appealed not only to individuals but to the Japanese nation itself.

The earthquake and fire have checked the progress of this Church. St. Luke's Hospital, St. Paul's Middle School and St. Margaret's School have been destroyed; three of the University buildings have been badly damaged, and seven churches with homes of the clergy, are in ruins.

The people of Japan, the Government, our own people and our fellow Christians are eagerly waiting to see what the American Episcopal Church is going to do to meet this crisis. With resolute faith and splendid enthusiasm our two Japanese Bishops and their clergy and people are worshipping in temporary buildings and private houses, confident that we will not permit to pass unheeded this unexampled opportunity to impress Japan with the reality of our determination to spread the Gospel of the Kingdom.

We have adopted the slogan, "Let us rise up and build," and we believe that our Church people everywhere will respond to our appeal.

May 25, Rogation Sunday, has been appointed by the National Council as the day for special offerings to be made for this great cause; and "God loveth a cheerful giver."

THOS. F. GAILOR,

President National Council.

WM. COOPER PROCTER,

Chairman Executive Committee.

Emergency Fund for the almost desperate needs of the present year and to keep the work going until permanent reconstruction could be accomplished. The distinction between the Emergency and the Reconstruction Fund was explained at the time. The Emergency Fund of $500,000 was completed, with nation to continue its great mission to the Japanese.

Every opportunity has been taken to reach the people of the Church with full information. There has been much cooperation from the parochial, diocesan and general Church papers, while Bishops and clergy have made evident their whole-hearted support of the undertaking.

The unprecedented opportunities offered by the needs of the work in Tokyo have, during the past four months, been presented to many groups, and now, as far as possible, all communicants and all the Church School children are to receive information and pledge cards sent out in preparation for the general offering of May 25.

Since, in spite of every effort, there are still Church people who know only too little about the whole great undertaking, it is not superfluous to summarize once more its cause and its purpose. The earthquake and fire literally wiped out the churches, St. Paul's Middle School for Boys, St. Margaret's School for Girls, St. Luke's Hospital and our missionaries' homes in Tokyo, and greatly damaged St. Paul's University outside the city. This is the barest possible statement, taking no account of the personal losses of missionaries, or the situation of our Japanese staff, thus left without means of support except as the Emergency Fund carries them for the time being.

The Japan Reconstruction Fund is to build the churches, and the schools, and the great hospital, and the necessary houses for the mission staff. Details and explanations are available, showing the irresistible appeal made by each of these phases of the Church's work. A total of $3,000,000 is needed, of which $600,000 is to come from the use or disposition of the land now owned by the Church in Tokyo, leaving $2,400,000 to be given by the men and women and children of the Church.

It is hoped that all the pledges, large and small, including those that have been made previous to the general offering, may be presented in that offering on Sunday. This "material" gift of money provides for the demonstration of Christianity through St. Luke's Hospital, the training of Christian leaders for the leading nation of the Orient, and the building up of a native self-supporting Church in Japan.

Church Intelligence

Have They Registered?

The second Boy Conference on the Ministry at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., is less than two months' distant. Registrations to the present are larger than in 1922, when the Conference was about to be tried as a venture of faith. It proved a success not only in point of numbers, but in the fine spirit which prevailed, and because of the inspiration which came to over three hundred boys, some of whom, doubtless, will embrace the opportunity of a life work which the ministry affords; all of whom, certainly, went home with higher ideals.

As one result of the first conference, the Archbishop of Canterbury has asked for all data regarding it, and the expediency of such a conference in England is now being considered by the Archbishop's Committee.

The June meeting at Concord will carry forward the work of giving the Ministry a hearing among a new set of boys. With the hearty cooperation of the clergy and laity, the young men should go back to their respective parishes, probably not settled in mind about their life work, but with a keener sense of the Church's need and a desire to serve her.

Let it be remembered that this is a conference about the ministry. The Committee takes pains to assure itself, its selected group leaders and the Church in general that, while inevitably personal convictions will be deepened, its purpose is the study of a vocation, and that, too, on an objective basis rather than in a too personal way. No pledge from any boy will be asked for or accepted.

The speakers at the general meetings will be: Bishop Slattery, Bishop Roberts, Bishop Brent, the Rev. Samuel S. Drury, the Rev. S. G. Scott and others.

Thirty group leaders have been carefully chosen not only for their experience in student and parochial life, but also because of their ability to put clearly and forcefully before the boys the opportunities for unique service which the ministry affords.

All registration blanks, which are sent only by request, should be sent in before June 1, the last day of registration.

Clergy, laymen, boys! "The fields are white already for the harvest, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the Harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest."

St. Augustine's Conference.

St. Augustine's Conference for Negro Church Workers will be held June 2 to 6 at St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C.

The object of the Conference is to train Leaders for the Work of the Church in the Departments of Education, Social Service, and Missions, and among the directors of the various courses are such well known leaders as Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, the Rev. Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, Miss Emily C. Tilton, the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, Dean Charles N. Lathrop, the Rev. Floyd Tompkins, Jr., and the Rev. A. Myron Cochran. The speakers for the special night meetings are: the Rt. Rev. Joseph B. Cheshire, D. D., Diocese of North Carolina; the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., Director, the American Church Institute for Negroes; the Ven. James S. Russell, D. D., Principal, St. Paul School, Lawrenceville, Virginia; Mrs. Kate Burr Johnson, Commissioner of Public Welfare, North Carolina State Board of Charities; the Rev. Leroy Ferguson, rector, St. Cyprian's Church, Boston, Massachusetts; the Rev. Robert I. Johnson, St. Cyprian's Church New Bern, North Carolina; Wallace A. Battle, Principal, Okolona Industrial School, Okolona, Mississippi; the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, St. Philip's Church, New York City.

The School Chapel and other buildings on the campus make a charming environment, and the climate in June is delightful. It is hoped that the clergy will take advantage of the opportunity to hold conferences, and that the lay people, young and old, will attend in large numbers.

Delegates will be assigned accommodations in the order of their application. The registration fee of one dollar must be sent with the application, which should be sent to Lieut. Lawrence A. Oxley, St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, North Carolina. Make checks payable to Miss Bertha Richards, Treasurer.

INFORMATION WANTED.

To The Editor of the Southern Churchman:

I desire to secure a copy of the memoirs of the Rev. Devereux Jarratt of Virginia, and also, if possible, a copy of a volume of sermons published by him. Mr. Garrett was minister for several years in Bath Parish, and one of the early Evangelicals. His Memoir was published about the end of the eighteenth century.

If any reader of the Southern Churchman can assist me in this matter I shall be greatly obliged.

Memorials To Archdeacon Stuck and Dr. Betticher Consecrated.

Two men whose lives were consecrated to the mission work of the Church in Alaska, were fittingly remembered at the Church Missions House, New York, Thursday, May 8, at a service of the Holy Communion in the Chapel, where a baptismal font to the memory of the Rev. Charles E. Betticher, and an altar book to the memory of the Venerable Hudson Stuck, were presented and consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Thomas Frank Gailor, D. D., President of the National Council of the Church. The memorials were made possible by gifts secured in the Mission House.

During the service, which was simple and impressive and was attended by a majority of the Missions House staff, Bishop Gailor spoke feelingly of the transforming and mellowing influence of God's love in the lives of the two men which were given up to the service of the Church, and of the influence and example of their work upon those who are following in their footsteps among the people of Alaska.

Pageant Presented at St. Stephen's.

In St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector, a pageant entitled "Easter Dawn and New Life," was given by the Sunday School the first Sunday after Easter. The pageant consisted of two episodes: Easter at the Tomb and Eternal Life. The first episode represented four Roman soldiers guarding Christ's tomb, the three women and four of the Apostles.

The second episode pictured New Life, Motherhood, Religion, Education and Youth. All parts were taken by active members of the Sunday School, and it was in charge of Superintendent George H. Streaker. The musical program was in charge of Mrs. F. C. Kuebler and the royal trumpeters were four women.

A short address was made by Dr. Grammer, who explained the meaning of Easter, the bringing of joyful tidings of the new world to the old.

Dr. Toop's Tenth Anniversary.

On Thursday night Dr. and Mrs. Toop were given a reception in the parish house of the church by the communicants of the "Mother Church" and the chapels. Bishop and Mrs. Garland stood with Dr. and Mrs. Toop at the reception.

Dr. Toop received a purse of $1,100 from his parishioners in honor of the occasion and Mrs. Toop received a diamond brooch.

Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

Archdeacon of West Virginia: The Rev. William Meade, rector of Trinity Church, Moundsville, has accepted the Bishop's appointment as Archdeacon of the Diocese of West Virginia. He will begin his new work June 10, and will have his headquarters at Clarksburg. Mr. Meade studied at the Virginia Seminary for the ministry after some years in business, was ordained to the diaconate in 1917 by Bishop Gibson and the following year to the priesthood by Bishop Brown. He married Marie Gray Baughan, who died in 1920. His first charge was at Leed's Church, Fauquier County, Virginia, from where he came to Trinity Church, Moundsville, in 1919. He has been Dean of the Northwestern Convocation, Secretary of the Wheeling Clericus and Delegate to the Synod meeting in Washington in 1923. Mr. Meade's great grandfather was Bishop Meade of Virginia, his father a rector in Virginia and also Archdeacon of that diocese. He seems particularly fitted for this work and we wish him every success.

Conference on Chaplains' Work in Army and Navy.

Members of the Army and Navy Commission of the Church have been attending a conference at Governors Island on the subject of work of chaplains. The chairman of the committee in charge is the Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, a former chaplain at West Point, and member of the Commission. A purpose of the meeting was to consider how best to get in closer touch with enlisted men. On one evening the Commission and chaplains were entertained at a Fifth Avenue home. Among those attending were Bishop Perry, the Rev. W. C. Bell, D. D., of Virginia Seminary; the Rev. Otis E. Gray, of Kansas; the Rev. John T. Axton, Chaplain General of the Army; Chaplain Wheat, of West Point; Chaplain Watts, of Sacketts Harbor; Chaplain Fell, of Jefferson Barracks; Chaplain Dickens, of the Navy Yard at Philadelphia, and the Rev. Dr. Edwin B. Niver, of Marine Barracks, Va. With the guests were General Bullard, of this Department.

Y. W. C. A. Delegates Attend Cathedral Services.

Four thousand delegates and visitors of the World Y. W. C. A. have been in session in New York, and changed slightly the conditions of active membership in Associations. Heretofore actives were required to be members of evangelical churches. Now the conditions are somewhat wider, without, however, going over to any stand that indicates Modernism in theology. It is predicted that the new position taken by women, somewhat more liberal than the former, will have marked effect upon Y. M. C. A., in which Association active membership requirements have been discussed for years. At the Cathedral Bishop Manning welcomed the delegates at a special service. Every state was represented, as well as forty-six foreign countries. A procession formed outside the Cathedral, bearing flags of all the State and of all the countries that have delegates. Included among those who marched were Lady Gladstone, Countess of Portsmouth; the Hon. Mrs. Montague Waldegrave; Countess Elsa Bernadotte of Sweden; Miss Edith Picou-Tivberville and Miss Charlotte Niven of London, Fraulein Hilda Zarnack of Berlin, Mrs. H. C. Mei of China, and Mrs. Robert E. Dickinson, Chairman of the foreign work of the Association. The Girl Reserves also marched. There was special music by the Cathedral choir.

Meeting of The Church Club.

The Church Club, at its meeting April 30, reelected Henry Goddard Leach to be president for 1924-5. Vice-Presidents are Judge Finch, Frank L. Polk, formerly Assistant Secretary of State, and John E. Rousmaniere, Secretary Edward C. Parrish, Treasurer Edward S. Pegram and 1927 Trustees, Messrs. F. Shelton Farr, Henry L. Hobart and Lyman Johnson.

A resolution was passed by the Club endorsing the plan to build the Cathedral and urging other bodies of laymen throughout the nation to aid the Bishop in completing this splendid expression of Christian faith. C.

The Valley Convocation.

The one hundred and forty-second semi-annual meeting of the Valley Convocation was held at Meade Memorial Church, White Post, the Rev. John F. Coleman, rector, April 29 to May 1. At the opening service the preacher was the Rev. Francis A. Brown of Woodstock, his subject being 'the Parable of the Sower.'

On Wednesday morning Holy Communion was celebrated by the dean, the Rev. Walter Williams, and the Convocation Sermon was preached by the Rev. R. B. Nelson, on "Knowing the Truth."

At the business session the parish reports were all interesting and encouraging, the principle features being the experiment of Sunday moving picture services at Winchester, the splendid children's Lenten offering of $390.40 by the schools at Millwood and Boyce, and an account by Mr. Williams of the union revival services at Harrisonburg.

The Rev. B. D. Chambers, who had just returned from a trip to Egypt and the Holy Land, gave a most illuminating recital of his impressions drawn from personal experiences and observations.

Bishop Brown spoke on the Church's Program for 1924 and the Seminary Endowment Fund, and urged the hearty cooperation of the members of the Convocation. At the evening service the Bishop preached and confirmed a class of seven persons, and opened the exercises on Thursday with a most helpful and instructive devotional hour, speaking on "Authority in the Home and in the Church."

An excellent essay was read by the Rev. Dennis Whittle on "Types of Religious Expression," followed by a discussion of the subject by the Rev. Messrs. Torrence and Vest and Bishop Brown.

A resolution touching the subject of moving picture services was passed unanimously and forwarded by the Secretary to the Diocesan Social Service Commission.

An invitation from Front Royal was accepted for the fall meetings and the Rev. John F. Coleman was appointed convocation preacher. It was decided to have essays read at the spring sessions only. After further routine business the convocation adjourned, the benediction being pronounced by the Bishop. J. F. C.

The Coming Council.

At the meeting of the Council at Alexandria, May 20-23, a gathering of clergy and lay delegates and others interested is called by the Bishop to meet in St. Paul's Norton Memorial on Tuesday, May 20, at 3 p. m., to discuss the Diocesan Budget. On the same night the Board of Social Service is to hold a mass meeting in St. Paul's Church. The luncheon will be served each day by the ladies of the three Episcopal Churches in the commodious Westminster Building of the Presbyterian Church, very kindly lent for the occasion. The committee on arrangements is experiencing the usual embarrassment caused by the failure of so many of the clergy to realize the necessity of notifying the Committee at an early date of their intention to attend and the name and address of the lay delegate.

Activities of Epiphany Church, Danville.

The Second Circle of the Woman's Auxiliary has recently decided to organize a "Day Group" for the young women in the church who cannot arrange to attend the night meetings. The night meetings will be, as heretofore, for business women. By organizing the "Day Group" it is hoped that in time the membership and work of the Second Circle will be doubled. Both meetings will be held the same day, the night meeting being a repetition of the day meeting. Both groups will meet together quarterly. The president will have charge of the day group and the vice-president will be actively in charge of the night group. The Second Circle has a record of having had one or more meetings every month for the past four years.

The Lenten season was a busy one with a very full and interesting program.

There were four reading classes each week, the subject being 'Stewardship.' The book read was "Money the Acid Test." Lenten services were held four afternoons a week, and there was a visiting minister every Wednesday night.

For the first time in the history of Epiphany the Three Hour Service was held on Good Friday. The entire service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, and was so arranged that the congregation could come and go without interfering with the service. A good many stayed for the entire time. The congregation, as well as members from other churches, attended in large numbers and all enjoyed and appreciated the service thoroughly.

Bishop Beverley D. Tucker visited Epiphany Easter morning for confirmation and Christ Church Chapel in the afternoon, where there was also confirmation. The Bishop preached splendid sermons at both churches.

The Church School children had an unusually attractive service Easter afternoon. The offering was the best for many years amounting to more than $400.

Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Morganton Convocation.

The Convocation of Morganton was in session in Lenoir the week of May 7, the Rev. S. R. Guignard, of Lincolnton, presiding. The Rev. J. P. Burke, rector Valle Crucis and Chaplain of the Valle Crucis Female School, in Watauga County, is Secretary and Treasurer.

The meeting was full and interesting, and the reports from the various parishes, mission stations and industrial schools for boys and girls (several of which are included within the convocation), were heartening. The most important of these are the Valle Crucis School for Girls, located in Watauga County, upon the farm where Bishop Ives located the once celebrated school for boys in the mountains and which prospered until the Bishop apostatized to Rome; and the Patterson School for Boys, an industrial school, established upon a six hundred and forty acre farm in Caldwell County, bequeathed for that purpose by the late Hon. Samuel L. Patterson. This school is flourishing and doing much good, and there are many buildings, dormitories, etc., in evidence of the good being accomplished. Only a few weeks ago the school had the misfortune to lose by fire one of the principal buildings, the fine old colonial residence, which was used as a dormitory.

One of the most pleasant incidents of the meeting was on Wednesday, May 7, when the Rev. Harris Thomas, rector of St. James' Parish, Lenoir, introduced to the convocation Mrs. Peterkin, widow of the late Rt. Rev. George W. Peterkin, Bishop of West Virginia, as a guest. Mrs. Peterkin is on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Walker, at Rhodhis, this county, and was in attendance upon the meetings of the convocation. Mr. Thomas was a graduate of the Alexandria Seminary, and for years one of Bishop Peterkin's most trusted missionaries and co-workers. It must have been pleasing to Mrs. Peterkin to have been so enthusiastically greeted by the convocation and affectionately welcomed as the help-meet of the great missionary Bishop, especially under the auspices of one of the Bishop's most trusted and beloved presbyters.

After a delightful luncheon tendered to the convocation by the Kiwanis Club of Lenoir, the members paid a visit in automobiles to the Patterson School in the "Happy Valley," seven miles away.

An Active Parish.

Trinity Church, Asheville, has had a most encouraging year. All during the year the services have been well attended during week days as well as on Sundays. Often on Sundays chairs have had to be used to accommodate the crowds.

Palm Sunday people were turned away on account of the big crowds attending service. Easter the church was well filled at the early service, and many people could not get in at eleven o'clock. The afternoon service was held for the children. The children's vested choir of thirty boys and girls rendered the music. The church was crowded to the doors.

On Tuesday after Easter a unique service was held for the kindergarten children of the public schools, in the church at ten-thirty A. M. Three hundred and seventy-five children of kindergarten age were present, as well as the Mayor and City Commissioners, the Superintendent of Schools and the School Board and parents and friends of the children. This service was held at the suggestion of a little child who replied to his teacher's question, "What do you children want to do at Easter time this year?" "Let's go to the 'Piscopal Church." The little fellow was not a member of the 'piscopal church, but had heard much about it. So the teacher took it up with other teachers and the result was one of the most wonderful and inspiring services Trinity Church has ever had. The church was beautifully decorated and the service and setting made a profound impression on all present. The children's vested choir led the music and all the children sang Easter carols and hymns.

The Sunday after Easter many chairs had to be used to supplement the pews to seat the big crowd that came to service and it was estimated that the congregation was as large as on Easter Day.

At the night service on Low Sunday the church was crowded to the doors. Bishop Horner confirmed sixty people, presented by the rector, the Rev. Willis G. Clark.

The additions to membership of this class, plus seventy-five taken in during the year by transfer, bring the list of resident confirmed members of the parish up to 1,051. Within the last eight years the parish has grown 100 per cent. The Sunday School has also increased in the same proportion.

The Rev. J. Lunday Sykes, of Cristobal, Canal Zone, will have charge of Trinity Parish during the month of July while the rector is on his vacation.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

Opening Service of New Church.

The initial service at St. Andrew's, handsome new brick church on Wrightsville Sound, near Wilmington, recently erected under the direction of the Rev. Frank D. Dean, was conducted on Sunday, April 27. Mr. Dean, minister-in-charge, was in charge of the service, while the sermon was delivered by the Rt. Rev. T. C. Darst, D. D. The Rev. Alexander Miller, rector of St. Paul's, Wilmington, and the Rev. J. R. Mallett, rector of St. John's, Wilmington, were also present in the chancel. A large number of memorial gifts were dedicated at this service by Bishop Darst, including most of the furnishings for the chancel and sanctuary.

Campaigning for Special Funds.

East Carolina is this month in the midst of three campaigns to raise funds for special objects. The Thompson Orphanage campaign to raise $150,000 in the three North Carolina Dioceses to carry out a building program, is receiving the hearty support of the clergy and laity. Bishop Darst has asked all of the parishes and missions to take a special offering on May 25 for the Japan Reconstruction Fund. Under the leadership of the Rev. R. B. Drane, D. D., rector of St. Paul's, Edenton, plans are being made for a drive to secure funds to aid in the erection of the Hunter Building at St. Augustine's, a school for Negroes in Raleigh, N. C.

Vacant Parishes Being Filled.

Several parishes and missionary fields in East Carolina, which have been without rectors for some time, are now filled, and Bishop Darst expects to have every church in the diocese supplied with services by the summer. The Rev. E. F. T. Jillson, of the Diocese of Lexington, has accepted a call to Holy Trinity Parish, Hertford, and is now in residence there. The Rev. H. D. Cone, of the Diocese of Vermont, is spending the month of May in Clinton, where he has under consideration a call to St. Paul's Parish. The Rev. S. E. Matthews, recently ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Darst, is now in charge of the Church in Hyde County.

East Carolina set itself a goal in the children Lenten mite-box offering, asking the Church Schools to raise $6,000. There was much interest manifested, and, judging from the reports received by the diocesan treasurer so far, the goal will be reached. The record of three small schools will be of interest: St. David's, Creswell, with a goal of $100, raised $130; St. Andrew's, Columbia, was asked to raise $30, and contributed $55. St. Luke's, Roper, exceeded its quota of $60 by $5. These amounts represented from five to seventy-five per cent increase.

The Young People's Conference, which is scheduled to meet in Greenville, N. C., on May 24, 25 and 26, will have as its leader the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, according to an announcement made by the Rev. W. R. Noe, Executive Secretary of East Carolina. St. Paul's Church, Greenville, under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. J. E. W. Cook, is planning to take care of three hundred delegates. In this they will be assisted by members of other Greenville churches.

The Preaching Mission of the Rev. J. A. Schaad in St. John's, Wilmington, during Passion Week, was a very successful one. A number of the Wilmington clergy assisted the rector of St. John's, the Rev. J. R. Mallett, in arousing interest in the mission.

Bishop Darst Plans Trip to England: His people have heard with interest that Bishop Darst contemplates an ocean voyage this summer, with a short visit to England. His physicians have urged the necessity of such a trip. In addition to his heavy diocesan duties, Bishop Darst has been in great demand as a speaker outside of East Carolina. The past year has been a very busy one for him, and the news that he is to have a real rest has been received with pleasure. T. P. JR.

Collecting the Japan Fund.

The Diocese of Alabama has made careful plans for collecting the Japan Reconstruction Fund under the chairmanship of the Rev. M. S. Barnwell, rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham. This appeal was presented to five convocational conferences of the Woman's Auxiliary, which met in succession the last few days of April and early in May. The Auxiliary undertook to arouse interest and direct attention to the information set forth by National Council.

St. Paul's Church, Carlolville, a rural parish of fifty-three communicants, sent in its Lenten offering Easter night, which, with a small subsequent addition, amounted to $125.

The Executive Committee of the Diocese met in Montgomery, April 28, devoting itself primarily to Japan reconstruction, Negro Industrial Education, and Diocesan Missions. The diocese has recently purchased an Episcopal residence in the city of Birmingham, which will be occupied October 1, by the Bishop-Coadjutor, Dr. McDowell.

The Rev. Oscar Randolph, of St. Mary's Church, Birmingham, as a volunteer speaker for the Near East Relief, has spoken in a number of Alabama Parishes this spring, raising several thousand dollars for this outstanding Christian charity. E. C. S.

The Convocation of Reading.

At the recent meeting of the Convocation of Reading, the following resolutions were passed:

Whereas, The Convocation of Reading of the Diocese of Bethlehem had the great pleasure of hearing the Lord Bishop of Honduras tell of his work in particular and of the work of the Church, touched by the Caribbean Sea, in general; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we rejoice greatly in knowing of the many opportunities awaiting the Church in this region, and recommend a generous support of this field to those of our fellow-churchmen who are able;

Resolved Further, That this Convocation puts itself on record as heartily endorsing, as an ideal to be worked for, the suggestion made by the Bishop of Honduras for the formation of one Regional Church of the Anglican Communion in the Central American and West Indian spheres—this being in harmony with the recommendation of the Lambeth Conference of 1920;

Resolved Finally, That pending the consummation of this plan we trust that no further transfers be made from one jurisdiction to the other of either the Province of the West Indies or the American Church.

It was ordered that these resolutions be sent to the Church papers.

The Rev. A. B. Turner of Calvary Church, Tamaqua, has resigned his charge and accepted a call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Pitman, N. J. Mr. Turner begins his new work on June 1, 1924. While at Tamaqua he greatly improved the property, making a number of very desirable changes and re-decorated and repainted the whole church. The Convocation at its last meeting bade him Godspeed and expressed its heartfelt regrets on his leaving the diocese. H. P. W.

WEST TEXAS

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Capers' Tenth Anniversary Celebrated.

The Diocese of West Texas on SS. Philip and James Day, May 1, very fittingly celebrated the tenth anniversary of the ordination and consecration of their Bishop, the Rt. Rev. William Theodotus Capers, D. D. With two or three exceptions, every clergyman of the diocese was present and many of the parishes and missions of the diocese were represented by their respective vestries and bishop's committees. The visiting clergy were the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee; the Bishop's brother, the Rev. Walter B. Capers, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Mississippi; the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, and the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of Trinity Church, Houston, Texas. On Wednesday evening, the Eve of SS. Philip and James Day, an inspiring service was held at St. Mark's Church at which Bishop Maxon was the preacher. Thursday morning at ten o'clock the Holy Communion was celebrated at St. Mark's Church, Bishop Capers being the celebrant, assisted by the retired Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. James S. Johnston, D. D.; Bishop Maxon, the Archdeacon of the Diocese, the Rev. B. S. McKenzie, and the rector of the parish, the Rev. S. Arthur Huston.

At this service the Bishop delivered an address in which he showed that the diocese had made marked progress during the past ten years. Some of the interesting figures which he gave were as follows: five parishes that had formally drawn from three to six hundred dollars a year from the Board of Missions had become self-supporting and were now contributing each from six hundred dollars to twelve hundred dollars a year to the support of the missionary work of the Church. Four missions had become parishes and five new missions had been organized.

The Bishop's report showed that the gain in the communicants was twenty-nine per cent over the number that he found at his consecration. He also showed that the total amount of the annual contributions to the Diocese had increased nearly $50,000. He reported that every parish of his diocese was manned, with the exception of one. Five of the present clergy he himself had ordained, another one of his clergy was ordained in the East as a candidate from West Texas. His report showed that seven parish houses, six rectories and three churches had been built during his episcopate, and that two new churches were now under construction. His report further showed that the diocesan indebtedness of the schools had been reduced from $150,000 to $42,000, and that the schools were in a most encouraging condition.

After the celebration of the Holy Communion Bishop and Mrs. Capers gave a delightful luncheon to the Bishops, the clergy and their wives. At half-past seven o'clock, at the Menger Hotel, a very beautiful banquet was given in honor of the Bishop and addresses were delivered in which loving testimonials were offered in behalf of the Bishop's faithful and devoted services.

The address of the clergy to their Bishop was read and presented by the Rev. Charles W. Cooke. Judge S. G. Tayloe read and presented to the Bishop the address of the laymen, paying like high tribute to Bishop Capers and pledging anew their love and their loyalty. The keynote of all that was said in eulogizing Bishop Capers emphasized his gift of fellowship, his exalted character, his untiring and devoted service, his sweet humility, and his unwavering loyalty to the Master. The Rev. Dr. Moore spoke for the Protestant Churches of the city and the Rotary Club, through one of its delegated members, paid high tribute to the Bishop as a noble citizen and a faithful friend.

An Unfortunate Omission.

Recently an article was published, giving an account of the founding and the splendid work and wonderful achievements of the Parish Industrial School of St. Paul's, Lynchburg. The writer would call attention to the fact that he failed to note a most important and interesting item in this connection.

For thirty-six years the school was conducted under the guidance of Mrs. John Holmes Smith as its president. Mrs. Smith served during a large part the long rectorship of Dr. Carson and then successively under the Rev. James M. Owens, the Rev. Dr. William A. Barr and the Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Dunn. She resigned during Dr. Dunn's rectorship, saying she thought it time to have "new blood" in the management of the school.

Hundreds of homes in Lynchburg are the better, not only for her practical teaching in the school, but also for her ennobling influence and the example of her beautiful character.

This correction is made by one who has known and admired Mrs. Smith for many years and has seen her closely associated with so many of the activities of St. Paul's that he did not realize, when writing the story of this school, that she had given so much of her energy and loving service to this particular enterprise and that to her was attributable so large a measure of its success.

St. Luke's, Pedlar Mills, Reopened.

Some important repairs and improvements have just been completed at St. Luke's Church, and it was reopened for use on Sunday, May 11.

This church, as it stood originally, was the oldest Episcopal Church in Amherst County. It was built about one hundred years ago, two of its founders being John and R. S. Ellis, grandfather and great-uncle of the present rector, the Rev. Josiah R. Ellis. Some time later one wall gave way and the building was condemned for many years, until Dr. McBryde, who was sent to Lexington Parish as a deacon, rebuilt it out of the old brick in 1871. For fifty years no improvements of any kind have been put on the church, and for thirty years it was without a rector.

Several years ago the Rev. Josiah R. Ellis took charge of the work and moved to Pedlar Mills to reside. The church has now been remodeled, putting the chancel in modern form, and making other modern improvements. Among the changes noted from the old days, but by which the past and present are connected, is a memorial window with this inscription, "To the Glory of God and in Loving Memory of Charles Lewis Ellis and Roberta Camm Saunders, His Wife. Erected by Their Children and Grandchildren, 1924."

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Centennial of St. Mark's Parish, Lewistown.

The One Hundredth Anniversary of St. Mark's Parish, Lewistown, the Rev. William Heakes, rector, which had been in progress for several days, reached its culmination on St. Mark's Day, when prominent clergy and laity, representing the Diocese of Harrisburg, city officials, pastors of Lewistown churches of several religious bodies, and prominent local men, gathered in the Carlisle Tea Room in the afternoon and eulogized the parish and its beloved rector. Those conveying congratulatory addresses were General Charles M. Clement, Chancellor of the Diocese of Harrisburg; Richard M. H. Wharton, Treasurer of the Diocese of Harrisburg; State Senator Frederick W. Culbertson, the Rev. Dr. James Martin Yeager, the Rev. Dr. A. Lawrence Miller, Mayor Robert B. Montgomery, and Meredith Myers. The Rev. William Heakes, speaking on behalf of the parish, traced the history of the parish from its founding one hundred years ago, up to the present day. Mr. Wharton, who also acted as toastmaster, recounted the splendid record made by the local parish, a record that its members might well be proud of. He said that if all the parishes of the diocese gave as liberally and regularly in proportion to their means as does St. Mark's, the office of Diocesan Treasurer would be a pleasure.

General Clement told of the early struggles of the local parish, and its triumphs over hardships and difficulties. He praised the successful efforts of Mr. Heakes, asserting that he and his parish have contributed substantially to the upbuilding of the Episcopal Church in Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Dr. Miller, after presenting greetings from his congregation, spoke briefly on "Religion in the United States."

State Senator Culbertson spoke on "Purity in Politics." He said that it seemed to him that the word "politics" is more misunderstood than any word in the English language. He declared that it was a sad comment upon the body politic to have only twenty-one and one-half per cent of those entitled to cast ballots go to the polls and vote, that it is a well known fact that most of the ill repute into which politics have fallen is due to the carelessness of good people in not attending to the simple duty of voting and making sure that only good men are elected to places of responsibility. He gave it as his opinion that eighty per cent of the men now in public life are absolutely honest. Politics will be made just as good or just as bad as good people make them through voting or their failure to vote.

Mayor Montgomery's address was devoted principally to historical facts and figures relating to the community.

One of the pleasing features of the evening exercises was a pageant depicting the costumes worn by the ancestors of the present members of the parish. The periods were in terms of a quarter of a century, and the couples marched into the parish house to the strains of appropriate music. At the conclusion they united with the audience in singing "Auld Lang Syne."

After a few introductory remarks by the rector, the Venerable F. T. Eastment, of Phillipsburg, also a former rector of St. Mark's, Lewistown, gave the address of the evening. Addresses were also made by the Rev. W. C. Heilman, of Harrisburg, and the Rev. Alexander McMillan, of Carlisle.

Mr. Heakes announced that he contemplated retiring from the active ministry just as soon as he could secure another house in Lewistown, and move from the rectory. He has been rector of his present parish for fifteen years. He has been forty-two years in Holy Orders.

Collect for the Fourth Sunday After Easter.

O Almighty God, Who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto Thy people that they may love the thing which Thou commandest, and desire that which Thou dost promise; that so among the sundry and manifold changes of the world our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

A Bell.

Had I the power
To cast a bell that should, from some grand tower,
At the first Christmas hour,
Outring
And fling
A jubilant message wide,
The forged metals should be thus allied;
No iron Pride,
But soft Humility and rich-veined Hope
Cleft from a sunny slope,
And there should be White Charity,
And silvery Love, that knows not Doubt nor Fear.
To make the peal more clear;
And then, to firmly fix the fine alloy,
There should be joy.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Our Lord's Prophecy About Jerusalem.

The Rev. Dr. Louis Tucker.

"And as Jesus went out and departed from the Temple one of His disciples spoke of the Temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, saying, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings. The Temple was bathed in a glory of golden light. Being east of it they saw it dark against the sunset, but its metal roofs and pinnacles must have blazed like torches and like flames.

"And Jesus, answering, said to them, As for these great buildings which you see, Amen, I say unto you, the day will come when there shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down.

The prediction has been fulfilled. Plenty of foundation stones are in position, but they are older work, protected by debris. Herod's temple is down. Any stone building adorned with gold to excite the cupidity of vandals is sure to be destroyed; if not in one thousand years, then in two thousand or in three. This evidently occurred to the Apostles as they talked.

Our Lord lodged at Bethany. The road leaves Jerusalem, dips down a vast hollow, swings up the other side and rounds the shoulder of a great hill, almost a mountain. The hill was full of olive-trees and called the Mount of Olives. The crest commands a magnificent view of Mount Zion and seems to have been a favorite resting-place of Our Lord. "And as He sat upon the Mount of Olives over against the Temple Peter and James and John and Andrew asked Him privately, Tell us when shall these things be; and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled, and of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

The four had improved in eschatology since the Transfiguration and had about reached the stage of the ordinary Christian now-a-days; that is, they had grasped the fact that Christ was to go away and come again. He answered: "Take heed lest any man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying 'I am Christ,' and shall deceive many, and the time draweth near; go ye not therefore after them."

The four asked: 1. When should Jerusalem be destroyed? 2. What was the sign of (a) the destruction of Jerusalem, (b) of the second coming of Christ and (c) the end of the age. It was a complicated question, though the four thought it simple; for they held that all these things should happen at one time. Their question was built on the scale of weeks or months. Our Lord's answer is built on the scale of millennia, comprising at least two thousand years in its gigantic sweep.

He begins with a warning against false Christs. Edersheim applies it to the time before the destruction of Jerusalem, but remarks that the pseudo-messiahs reached their climax under the Emperor Hadrian. The warning was given privately and so to the infant Church and not to the Jewish nation. The persecutions which made permanent the separation between Christianity and Judaism occurred before the destruction of the city. After the separation Christians were not likely to follow a Jewish pseudo-messiah. The warning, therefore, applies primarily to the time before the destruction of Jerusalem. But it is general. Any one, at any time, coming and claiming to be Christ and lacking the signs, is to be avoided.

Next Our Lord warns against taking political or physical convulsions as signs of His coming. The end is not yet. The phrase, "By-and-by" in Luke 21: 9, has reversed meaning in the last two centuries. It once meant "immediately" and is used in that sense in the passage. We are not to take political convulsions nor famines nor pestilences nor earthquakes as signs of His coming, though nation rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom—a clear prediction of the dissolution of the Roman Empire. All these are not signs of His coming though modern inaccurate sermonizing, based on the English version of Luke 21:9 frequently says that they are. Look out the meaning of by-and-by in King James' time, or read Luke 21:9 in the original.

Next, Our Lord turns to persecutions. After all these wars and rumors, says St. Matthew, and before them, says St. Luke, come persecutions. Both predictions were fulfilled. Mark 13 suggests the solution by omitting time-notes in connection with the statement. The passage ends: "And the gospel must first be published among all nations."

This gives the first clue as to time. Wars, earthquakes, false Christs and persecutions are not signs of His coming. These things must needs be and the end is not yet. They mean nothing chronological. We are not to be afraid. He said they must come. But one definite thing which can happen only once in one world must be done. The gospel must be published among all nations. The context seems to imply failure to convert the nations.

The net instinct of Christendom interpreted "All nations" as the Jewish world, and looked for the times of the end and the second coming as soon as the gospel was published among all in contact with Judea. The thing was done, the destruction of Jerusalem followed, but Christ did not come. The Church as a whole then transferred the interpretation of "All nations" to all nations touching the Roman world. At last the thing was done. The destruction of the Roman world followed, but Christ did not come. The instinct of Christendom now interprets "All nations" as all the nations of the globe, and works to publish the gospel among them all.

A Prayer For Planting Time.

Now I shall make my garden
As true men build a shrine
An humble thing where yet shall spring
The seeds that are divine,
Since each a prayer I sow them there
In reverential line.

O, little is my garden space,
But great the prayer I pray;
With every seed against earth's need,
That men may sow today,
My hope is thrown, my faith is sown
To make the harvest gay.

O, gardens spacious, gardens small,
For you my prayer is said;
That God's Own Hand may touch the land
And give His people bread,
As once before on that far shore
His multitudes were fed.

—Theodosia Garrison.

How to Make the Church a Power.

It has been said that if we could ask St. Paul to preach for us, and tell us how to make our Church a power in the city, he would say, "I charge you first of all to pray." He would say: the first thing is not to secure pledges, to provide elaborate music, or to see how many rich people you can persuade to come to church. The question is, Do the people pray? You cannot prosper without prayer.

Prayer is crowded out of modern life, while crowds of people run about to hear preaching. The Catholic Church was not three days old when two of its chief Bishops were arrested and sent to jail. The Christians at once began to pray, and "great grace fell upon them all." The Church was without money to support a single Bishop, or Priest, or Missionary. They prayed, and at once there was a great outpouring of offerings. Men sold houses and lands, brought the proceeds and laid them down at the Apostles' feet.

Consider the frantic efforts, the desperate expedients of Christian people today to raise money for the Church, and the neglect of the simple remedy—prayer.

St. Paul once wrote a letter to a struggling Mission, advising it how to become strong. He said not a word about bazaars or dramas. He utterly overlooked the advantages of giving a dance for the young people, or getting up a world's fair, or running to and fro selling tickets for the salvation of the world. He simply told the people to pray. "Continue steadfastly in prayer and persevere in the same." When he wrote to large city parishes like those in Rome and Corinth, his advice was the same: "Continue instant in prayer." "Pray without ceasing."—St. John Evangelist Messenger.

You and Your Time.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie.

"Time was made for slaves," runs an old adage. It may be so, but we are the slaves of time! We hear people say, "O, I haven't time for that"—but the fact is, they have all the time there is—or else all the time there is "has them." If you haven't time, Time has you!

"I have only just a minute—
Only sixty seconds in it;
Forced upon me—can't refuse it!
Didn't seek it—didn't choose it!
But it's up to me to use it.
I must suffer if I lose it—
Give account if I abuse it.
Just a tiny little minute—
But Eternity is in it!"

Minute by minute, we have time for love, for kindness, for friendship, for helpful counsel and constructive service. We have time, really for self-betterment and for world betterment. We waste time enough in the course of life to build the finest character extant! We waste time enough to store the mind full of facts, information and knowledge. "I wasted time," says Shakespeare in Richard the Second, "and now Time doth waste me!"

"Time wasted is existence," says Young in Night Thoughts—"Time used is life." Many find life irksome, burdensome, intolerable—a mere existence, because they do not know how properly to employ their time—or else, knowing, they fail properly to employ it. Time well used reduces monotony, makes even routine tolerable and puts zest, interest, art into life—indeed, this makes of life the greatest of arts!

Even the time spent on cars, or in waiting for the train, or for an appointment, can be used to great advantage, if one carries with him a bit of good literature—and almost any one may provide himself with real masterpieces in minute volumes which he may stick away in his pocket! Then he can store it away in his mind.

But time is fleeting. What are you doing while the wheels of time are so rapidly revolving? Many seem only to be watching the process! They are making little or no contribution to life—and therefore find life empty and dull and uninviting. The sun rises that it may set. Apparently, we are born that we may die! Is life sweeter because you have lived? Is the world happier? Is your community sweeter, richer, purer because you have lived in it? Or are you so detached and disinterested as not to be a part of your community life? If so, the sooner you pass on and are no more seen, the better for the community! It might make more room for some one who would mean something to the life of the community to have you pass out—and in passing, you might not have left anything by which to be remembered. Identify yourself, in goodness, truth, beauty, with something fine and worthwhile in life—and you will live long after you have left it—in sweet memory, in spiritual force, in indestructible personality.

No waster-of-time, no lazy, lax and lethargic individual in all history has left his name written nobly on the pages of time. This is for those who are up and doing—those who contribute much to life and who make history by useful service and noble self-sacrifice. Time cannot kill a Moses or a Paul, nor a Luther, nor a Wesley, nor a Lincoln, nor a Lee, nor a Roosevelt, nor a Woodrow Wilson. Their names will live on forever—because their works remain in the fabric of the race's life.

"Three-fold the stride of Time, from first to last—Loitering slow, the Future creepeth—
Arrow-swift, the Present sweepeth—
And motionless forever stands the Past!"

The past is buried—the future is unborn—only the present is alive and vital. It is yours today, to make lovely and true and fine and noble the moments as they come and go. Make of your life a noble work of art to leave behind you when you are called up higher.

Lilac.

Julian Meade.

Come with me, Weary one, into the fragrant lilac bower,
To drink sweet perfumes of the radiant, queenly flower,
Beneath its sheltering arms and an azure sky,
We'll find new life, new hope, you and I.

"You say you've many a load of care?"
so has this tree;
Yet not a plaintive word it tells to you and me.
Why, March came with an avalanche of snow,
Killing many a bud—this to the mother tree was woe!

But some braver, stronger buds survived the cold;
Now they are floral clusters, like amaranth of old.
Each little face is a sweet forget-me-not,
Redolent of fragrance never to be forgot.

When we are children we pluck them for our mothers;
A little later and we gather for still others;
But lilac! whatever the age or time or place
Who can forget your loveliness and subtle grace.

Come with me, Weary one, we'll leave the garden fair.
Our fortune, let us with the wide world share,
For God such splendor in Nature has revealed
That every child of His beholding, may be healed.

The South Side.

"May I come in?" called the girl's bright voice.

"Pull the bobbin and the latch will fly up," was the merry answer.

The girl pushed open the door and ran across the room to the bed. Nobody could have guessed the pain and wearisome plaster cast from the cheery voice; still less could one have guessed that the need to earn made the weeks of pain still harder to bear. These things the woman lying there told to her God, never to her guests.

The girl held up a forlorn handful of late asters. "The very last," she declared. "I hunted and hunted!"

"Are you sure?" her friend asked quickly. "I've always found them later than this every year. Did you go over to the south side of the hill?"

"No," the girl confessed laughingly. "I believe I looked on every side but that! I'll go straight back and hunt again."

Twenty minutes later she returned laden with autumn bloom.

"You are right," she said. "I had no idea that the south side made such a difference. The slope was half covered with the beautiful blossoms, so big and deep colored! I'm going to put them in this pitcher beside you so that you can reach your hands down deep into the autumn and pretend you're picking them yourself."

"Then," her friend returned, "I should have to give up the memory of somebody who picked them for me."

The girl stopped her pretty work. "Now I understand the difference!" she said slowly. "You will insist, willful woman that you are, in living on the south side of life, and getting every bit of sunshine there is, while most of us deliberately go and sit on the north side and grumble because it's cold! Never mind, I've caught your secret now, and I'm going to sit in the sun. Then maybe I'll blossom!"

The white face in the bed smiled. "And the best of it all is, that there always is a south side," she answered—"the sun's side, and God's."—Presbyterian Review.

What of the Church?

L. C. Cumming.

Do you, who regularly attend the services of the church, feel edified and helped? Does the Lord speak to you and you to Him? Are you effectively influenced more seriously to be honest, generous, pure and holy in your daily life?

Do you pray? Is "going to church" like prayer—a reaching out for God in your life? A hospital where the weary and heavy laden and troubled, yes, even the outcast, may come and find welcome and hope for healing? Is it true that to go to church is to go to God?

But where are the poor and the outcast then; and why are they not seen in greater numbers in the church? Has the impression obtained currency that they are not wanted and that there is no welcome or healing there for them? If so it seems to the average man that the church to which he is urged to go—needs his labors outside its confines and that no missionary field is more promising and urgent today than this!

What are we doing about it? Is it a fact that the church today is but a select circle of the well-dressed and immaculate—a hospital still, but only equipped with a hospital staff?

The average man is trained in business fundamentals never to "buy into a fight" and he believes that in religious matters (as in his business affairs) division has done more to weaken and hide Christ and good will from the view of men than all infidelity!

What of the church for the average man today?

My restless heart impatience feels,
I long to see and know;
The Lord so strangely with me deals,
I know not how to go;
But as in doubt I hesitate,
I hear a quiet voice say "Wait."

For the Young Folks

Mary, the Mother Glad.

Eugenie du Maurier.

I often think of Mary—
Mary the mother glad,
Who lived in the Nazareth cottage,
When Christ was a little lad.

I think of her in the morning,
As she put on His little frock;
And brushed the curls on His forehead,
Smoothing each shining lock
And heard Him speak with reverence
A little sunrise prayer,
With a look of childlike wonder
Upon His face so fair,

When Joseph had gone to the workshop,
The cottage made trim and neat,
And Jesus played with the children
Who lived across the street;
I think like the sound of music
Was the echo of His voice,
Which sent her pulses thrilling
And made her heart rejoice.

And when He brought His bruises
For her to touch and kiss,
And she smiled away His troubles
With all a mother's bliss—
I think that over her spirit
Stole a promise of endless rest
As she "magnified the Father,"
Who had given her His best.

Then, when the shadows deepened
And the Child, now tired of play,
Rested His head on her bosom
At the close of a weary day,
As she taught Him a psalm of praises,
And mused on prophecies dear,
I think that the song of angels
Fell on her listening ear.

And so I think often of Mary—
Mary the mother glad,
Who lived in the Nazareth cottage,
When Christ was a little lad.

The Sweet Peas' Secret.

"If I had known that it was so much work to make a garden I would never have started this one," said Bobbie to himself. But this is just what you would have expected of Bobbie, because he had started so many, many things and most of them were still not finished. And he could always find such good excuses for himself. Now it was too hot, his back ached, and he was too tired to plant even one more seed.

He had so many plans when the garden had first been started and insisted upon doing every bit of the work himself. It had been spaded and raked, and every seed had been cradled in the soft brown earth except the sweet peas. "Guess there will be enough plants to water and enough weeds to pull without planting any more seeds," Bobbie said, and after looking about to see if any one was watching, he popped the package of sweet pea seeds under a large stone.

Soon the warm rain pattered down upon the earth, and some of it soaked in under the stone where the sweet peas were hidden. It softened the paper package, which melted and allowed the little seeds to roll out upon the ground.

At last each seed burst its tight little jacket and sent forth a tiny shoot, which some day should be a sweet pea vine bearing bright colored blossoms. For many years the sweet pea family had flourished in the bright sunshine, and each little plant knew that its very life depended upon its reaching the air and sunlight. At first they tried to grow up through the hard stone, but this could not be pushed aside as easily as the soft earth. Then they saw that there was just one thing that they could do—push their way out instead of up.

One day Bobbie came down to his garden to see if any more baby plants had appeared since the day before, and he saw something which surprised him. A pale, sick-looking sweet pea vine had pushed its way out on every side of the stone and seemed to be staring at Bobbie accusingly. As he started back he felt as if they were saying: "We did our work better than you did and have come to tell the world what a lazy, careless boy you are. We had to work in the dark with a great stone on our heads, but didn't stop for one minute until we reached the sunlight. Now what are you going to do to help us?"

Bobbie had planned to play ball that afternoon, but instead he spaded up the sunniest spot against the garden wall, carried each little plant to its pleasant new home, and patted the soft warm earth about its roots. Later he gave each plant a ladder of twine to help it climb and kept the earth so moist and soft about the roots that the vines grew taller and stronger every day until at last they could peep over the garden wall.

Then the beautiful blossoms appeared, pink and lavender and white. They were so large and bright and fragrant that the bees and butterflies seemed to like that part of the garden best of all.

People passing by would stop to admire the beautiful blossoms and to ask Bobbie: "What is the reason that your sweet peas are so much larger and brighter than mine?"

"I don't know," Bobbie would answer as he hung his head, "unless it is because the vines worked so hard."

No one knew the real secret except Bobbie and the sweet peas, and they didn't tell even the bees and butterflies. —Christian Observer.

Neighbors.

A friend of mine has a cottage, and there is a certain vine growing close to a window, which is a favorite nesting-place with birds. This year two different families, a pair of wrens and a pair of catbirds, decided to nest here, and so they set about building their homes. Strange to say, there was no quarreling over this, but each pair minded its own business, and when their homes were finished, lo and behold! there, perched upon the edge of the good-sized nest of the catbird, was the dainty little nest of the wren.

Never were two families more sociable. Together the mothers sat on their eggs, and perhaps they chatted about different things to make the long hours of waiting less lonesome. Together the wrens and the catbirds fought the cat and bravely defended their homes when the babies were hatched, and side by side they raised their families and taught them how to fly.—Our Dumb Animals.

Springtime.

Ruth Bell, Aged 13.

Can you hear the springtime calling
To the birds and blossoms light,
"Come out and sing, gay springtime birds,
And blossom, flowers bright."

Can you feel the sunlight beaming
On the trees and on the grass?
Can't you feel its warmth and brightness
When by the field you pass?

Can't you feel the little breezes
Stealing all your care away?
Can't you feel the very gladness
Of this sunny springtime day?

On the Trail of the Brown Bear.

As Billy and Joe walked along the narrow road they looked as troubled as if they had a problem in arithmetic to work out; and yet vacation was already a day old.

"How can we earn so much in two weeks, Billy?" Joe ran his fingers through his curly red hair until it stood straight up. "The only thing we know mother wants is a rocking chair."

"Well, that little wicker chair at Weston's store is only four dollars and a quarter. We've got the quarter." Billy had a sudden spurt of courage. "We can do a lot in two weeks. We're starting bright and early, aren't we?"

The road narrowed to a trail that wound down and round a steep rock hill into an evergreen forest. Beyond that lay a rich valley and a pretty village. The village was larger than the mining camp in which the boys lived, and it had a railway. Billy and Joe were headed for the forest, where, if they could not hope to find a fortune, they could at least expect to earn something toward their mother's birthday gift. Each of them carried a large sack.

"Mother would open her eyes if she knew that we were after something besides cones and pitch pine," said Joe with a chuckle. Every Saturday the boys tramped out from camp to gather fuel.

"We must fill one sack with balsam tips," declared Billy. "Isn't it lucky that Miss Lane asked us to get them for her? We shall make a quarter today at least!"

"Well," replied Joe, "if we can't buy a rocker, we'll do the best we can. Mother will be proud of anything we give her; you know that."

Billy nodded soberly. Yes, indeed she would. Mother had so little that she was happy over trifles. Just wait till the boys were grown up, though, and owned a gold mine; then mother should sit at leisure like Curlylocks in the old rhyme:

Thou shalt not wash dishes, nor yet feed the swine,
But sit on a cushion and sew a fine seam
And feast upon strawberries, sugar and cream.

The boys would have scowled over "the fine seam." Mother sewed early and late now. When they grew up and could take care of her she should never look another needle in the eye!

"Hi there, boys!" Joe and Billy halted as the deep voice of the miner, Big Tom, called to them suddenly from a cross trail. "Seen anything of that scamp, Crony?"

"No. Has he run away again?" asked Billy with a laugh.

"We're going into the woods where he went before, and we'll round him."

up for you," promised Joe, who was fond of the mischievous vub that was known as Big Tom's pet.

"If you head him this way I will give you a quarter apiece," the miner told them gratefully. "He's getting to be such a gad-about that I shall have to sell him to a show or send him to the zoo."

The boys exchanged knowing grins as they vanished round a curve. Crony was the delight of Big Tom's life and the pet of the camp. Yet his master was always threatening to get rid of him, just as if Crony would mend his ways and benefit by the warning.

It was cool and fragrant in the forest. "Let's follow the brook up to the balsam grove," said Billy, taking the lead. "I don't see any bear tracks yet."

There was no sign of Crony in that part of the woods, and the boys began to fear that he had decided to visit the village below.

"Why, most people would be afraid of him," remarked Joe. "Some one might shoot him. And he's as tame as a kitten and lots more fun."

The balsam firs grew high up above the pines, almost to the barren rock heights, known as the timber line. The boys saw many dead stumps along the way that were remainders of an ancient forest fire.

"There! We've filled our sack," Jo sighed with satisfaction after a busy time of stripping off the soft flat tips. "But mother must have some kindling. Say, Billy, let's eat our luncheon up on Picture Rock." So they climbed over boulders of all shapes and sizes to a huge rock where there were rude sketches that had been made years ago by Indians. The boys loved to study the rough drawings and try to decide what they meant.

"Hello, here's a war dance!" exclaimed Joe, spying one that he had not seen before.

Intent on their discovery, the boys were not prepared when a dark unexpected form appeared suddenly round the end of the rock. Both boys let out a yell that any Indian might have envied. "Crony! How you scared me!" Joe nearly admitted his fright.

"What are you doing away off here?" scolded Billy as the impudent cub recognized his friends and began sniffing at their luncheon. "What's that on your nose and paws?"

Crony was licking his fore paws, either from hunger or from a desire to appear tidy in company.

"Say, Joe, it's honey!" Billy fairly shouted the last word, "Crony has found a bee tree." His face glowed like a full moon. "If we can find it—"

"Don't pay any attention to him, and maybe he'll go back," was Joe's advice.

Sure enough, when Crony found that the boys did not intend to offer him a share of their luncheon he ambled off towards a group of dead trees in a little gulch. The boys followed him.

"Oh, there's a tubful in each of these three trees," announced Joe after investigation. "Billy, we're rich!"

"Can we even buy mother's rocker?" asked Billy cautiously.

"Huh! We could pretty nearly buy out the store," Joe replied. "Let's track for home and see about getting this honey out quick. Grandfather Beatty knows all about such things."

Big Tom was overjoyed to find his pet chained up securely at home, but the boys refused the two quarters. They confided their great secret to him. "It's part yours, of course, because your bear found it," they said.

The miner grinned. "I hereby turn over my share to you and welcome," he told them. "Trust a bear to trail honey. Crony might have killed himself stuffing if you hadn't stopped him."

But when Billy and Joe presented their astonished mother with the best rocking chair in camp they gave most of the credit to the brown bear. "He's a mascot, sure enough," said Joe. "He followed his nose, and we followed him, and it ended in good luck for all of us." —Youth's Companion.

A Prayer.

It is my joy in life to find,
At every turning of the road
The strong arm of a comrade kind
To help me onward with my load.

And since I have no gold to give,
And love alone must make amends,
My only prayer is, while I live,
God make me worthy of my friends.
—Frank Dempster Sherman.

Bread Upon the Waters.

As Edith came up the walk, Marjorie ran down the steps to meet her.

"Oh, Edith," she cried, "did you get an invitation to be the other flower-girl at the wedding?"

"Of course I did," said Edith, laughing. "Every one knows better than to try to separate us. I think that pattern will make us lovely dresses. Don't you?"

"I am so glad we're the same size," murmured Marjorie, contentedly.

"Let's give Miss Isabel wedding gifts just alike," proposed Edith.

"Well," Marjorie agreed, let's get her those two little bud vases in silver bases. Will you?"

"Yes," Edith said. "I believe I have enough money for that, they're so small. I don't like to ask father for money now, because it takes so much to keep Bob in the hospital so long. But I have a dollar and a half, and they cost a dollar and a quarter, don't they?"

"A dollar and thirty-five cents," corrected Marjorie.

"Well, I can't buy any candy this month if I get it," resolved Edith; "but I'll get it anyway."

The next day at Sunday School the teacher of the class of which Marjorie and Edith were members told of a special need in China, and asked all the class to pledge a dollar to help a fund that the school was raising to help fill the need.

Edith threw a quick glance toward Marjorie.

"Miss Isabel knows we love her, anyway," whispered Marjorie. "Give it."

"God knows we love Him, too, though," objected Edith.

"But the Chinese don't all know He loves them," Marjorie answered.

And they pledged their money, and planned to make some handkerchiefs from some linen they had, and buy handkerchief-boxes to put them in.

On Tuesday Edith received a letter. When she opened it she found a check for two dollars and a half and a note from Uncle Edgar:

"I just remembered today that your birthday was last month, and I am sending you a belated birthday gift. I think I would have remembered if I had been at home. I wish you all the customary things, even if I'm a little late with my wishes. With love,
"Uncle Edgar."

Edith ran to Marjorie's house as fast as she could, and showed the letter and the check to Marjorie and her mother.

"I think," said Marjorie's mother, "that God has kept a promise that He made to us. You know, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days!'"

"Well, I'm glad I found mine before Miss Isabel's wedding," said Edith, happily.—The Way.

Thoughts.

When a little child is naughty
And is cross with everything,
Then his thoughts are changed to hornets
That go flying off to sting.

When a little child is happy,
Then his loving thoughts, I think,
Are turned to floating butterflies
All white and gold and pink.

—Ethel Blair in "St. Nicholas."

Wonderful Travelers.

One windy day in autumn a queer little greenhouse cracked open from top to bottom, and out of the crack traveled two little brown brothers, each clinging to a bit of white down. They floated away on the same kind breeze, looking for all the world like teeny, tiny balloons. Since spring these little travelers had been shut in the house with many other brothers, all of them growing fatter and fatter every day. At last, the house had grown so tight for them that it just couldn't hold them, and it had burst open in this way.

You may be sure that none of the other brothers stayed longer in that little house after being shut up so long. The breezes were kept busy for many days, carrying them about the world, and soon the little greenhouse was left empty. Some of the travelers floated a long way before they dropped to earth to rest. Others did not go so far. But everywhere that one of them rested, the leaves and the earth—and later, the snow—made a blanket that covered the little traveler all through the winter.

And in the spring a wonderful thing happened. Wherever one of those travelers had stopped a plant pushed up through the ground. This plant had thick green leaves and pinky blossoms. After a time the blossoms went away, and many queer little greenhouses came on the plant where they had been. All through the autumn these queer little houses cracked open and let the fat little brown travelers clinging to bits of down float away into the world, until hundreds of them had gone from this one plant.

Wonderful little travelers, to send hundreds like themselves from the ground. And you may see these travelers starting on their journey next fall, if you will find a bursting milkweed pod and look carefully at the brown seeds that are starting from it.—Selected.

Grace For A Garden.

Lord of every earthly spot,
Bless my little garden plot!
Send the kindly rain and sun
On the work which I've begun.
Tiny seed and tender root
Turn at last to flower and fruit.
Loving God, who failest not,
Bless my little garden plot!

Faith is the grand principle of the divine life from first to last. By faith we are justified, and by faith we live; by faith we stand, and by faith we walk. From the starting-post to the goal of the Christian course it is all by faith.

BANKER DEAF FOR YEARS NOW HEARS PERFECTLY.

Mr. John L. Ellerman, President of the Farmers National Bank, Fairfax, South Dakota, says that after suffering from deafness for many years he can now hear the slightest whisper and is so proud and happy of his own good fortune that he wants everyone who is deaf or hard of hearing to know about it. After trying everything he could hear of without success, Mr. Ellerman finally saw the announcement of a New York firm stating that they had perfected a new hearing device called the Acousticon which would enable anyone whose auditory nerve was not entirely destroyed to hear as perfectly as those with normal hearing. As this firm offered to send their product on Ten Days Free Trial—no deposit—no C. O. D., he decided to try it. To his utter amazement and delight, he found that this remarkable invention enabled him to hear all sounds as clearly as when a boy. He has since recommended it to a number of his friends and they also report most satisfactory results. If you want to hear again as well as when a child, write the Dictograph Products Corporation, Suite 1301-A, No. 220 W. 42nd Street, New York City, and ask them to send you an Acousticon on Ten Days' Free Trial. There are no strings attached to their offer. The trial is absolutely free. Just send them your name and address.—Adv.

"What is present-day effort accomplishing? A few years ago all was darkness. Those who contracted leprosy were condemned forever without even the hope of cure. The light of modern medicine now penetrates and cures have been made by the hundreds. Countries in which the disease does not yet prevail to any extent are taking measures to prevent its spread, and nearly everywhere that leprosy prevails measures are being taken to curtail its ravages. The church and science have joined hands; the one to provide spiritual and humane care that mean so much in the life of the leper, and the other to focus its weapons upon the disease itself. The modern research laboratory, that great hope for man's physical well-being, has begun to take an interest in the disease. Twenty years ago only isolated efforts were made; ten years ago work was being conducted in only a few places; today the whole world is giving attention to the problem. India is doing a fine work. The United States, at Carville, Hawaii and Manila. Japan has several centers. Far away South Africa has made important contributions. The great laboratories of Imperial Britain are adding their share. France and Norway and other countries of Europe are taking up the burden. The time is probably coming when the American Mission to Lepers can in increasing measure stimulate governments to provide adequate care for their lepers, to enact suitable legislation and to take measures to bring the disease under control. Recent surveys have shown enormous numbers of lepers in Africa and South America. Prompt measures probably could stop the spread. The prospects for further gains are excellent. The battle is still far from won, but efforts such as those of the Mission can continue to do much to help in the solution of this great problem. It is always difficult to start motion in a great mass, but now that this has been done, redouble your efforts to increase the speed and a better day will dawn for the leper, and countless thousands will be saved from contracting the disease." Address by Dr. Victor Heiser at the annual meeting January, 1924.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D. Bishop.

Progress at Orlando Cathedral.

At a meeting of the St. Luke's Cathedral Chapter, Orlando, Florida, held on May 7, a resolution was unanimously passed expressing appreciation of the Very Rev. C. Stanley Long's services to the Cathedral Parish. Dean Long is taking deep interest in all Church and civic work in Orlando.

The resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, That in view of the fact that the church is closing a most prosperous winter season and is entering on a campaign to raise money to build a new Cathedral, it seems fitting that some expression of our appreciation as a Chapter of the tireless efforts of Dean Long in bringing the activities of the church up to such a high standard, should be given. The membership has materially increased, many have been added to the church by Confirmation, the finances in better shape than ever before and the parish in every way prosperous. It seems fitting at this time to pass a resolution expressive of our deep appreciation of Dean Long's satisfactory work in the church and parish."

MINNESOTA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Dinner of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis.

More than five hundred members of St. Mark's Parish, Minneapolis, Minn., of which the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood is the rector, gathered at the Curtis Hotel, Minneapolis, on St. Mark's Day evening, Monday, April 28, for the annual St. Mark's Day Dinner.

The rector presided. The Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., delivered a short address on the meaning of anniversaries. He particularly commended the project of building a new parish house, plans for which have been drawn. The new building will be equipped so that the parish may serve the metropolitan district, in which it is situated, in such a way as to greatly enlarge the present Social Service activities of the entire community. Mr. James A. Latta, Junior Warden, reviewed the activities of the past years, stating that the number of communicants had increased from 1,225 to 1,479 in the past three years.

Dr. Donald J. Cowling, President of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., was the principal speaker of the evening. Dr. Cowling delivered a scholarly and comprehensive address on the religious value of the Bible.

St. Mark's famous choir, under the direction of Mr. Stanley R. Avery, organist and director, sang several numbers, and solos were sung by several of the choir soloists.

For The Church Home.

Mothers' Day has been officially designated by the Bishop of Washington as the special day for offerings for the Church Home of the Diocese. This institution, when established, will take care of the aged Church people of the diocese, who would otherwise be without homes and support. The project was started about a year ago and in this time much has been accomplished in istry as a vocation for young men? It also comes at a time of the year when graduates are about to pour forth from the schools and colleges of the land. All of them must do something. Here is a field for the best efforts of the best trained minds and of the finest spirits among the graduates.

A sixth suggestion is that the National Council take steps to secure brief, interesting, and stimulating biographies of the more notable of the priests which the American Church has produced. At present we have none that the average young man would care to open. There are some that are altogether too sketchy and the rest are too detailed and ponderous—books for scholars only. Other vocations, especially the scientific vocations, have interesting biographies of the life and works of their great men—for example: The book called "Pioneers of Science," by Sir Oliver Lodge, is a book which interests young men if they have any scientific imagination at all. It stimulates them and inspires them to follow in the footsteps of these men. Far more interesting would be the biographies of men who have blazed the trail for Christ throughout the length and breadth of this country—men such as Seabury, White, Kemper, Breck, and a host of others who may be mentioned. This is, of course, a work for the National Council. The Church must have a literature of this kind if she is going to set forth once more the vocation of the ministry.

There is no doubt that a tremendous responsibility rests upon the clergy. They cannot escape this, and upon them in particular will lie the blame or the praise for the Church's failure or success to raise up laborers for the harvest of the Lord.

the way of organization of committees in the several parishes and the raising of a small fund with which to start the work. The need of the home is most urgent and it is hoped that it may be put into operation in the near future. A temporary home may be used for the present need, as those in charge look forward to seeing this institution placed permanently within the Cathedral Close.

The Bernardo Homes.

Miss Effie Bentham and J. N. Stephen addressed congregations of many of the Episcopal Churches of Washington during the past week, on the subject of the Bernardo Homes for destitute children in English-speaking lands. A large gathering on Wednesday, May 7 at the residence of Mrs. C. M. Flouke, resulted in the organization of a committee to foster interest in the homes among Washington people, with Mrs. Flouke, president of the committee. Mr. Joshua Evans, Jr., vice-president of Riggs Bank, was appointed treasurer, and will receive donations for this work.

Meeting of District Chapter, American Guild of Organists.

Mr. Oscar Comstock, for many years organist of Trinity Church and now a resident of New York, was the guest of honor at a recent meeting of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. Mr. Comstock is now a national officer of the Guild and gave the Washington organists present an interesting and helpful talk, emphasizing the ideals and hopes of the American Guild of Organists, which has always stood for a higher standard in the profession of organ playing. Associateship and Fellowship in the Guild may only be gained by successfully passing the required examinations given every year in May, and the preparation necessary for these examinations insures a broader musicianship for which the Guild has always stood. In the absence of the Dean and Sub-Dean, this meeting was presided over by Miss Charlotte Klein, organist of St. Thomas' Church and Secretary of the District Chapter of the Guild.

Coaching Classes Prove Successful.

The last session for this season of the Diocesan coaching class for teachers was held in St. Albans Church on Sunday evening, May 11, after a light supper, which was served in the Guild Hall.

These classes have been largely attended and have proven of great value to the Sunday-school work of the Diocese. The Rev. John S. Moses, rector of St. John's Church, Georgetown, has been in charge of these classes, throughout the season.

On Sunday, May 11, the Rev. Dr. John Howard Lever, rector of the Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, preached the "Flower Sermon," which in 1921 he was appointed to preach by the Bishop of Missouri in fulfillment of the terms of a foundation of the late Henry Shaw, of St. Louis, Mo., providing for an annual sermon on "The Goodness of God as Shown in Nature."

After four months' service in Charleston, S. C., the Rev. Dr. Alfred W. Arundel has returned to New York City. On May 8 he goes to Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, and will be associated until the fall with the Very Rev. Francis S. White, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral.

Ascension

See the Conqueror mounts in triumph,
See the King in royal state,
Riding on the clouds His chariot
To His heavenly palace gate;
Hark the choirs of angel voices
Joyful halleluiahs sing,
And the portals high are lifted,
To receive their heavenly King.

GENERAL OFFERING, SUNDAY, MAY, 25

JUST as the hopes and prayers of sixty years were to be crowned in the consecration of a Japanese Christian as Bishop of Tokyo, came the overwhelming catastrophe of last September.

ALL gone but faith in God, our stricken brethren carried on with serene courage, heartened and strengthened by the quick sympathy and generous aid of Christian America.

PLEADING for their nation, they tell us that it is profoundly touched by the example of Christian fortitude at home and Christian love across the sea, and that the door is open wide for the Master.

AMID the wreck and ashes of church and school and hospital, impotent without us, they wait our coming to rebuild, in order that they may do their part to bring the wonderful vision to reality.

NEVER have we had such a chance to match faith with faith and sacrifice with sacrifice in splendid adventure to win a kingdom for the King of Kings.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Blessed Jesus, Light of all the world, in whose Light alone we shall see Light;
Help us to believe that Thou art with us in the darkness even when we cannot feel Thee near. Guide our stumbling footsteps, and shed Thy bright beams upon our path. And lead us at the last, through the valley of the shadow, into the Light of Eternal Day, that with Thy Saints we may see Thy Face, and praise Thee for ever. Amen.

It is not so much . . . that you and I desire to pray. There is this stronger incentive—Jesus who knows all, Jesus the Lover, Jesus the great Field Marshal viewing the great world battlefield, He wants us to pray. . . . The desire to pray becomes a mighty one when we discover that it is the Lord Jesus Christ who wishes us to pray and depends on us to do it.—Grainger Fleming.

It seems strange that any should let anything that another may do keep him away from God's house. Every Christian should remember that the Church is the place where God has appointed at least a weekly meeting with Him.
God will not accept as a sufficient reason for his failing to keep the appointment the statement that there is some one else in that church who has hurt his feelings or done him an injury.—
Exchange.

Do you remember that wondrous word in Rom. 6:13, where the Spirit exhorts us to yield our members to God as instruments? Do you remember the marginal meaning of that word "instruments"? It is "weapons." A striking figure that, to yield yourself to God as a "weapon." God wants you to be a spear He can fit to His hand and hurl into the heart of the enemy's country. God wants you to be a keen, glittering blade with which He may cut
His way through the very hosts of sin.
God wants you to be a mighty battering ram that He may break down the battlements of sin. God wants us to be weapons.—James H. McConkey.

THE NEED OF A NEW SPIRIT

The Churchman of New York is printing a series of articles written by a special correspondent who was sent by the paper to Texas to gather at first hand the facts concerning the ministry of the Rev. Lee W. Heaton in Fort Worth, Texas, and the controversy which has gathered round him. It is a long story and a sad one. We are of two minds as we contemplate its publication in the Churchman. It seems a pity that anything so discreditable to certain elements in the Church should need to have been given general publicity. It will give "loud mockers in the roaring street" new and abundant cause to mock, and one cannot help regretting that this should be so. Nevertheless, the truth is the truth; and in the long run, the interests of the Kingdom do not go forward by superficially hiding evil things from view. It is right that the Church should know what is going on in the Diocese of Dallas, even if that disclosure be in many ways humiliating and in some temporary aspects hurtful. Ultimately a right opinion in the whole Church must be depended upon to correct what is wrong, and that public opinion cannot be shaped without information.

We shall not try to summarize what the Churchman is printing. The articles are eight in number, of which three have already appeared and of which the other five will follow week by week. They demonstrate that there has been an alliance against Mr. Heaton of forces which very strangely consort together. A disgruntled and, it would seem, a very vindictive element in his congregation attempted to found a new mission church in a city where there is no room for another Episcopal congregation, and in this attempt have apparently been supported by the Bishop. Far more sinister, however, are two other facts. One is that the enemies of Mr. Heaton have struck hands with the most notorious leader of the rabid fundamentalists in the South, the Rev. J. Frank Norris, of the Baptist Church in Fort Worth, and when we say "fundamentalists," we do not use the word in that loose meaning according to which it is applied sometimes to persons who simply hold with great reverence and tenacity to conservative views, but we mean that type of bigoted and implacable reactionary who substitutes dogmatic assertion for any thoughtful and generous effort to interpret religion into living terms. Mr. Heaton has been assailed rancorously in the "Searchlight," the paper which this Dr. Norris publishes, and the Bishop of Mr. Heaton's Diocese, according to the testimony brought out by the Churchman, stands by, applauding. Nor is this all. There has entered into the situation also that influence which from the beginning the Southern Churchman has seen and described as an unmistakable menace. The Ku Klux Klan has ranged itself against Mr. Heaton. It is supporting the group from his congregation which is trying to set up a competing Church. It has, so the Churchman states, lent its hall for that purpose, and meanwhile Mr. Heaton, who has gone on about his work and has conducted himself with a quiet Christian faithfulness, seems to have had no help at all from the Bishop, who is quite willing that a Baptist fundamentalist and the Ku Klux Klan should, if they can, wreck the ministry of a man who is trying to serve the cause of Christ.

We do not wish to pass any judgment on this matter. We think it is time, however, that the enlightened opinion of the Church at large should begin to form its general judgment. We hope that thoughtful men and women in our communion everywhere will read the facts as these are brought out in the current numbers of the Churchman. We are confident that the real leadership of the Church in the South and the real spirit of her Bishops cannot approve the sinister alliances into which our Church is being drawn through some of her representatives in the Diocese of Dallas. The question is a far larger one than the theological opinions of one clergyman. That matter, if the words of his Bishop mean what they say, should be considered no longer as a cause of just division, since the Bishop himself has negated the proceedings originally instituted against Mr. Heaton. It is a question of whether or not this Church of ours in a part of the country where theological differences are whipped into a passion shall show the spirit of Christ which can rise above these things, or whether it is to surrender to, and make itself one with, the most ignorant and reactionary forces which at the present time afflict the life of a part of these United States.

THE STIMULUS OF CONTRASTING IDEAS

Final Sessions of the Church Congress Promote Clearer Thinking on the Creeds and Other Questions.

By Special Editorial Correspondence.

In the two previous issues of the Southern Churchman there was printed a review of the essays and discussions at the Church Congress on the opening evening and on the first full day, with its morning, afternoon and evening sessions. On the two succeeding days, the program of the Congress was as full of interest as its beginning promised.

HOW FAR IS THE LANGUAGE OF THE CONCILIAR DECREES RELEVANT TO MODERN THOUGHT?

That was the subject set for the Thursday morning session, and the essayists were two men whose contrasting points of view were admirably calculated to reveal all sides of the question.

Professor Kirsopp Lake, Wynn Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Harvard, outlined the position of general councils in the history of the Church and touched on the Catholic doctrine of a divinely inspired Church with an equally strong belief in the infallibility of Scripture.

"The ultimate proof of all doctrine," he said, "was Scriptural, and in some ways the Old Testament was even more important than the New. It was indeed on Scripture that the Church always based its claims. In this respect it is no different from the Protestant Churches, all of which in the Reformation constantly affirmed the scriptural authority of Scripture. The difference is that the Protestant Churches recognize no person or body of persons as infallible in their interpretation of Scripture, which must speak for itself.

"For a Protestant Church the matter would seem to have a wholly academic value. It cannot, however, be ignored that both in England and in America there has been for many years an attempt to reinstate general councils as infallible, and to ascribe to general councils an essentially different authority from that conceded to smaller assemblies.

"Just as no respectable antiquity can be claimed for a doctrine which ascribes to general councils an infallibility and an authority which is denied to smaller councils or to individual prelates, so there is none for ascribing to them an authority which is denied to Scripture. Scripture has always been the basis of the decree of councils. It was not until the nineteenth century that Christians began to deny the infallibility of Scripture. I think that they are right to do so. But they cannot have it both ways; if Scripture be not infallible much less so are councils which always built on Scripture.

"But it may be said Scripture and councils may have authority without infallibility. This is, however, a meaningless distinction when applied to thought. In matters of discipline, societies have a right to make what rules they choose and to expel the disobedient if they can. If they make sufficiently bad rules they will either be disobeyed by a group so strong that it cannot be expelled or they will destroy the society. But they obviously have power to make what rules they wish. When, however, they passed resolutions about facts, they obviously have authority when they are right and not when they are wrong.

"Facts and truths have real authority and real validity; societies and books, churches and Bibles, have an acquired authority when they are on the side of truth and facts, but they have not always been on that side, and when they are not, it will be found that the complete consent of Bible and Church will prove in the end to have less power than truth and facts, which invariably carry away the victory whatever men may say or do. They are hard to find and hard to follow, they call for humility of research rather than for pride of statement, for the confession of error rather than the assertion of certainty, but they and they alone are valid, authoritative and infallible."

Set over against the position of Professor Lake was that of the Reverend Frank Gavin, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the General Theological Seminary, New York:

"We assume the principle that Christianity is an historical religion," said Professor Gavin. "This postulates that it is dynamic rather than static and both progressive and constructive, for if it were not 'progressive' it could have no 'history,' properly speaking, and if it were not conservative there would be no abiding principle of identity which would be the subject of history. Our religion comes to us as a life and belief, freighted with the precious and rich experience of its corporate life through the centuries. The propagation of that living and vital stream demands that in its continuance it must be as broad and deep today and for the future, as it has been in the past. To be today anything less than it has been in the past would be disastrous. Biologically speaking, the present generation is a summary and epitome of the past, just as modern science begins today where our knowledge left off yesterday.

"If we may not lightly put to one side salient elements and factors in the vast historic sweep of Christian history, which are at once experience and its formulation, to be conveyed to posterity as the means for mediating that experience for the future, we are confronted with the obligation of interpretation and restatement. This is our real difficulty. The task involves bringing to bear to our investigation of the data a spirit of comprehending and sympathetic inquiry and this spirit, which will make the facts alive again for us, is nothing less than the attainment in our own terms of that religious experience which centuries ago brought these statements into being. We may not discard until we understand; we cannot understand until, as Croce would have us see, we can instill the vital principle of comprehension into the chronicle of past religious history. Then, further, we want to keep in mind a principle which, for lack of a better term, may be called the law of equation. Granted the adequacy and sufficiency of the statement of early Christian experience in its embodiment in the Conciliar definitions in relation to that experience. To be valid in terms of the vast sweep of Christian experience, our modern spiritual experience and the modifications it necessitates in the way of restatement and reinterpretation of the ancient formulas must be as catholic and inclusive as they, must have exceeded them in insight, grasp, and power of intimate knowledge, and have included them and, in a sense, surpassed them in the breadth and depth of penetrative experience."

THE STANDARDS OF THE MODERN HOME.

Following the session which had to do with the Conciliar Decrees, came a later morning hour on "The Standards of the Modern Home." Dr. Samuel S. Drury, of St. Paul's School, could not be present, but Dean Rousmaniere read for Dr. Drury the essay which the latter had written.

Dr. Drury praised the modern home for its determination to achieve education for all of its members. This, he found, extends throughout the country. In sense of service, however, the family is not so worthy of respect, and there is abroad in many circles a "smart suspicion" of any person or thing that needs money for support. The home likewise is lacking in that its standards are undefined. Many a home confuses hope with endeavor, and many a family drifts along in a haze of idealism.

The home, in many instances, lacks centralization, he believes. If the elders are wrapped up in their own affairs, the home becomes simply a boarding house. Moreover there is too much of the spirit of toleration, so that if the devil himself should call there is an easy chair waiting for him. Seldom does the father of the family today smite the breakfast table and stigmatize something as a "damnable practice."

The modern family needs routine, a habit of doing certain things because they are right, whether or not it is pleasant to do them. Finally, he thought, there is a lack of definiteness. The modern home needs a creed. Lack of direction and drive in large part is due to an intellectual vagueness about the spiritual verities.

Hon. Frederick P. Cabot, Judge of the Juvenile Court of Boston, for his part of the discussion, called attention to lessons which might be learned from the children and family life of the poor, particularly those of foreign descent. Their children, he thought, are fortunate in that the families are so large that each child must learn to adjust himself to others. Moreover, the children are expected to contribute to the life of the group by doing chores and by turning in the money that they earn. It may be carried too far, but there is something fine in the spirit of responsibility that is developed. American families might well study the individuality, the real tastes which come to light in many families of foreign nationality.

Judge Cabot warned against permitting boys and girls to attend movies too frequently and of listening regularly to radio concerts, saying that it kills creative effort, teaches them to depend on others for entertainment, and restricts individuality. What is wanted, he said, is self-reliance, thoroughness, straight thinking, ability, reverence and faith, visions and high ideals. And it can't be taught to immigrant families unless American families possess such ideals themselves.

In the discussion which followed, Bishop Parker of New Hampshire mentioned the benefit which he said can be obtained from personal friendship with individual foreigners. The Rev. George G. Chiera, an Italian who has been in this country for eighteen years, hoped that Americans might learn to find good in the Italians and "also in the Irish." He was followed by a man who said that he was Irish and wanted to keep some of the old Irish standards and didn't want to gain certain American standards.

On Thursday afternoon there was no regular session of the Congress. The General Committee met at the Harvard Club, reelected Bishop Slaterry as Chairman, and filled certain vacancies on the Committee. Also there was an informal discussion as to the date and place for the next Congress, but there was no attempt to reach a final decision. Later in the afternoon, the delegates to the Congress were graciously entertained at a reception by the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge.

On Thursday evening there took place one of the most notable sessions of the Congress. The subject was "The Christian Approach to the Solution of Industrial Problems," and the speakers were—the Rev. John Howard Melish, D. D., rector of Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. William H. Barr, Buffalo, N. Y., President of the National Founders' Association, and Miss Mary van Kleeck, Director, Department of Industrial Studies, Russell Sage Foundation.

Miss van Kleeck had no manuscript for her address, nor was the very eloquent address of Dr. Melish available in a manuscript copy. The text in full of these two ad-resses will be one of the chief contributing factors in the value of the published proceedings of the Congress when these appear—as they shortly will—in book form.

On the last day of the Congress there were three sessions, all of them holding the attention of large audiences. At the later morning session, the subject of "Eugenics" was discussed by the Rev. Robert Kreidler, rector of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., and Dr. Howard J. Banker, Carnegie Institute, Washington; and in the afternoon, Hon. Augustus Noble Hand, Judge of the U. S. District Court, New York; Mr. Rosewell Page, of Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. George Ashton, Oldham, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Albany, discussed "How Shall the Church Deal with Fundamentalism?" But without invidious distinction it may be said that the most stimulating of all the discussions on this final day was that on

THE CREEDS.

The Rev. Argus Dun, Assistant Professor of Systematic Divinity in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, pointed out that the supreme question is as to how far the formulated Creeds really express and transmit the living heart-beat of the Church's faith. There are three desires which enter into the making of a Creed—that it may utter the faith of the individual,—that it may share that faith with others; that it may sift the believing from the unbelieving, how the historic Creeds did greatly serve in these three ways for the centuries when the Creeds were written. But do they serve with equal effectiveness for this century in which we live? Permanent truth and value are wrapped up in the experiences which produced the Creeds; but does the creedal language best convey that truth and value to an age which thinks in a different vocabulary altogether?

To Professor Dun, the Rev. M. Bowyer Stewart, Professor in Nashotah House, replied. Things which have happened, he said, cannot "unhappen." The Creeds proclaim certain great facts of Christian history, and both the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds can still stand a media for the gospel truths. The Creeds remind us that any Christological belief which is false to the gospel kicks over the ladder by which it has climbed.

SHALL WE DISCONTINUE MAKING CREEDS A REQUISITE OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP?

By the Reverend George C. Foley, D. D.

THE recent pastoral of the House of Bishops contains these words: "Some test of earnest and sincere purpose of discipleship, for belief and for life, is reasonably required for admission to the Christian Society. Accordingly profession of the Apostles' Creed as a summary of Christian belief stands and has stood from early ages . . . as a condition of Baptism." The first sentence suggests the fundamental truth, which it will be the object of this paper to maintain. The second is open to question; because only parts of the Apostles' Creed have stood "from early ages" as a condition of Baptism, and because that "summary of Christian belief" is not necessarily a test of "sincere purpose of discipleship," as was meant to be indicated by the word "accordingly."

This Creed is the brief expression of the Church's corporate faith. It is the token of the teaching Church, and is supposed to contain the things most useful for instruction and for distribution from those without. On the other hand, baptism is the confession of personal faith in Jesus Christ, the appointed means of inclusion within the family of His disciples. Now discipleship is personal religion; it represents a Divine life within the soul, and not acquiescence in any formulas, however Christian and true. A real disciple is one who does what Jesus says, not one who utters even the most correct statements about Him. It was an unhappy day for the Church when in the fourth century the emphasis was transferred from life to orthodoxy, and when later the Athanasian Hymn could declare, "He that will be saved must thus think of the Trinity." The present revival of concern about the Creed is not in itself a revival of interest in religion, or necessarily an expression of it. And one inquiry is whether the whole content of the Creed is requisite for the beginning of the Christian life. In other words, what is essential to public recognition as Christ's disciple?

Historically, the answer would seem to be pretty clear. The primitive rests of fitness were exceedingly simple. Our Lord required only a confession of attachment to Himself and readiness for His service. This implied some perception of what He was, but as expressed in personal not intellectual terms. He sought acceptance of "the truth"; but that was never conceived as theological propositions, it meant morally transforming ideas about God as revealed in Him. The command to "follow Me" was not burdened with preliminary inquisition into correctness of ideas. As Bishop Gore defines it, His method was to call men to His companionship, and in that they were afterwards to grow up into fuller understanding of all that He might mean to them. He distinctly said: "Him that is on the way to me (tov epoxuevov), I will in no wise cast out."

His Apostles added little to His demands. They taught many things, but they insisted on practically nothing more than the implications of His Name, when they baptized converts "in the name of the Lord Jesus." "Believe on the

It should be noted that Dr. Foley's article has to do simply with the question of the use of Creeds as a test of admission to the Church. It should not be confused as minimizing the great value of the Creeds for other purposes.—Editor S. C.

Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," was equivalent to Christ's own condition, and it needed no expansion. In contrast to St. Paul's elaborate theological training of those within the Church, he regarded as sufficient for entrance only this: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead (that is, that He is still alive, and authoritative as Lord), thou shalt be saved." Darwell Stone admits: "No other requisites for receiving this Sacrament, than that the recipients honestly desired salvation and were willing to recognize Our Saviour Jesus Christ as their Lord and God, are known to have been required in the New Testament" (Holy Baptism, 151). It is true, he suggests, that the needs of the early Church differed widely from those of later times: but this must refer to teaching, not to the conditions of being known as a real disciple of Christ.

For the ensuing centuries, especially the third and fourth, were occupied with doctrinal controversies about the relation of the historic Christ to the unseen God. Valuable decisions were reached and affirmations made upon what was denied or distorted, and the issue from the confusion was the Nicene Creed. This was the testimony of the Council as to what the churches believed. But the really important question is this: did the Fathers, in the midst of these heated discussions about the Trinity and the personality of Jesus, demand a right opinion on all these controverted topics, before admitting any one to the privileges of the Church? It is perfectly well known that they did not. Tertullian speaks of "pledging ourselves to something more than the Lord hath prescribed in the Gospel" (de Corona, iii). But the history of the Creed shows it was very little more. Cyprian's interrogative Creed (in 250 A. D.) comprised only these few inquiries: "Dost thou believe in God the Father, in Christ the Son, in the Holy Spirit? Dost thou believe in remission of sins and eternal life through the Church?" (Swainson, Creeds, Chap. iii). Even more significant is the evidence from the famous Lectures of Cyril of Jerusalem (in 348). There we learn that a very full form of Creed was used in the instructions delivered to catechumens. But at the time of baptism the candidate was simply asked whether he believed in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and in one baptism of repentance (Lecture xix:9). As he was baptized into this Name, he was called on as a beginner in the Christian life to say that he believed in it. And, be it noted, this was twenty-three years after the Nicene Council.

Many specimens of short baptismal Creeds down to the sixteenth century seem to justify Swainson's statement that the full Apostles' Creed was probably not used in baptism before the Reformation. A good representative of the mediaeval preacher is the Sarum Manual, from which the Office of 1549 was adapted. It reduced the second paragraph of the Creed to the words: "Dost thou believe in Jesus Christ, the only Son of God, Our Lord, Who was born and suffered?" It is surely worth remarking that this is the precise form of the present roman rite (see Rituale Romanum). In all those ages, then, the Church believed and taught more, but imposed less as a test of being a Christian. If, as it would appear, the whole Creed was enjoined as the baptismal requirement for the first time in this book of Edward, the natural inference is that, in this respect, we are provincial, not Catholic.

What then should we require in our day at the beginning of a Christian life? Is the fulness of the Church's corporate faith needful for the first step in that life? I am implying no disloyalty to the Creeds. I am not questioning their truth or their doctrinal importance. I am not imperilling the authority of the Church's teaching office by suggesting a relaxation on this point. But, considering baptism as the public submission to Christ's obedience, I am inquiring about the necessity of exacting a complete Creed as a test of real service to Him. Is that service in any way qualified by reduction of the requirements to the simplest terms? Is the Church the family of the lovers and friends of Christ? Is it any disparagement of orthodoxy, if we desire to claim as Christ's own all who have His Spirit? Ought we to hinder the approach of souls to Him by insistence upon details which do not involve the simplicity of that relation? Or, to put it in the terms of our subject, ought we to demand for baptism assent to all the articles of the Apostles' Creed?

The answer is, obviously not; and for three reasons. First, because it is an unwarranted extension of the primitive requirement. The essentials of discipleship remain the same as when the Apostles first invited Jews and Gentiles into the fellowship of the Church; and there is nothing in our later circumstances to justify a supplement or correction of the apostolic conditions. If confession of loyalty was once considered adequate, it should not be made any harder to begin to be a Christian today. As Bishop Lawrence pertinently inquired at Portland: "What right has any branch of the Catholic Church to set up a bar of entrance to the Church which is higher than that used by the Apostles themselves?" One becomes a member of the kingdom, which is the personal rule of Christ, by actual service of the King; surely he may be, on the same terms, a member of the institution whose sole purpose it is to realize the kingdom. It seems absurd to ask more of a man who wants to join the company of the disciples than God would require for admission into Heaven itself. Newman said in his "Arians of the Fourth Century": "Freedom from symbols and Articles is abstractedly the highest state of Christian communion." So it is ideally: so it was practically in the early Church; so it ought to be in the initial stage of discipleship. Even Bishop Gore says in his latest work: "Surely all those whom Christ would have welcomed ought to be welcomed now" (Holy Spirit and Church, 224); and there is no evidence that He would impose a set of dogmatic articles before receiving one as His follower.

Secondly, because of what is implied in the growth of the Creed. We are so familiar with it and with its misleading name, that we are apt to ignore that fact. From the meagre Roman form of the second century, it grew by slow increments until it comprised twelve articles, which were first brought into one formula by Pirminius about A. D. 750. The following additions were made to the second paragraph after the second century: "only" Son, "Our Lord," "conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary," "suffered," "crucified," "died," "buried," the descent into hell, the resurrection, ascension, session, and coming in judgment. Some clauses, like the descent into hell and the communion of saints, were never generally adopted in the East. These details are not important to remember, but the fact involved in them is highly suggestive.

Every one of the additions had been long accepted before it was made part of the Creed; but they were not explicitly required of the volunteers in Christ's service. For hundreds of years Christians were admitted into the Church, with no suspicion that all of the twelve articles were necessary to being a Christian. The Christian life was maintained without them, and indeed that was just the time when the Church did her best and greatest work. If they were so essential to Christianity, that no one could be rightly signed and sealed as Christ's follower without them, they would have been found in the baptismal promises from the beginning. The very fact that they were not so found in the age-long admission that they were not regarded as essential.

It is sometimes said that the situation is changed since the additions were endorsed by the Church's liturgical use; just as the test word, homocension, put an end to the variations of thought of the preceding hundred and fifty years. But there is no parallel between the two things. Theology is an intellectual development, while religion is a uniform spiritual experience. The point I make is that this experience existed and was honored as such for ages without reference to elaborated credal statements; and no enlargement of the Creed can make any difference in the quality or conditions of that experience. It was a mistake even to make a Creed requisite for membership in the Church. This only tended to confuse Christ's religion with assent to facts about Christ, to reduce the wonderful relation which faith represents to Bishop Pearson's feeble definition of faith as "assent to that which is credible as credible."

And thirdly, because not every part of the Creed is basic and fundamental; and therefore the clauses are not all on the same level of importance. We are told that the Creed is such an inseparable whole, that if you bear any of its articulated phrases out of its place, you put the very life of this body of truth in peril. But the question is, what is the place of each particular clause? Are they all equally material, or are some of them subordinate and inferior? It is commonplace today to distinguish, as Bishop Gore does, between what is primary in significance and what is secondary; or, as Bishop Brent puts it, between principal and auxiliary truths. It is not meant that the subsidiary parts are to be treated as of no account, but that they are not the real basis of Christian living. The basic truths are those by which men live, but this does not apply to every statement of the Creed. Just as the books of the Bible are of unequal value as revelation, so not all the phrases of the Creed are of equal moment to religion.

Every one is really aware of this. For example, the date in the fourth article, "under Pontius Pilate," would never be considered as having any such dogmatic or spiritual value as the reference to the suffering for us. The burial is just as much a fact as the death, but it is not as central and interpretative of Christianity. The Jewish reckoning, "the third day," is of unspeakably lower significance than the resurrection. The virginal conception is not as primal and basic as the Incarnation; as the two Bishops above referred to witness. Or we may take the first half of the fifth article, "He descended into hell." It was a familiar idea in early times, and is to be found in the local Creed of Aquileia in 390. But it was not introduced into the Apostles' Creed until 650; the late date of itself makes it less urgent. Not to repeat that it is ignored in the East, you may recall that many Methodist churches omit it in their recitation of the Creed. No one would dream of saying that their standing as Christians is thereby affected. Moreover, from 1789 to 1892, a rubric in our Prayer Book permitted any congregation to omit it, if they did not desire to use an alternative. Here we have the ironical contrast of a church insisting that all the articles are essential to being a Christian, but that this article is not necessary to say or to hold after becoming a Christian. Even a Church ought to have some sense of humor, and we cannot evade the implication. For one hundred years this Church endorsed the principle that some of the articles are not fundamental to Christian living, and therefore it really conceded that they should not all be required of a candidate for baptism.

It must be remarked, however, that the Church has gone further, and has quite specifically emphasized this distinction. In the catechism the child is asked, "What dost thou chiefly learn in these articles of thy belief?" Out of the twelve only three are selected, the first, second and eighth, as the chief things to be borne in mind by the Christian; and they are all expressed as personal relations which are the essence of religion. Here we have the Church's only commentary on the Creed, and its entire contents are subordinated to the main matter of discipleship, which is faith in God, as Father, as Redeemer and Maker, and as life-giving spirit. The Creed is but the expansion of this three-fold Name. And Augustin's fanciful distinction that this is the only part of the Creed that we can "believe in," at least suggests that baptism should stress the Name, and not the expansion.

Creeds, like Sacraments, are contributions to an end, and this is moral and spiritual. Nothing which is not definitely contributory to it ought to be exacted of one who ingenuously professes it as his aim. The real question before us is, are Christian obedience and loyalty dependent upon all the details of the Creed? If not, why demand them at the outset? If I may quote Bishop Gore again: "It is as a life, rather than as a doctrine, that in the New Testament it makes its tremendous and difficult claim upon men" (op. cit., 34). To be sure, he says, "The doctrine is only the necessary background of the life." But the matter for our present decision is, how much doctrine is necessary to life? and just what features of it are requisite to the initial stage?

In pleading for the retention of the Creed, it is sometimes said that we may take refuge in the liberty of interpretation; since "fixity of interpretation" is not of the essence of the Creeds—pace the Bishops of 1894. But the greater number are entirely incompetent to decide among differing interpretations, and not a few can and do live the Christian life without any consideration of them. We shall have to wake up to the alarming fact that many are kept from baptism, and equally from confirmation, by this promise in the Office; and they are often unmistakably thoughtful and sincere in their desire to follow Christ. The question of Candidates for Orders is closely bound up with this very difficulty, and it is as acute among Englishmen as ourselves. At a recent conference of the Headmasters of the great public schools, it was said that out of seven hundred boys at Marlborough, with a great clerical tradition behind it, hardly a dozen are looking to the ministry. The masters agreed that the obstacle is the elaborated Creeds. If this be so with regard to candidates, it is increasingly true of those who would be glad to become members of the Church, and who have before them only the question of loving and serving the Lord among His recognized disciples.

It is simply tragic to have to leave so much genuine goodness outside the Church; since all goodness is the inspiration of "the Light that lighteth every man." There is no pastor who does not covet many who deeply sympathize with the purpose for which the Church exists, but against whom a barrier has been erected by a demand which has no immediate relation to that purpose. Ought we not to desire that every follower of Christ as Lord should be within the family where he belongs, and recognized as such? Should the test of the beginner be loyalty to the Master's Person, or subscription to a series of fundamental articles? In a word, when we find a soul manifestly hungering for the fellowship of Jesus, on what ground are we to invite him or inhibit him?

This is no perverse indifference to the truth of the Creed; it is the utterance of a conviction that the call to service should not be narrowed to the acceptance of even right opinions. And this feeling is becoming so general that the proposed English revision of the baptismal office simplifies the obligation into merely "professing the Christian faith." Bishop Vincent's amendment is even better: "I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God." Certainly, something less doctrinally exacting should be substituted for the present form, something more direct and personal, more Scriptural and apostolic, more essentially religious and Christian. It is because the requirement of all the articles of the Creed is an unwarranted extension of the primitive conditions; because it totally disregards the inclusion during many centuries of Christians with much less than the whole Creed, and therefore it is provincial and not catholic; and because it elevates subsidiary matters to the level of those basic truths which sustain life, thus confusing religion with orthodoxy—it is for these reasons that I earnestly advocate the discontinuance of Creeds as a requisite of Church membership.

NO VISIT FROM THE BISHOP OF LONDON BEFORE THE REVOLUTION.

We have a communication from "A Subscriber" asking us to answer "through the question box" the question, "What year did the Rt. Rev. Henry, Bishop of London, visit America?"

As this subscriber did not give his name, and we have no question box department we answer in this column that no Bishop of London nor any other English Bishop visited this country before the Revolutionary War.—Ed. S. C.

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE CREED.

Mr. Editor:

In this week's Churchman Bishop Lawrence makes this very sweeping statement: "There is not a Bishop, priest or layman of this Church who interprets each article of the Creed as he interpreted it ten or twenty years ago."

Permit me, through your columns, to say that I, for one, do interpret the Creed just as I did in 1858, when I was confirmed by Bishop Meade in old Christ Church here. And let me say, too, that I feel sure that many, many thousands of our Church, including bishops, clergy and laymen, would say the same.

FOR THE ASCENSION.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who after Thy Resurrection from the dead didst gloriously ascend into heaven, grant us the aid of Thy loving kindness, that, according to Thy promise, Thou mayest ever dwell with us on earth, and we with Thee in heaven, where with the Father and the Holy Ghost, Thou livest and reignest one God for ever and ever. Amen.—Gelasian Sacramentary, A. D. 494.

O Lord, whose favor is life, and in whose presence there is fulness of peace and joy; vouchsafe unto us, we beseech Thee, such an abiding sense of the reality and glory of those things which Thou hast prepared for them that love Thee, as may serve to raise us above the vanity of this present world, both in its pleasures and in its necessary trials and pains; so that under Thy guidance and help all things here shall work together for our everlasting salvation; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Common Worship.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

DIOCESAN ORGANIZATIONS.

IT is gratifying to note the enthusiasm which is sweeping the country and developing Diocesan and Provincial consciousness in the work of the Young People's Service Leagues, or Young People's Fellowships. Two things seem to be perfectly clear. First, that no social organization divorced from definite idealistic commitments is being contemplated. And second, that the young people feel the necessity of corporate action.

I have recently come from Macon, Georgia, where two hundred and twenty-five of the Church's young people conducted a Conference which would do credit to any Diocesan group. Mr. Thomas M. Johnson presided with dignity and poise, remarkable in one of his age and experience, and the Conference sessions might well be emulated by Diocesan Councils in point of attendance, sustained interest and enthusiastic response. The most idealistic appeals were accepted without a shadow of cant. Certainly in the Southland the intellectual complex is not worrying us. Nor do we find any lack of responsiveness when a plan of service is presented involving personal evangelism and the acceptance of the ethical standard which Jesus set for old and young.

Space alone limits extended reports from the Dioceses of Virginia, South Carolina, Atlanta and Georgia.

FORMATION OF DIOCESAN Y. P. S. L. IN VIRGINIA.

An interesting all-day convention was held Saturday, May 3, at All Saints' Church, Richmond, which resulted in the formation of a Diocesan Young People's Service League. The purpose of this organization is to further the work of the Church among the young people of the Diocese by aiding in the formation of Leagues in the various parishes, etc. Besides a good representation from Richmond, delegates were present from Ashland, Charlottesville, Varina, The Plains, Culpeper, and Garrisonville.

The meeting was opened by celebration of Holy Communion by the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, and the Rev. J. F. Ribble, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond. The program was continued in the parish house, at which time Bishop Brown made a short address, assuring those present of his hearty approval and cooperation. He expressed the hope that the meeting would result in the formation of a much-needed organization.

Miss Zillah Shackelford, President of the Young People's Service League, at Holy Comforter Church, Richmond, was unanimously elected President, as were the following officers: Miss Elizabeth Stoneman, President of the League at Varina, First Vice-President; Miss Catherine Jennings, President of the League at Culpeper, Second Vice-President; Mr. Frank Snyder, President of the League at All Saints' Church, Richmond, Third Vice-President; Mrs. Frank L. Cummings, President of the League at St. John's Church, Richmond, Secretary and Treasurer.

A Constitution was adopted, setting forth the aims and ideals of the Diocesan Y. P. S. L., a copy of which will be sent to each parish in the Diocese.

Luncheon was served the delegates by the ladies of All Saints' Church.

The afternoon session was taken up by the address of the Rev. Charles McAllister, rector of St. John's Church, Hampton, Va. He spoke on the need of the stabilizing influence of the more serious-minded young people to prevent the degeneration of the Church and the nation.

After an informal discussion, the convention adjourned to meet next year at a time and place to be decided upon later by the Executive Committee.

Information as to the Diocesan Young People's Service League or the formation of an individual League may be obtained from the Secretary, Mrs. Frank L. Cummings, 2710 East Grace Street, Richmond, Va., upon receipt of a self-addressed stamped envelope.

FIRST YOUNG PEOPLES' CONVENTION OF THE DIOCESE OF UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

The first Young People's Convention of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina was held at the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, rector, on Friday and Saturday, May 2 and 3, 1924. The Department of Religious Education of the Diocese had planned this convention for many months, and the results have more than justified their expectations. Nearly three hundred delegates attended the convention for the full time and two hundred more attended for the sessions on Saturday. The enthusiasm of the young people was so great and the indications pointed to such a large attendance that unusual preparations were deemed necessary for the entertainment of the convention. Comfortable sleeping quarters were prepared at the parish house for sixty boys in case of emergency. However, when the large attendance became known the homes and hearts of the people of the community were opened wide and all visitors were provided for, though a number of boys at their own request spent the night at the parish house, "chaperoned" by the rector.

The Banquet.

The convention opened with a handsome banquet in the large dining room of the parish house, where three hundred happy young people were seated. Tasteful and elaborate decorations had been made by the Young People's Service League of the Church of the Advent. The Rev. Frank A. Juhan, of Christ Church, Greenville, Associate Chairman of the Department of Religious Education and Director of Young People's Work, acted as toastmaster, but most of the exercises were carried through by the young people themselves.

With a combination of League songs, yells and cheers, short but thoughtful addresses by members of the League, fine singing of the old hymns of the Church and excellent instrumental music furnished by members of the League, the banquet scored a complete success.

Model Program.

At the close of the banquet a demonstration of a Model Program for the Young People's Service League was given in the Parish House auditorium. The award for the best program had been made to the League of the Church of the Advent by judges who had before them only the programs presented with numbers attached. The League of this Church, therefore, demonstrated very successfully the program which had earned the award—a framed painting of the League emblem and motto, "Non sibi; sed aliis."

Preparation Service.

The convention then repaired to the church where a memorable service of preparation for the Holy Communion was conducted by the Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, Bishop-Coadjutor of North Carolina.

Corporate Communion.

Despite the fact that most of the members of the Convention had driven long distances after their school work on Friday and had spent a long, full evening in the different exercises enumerated above, the young people were in their places in the Church one hundred per cent strong for their corporate communion at the early hour of half-past seven Saturday morning. It was a wonderful sight—this great company of boys and girls taking reverent part in this sacred service of consecration. One would be dull indeed not to have his heart warmed by such an experience, and not to recognize its spiritual significance.

Church School Service.

Picturesque and significant also was the great Church School Service at 10:30 A. M., at which the Easter offerings of the Schools of the Diocese were presented. Marching into the Church in order under their own banners the young people presented a fine appearance, and gave the idea of solidarity and cooperation. The offering presented at this service, with slight additions since, was $4,326.46. This is a fine advance over the offering of $2,920.52 last year. A few Schools are still to be heard from and the Colored Churches have not yet presented their offering, so that it is believed that the total may come considerably nearer to the Diocesan goal of $5,000.

Awards.

The banner for the largest offering was won by Christ Church, Greenville, with an offering of $1,363.26.

The banner for the best per capita offering was awarded

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

HELPING SCIENCE BY PRAYER.

A correspondent has sent us a prayer for the furtherance of Cancer research work, with the request that we publish it, that it may be clipped and used by interested persons.

No one who has not watched the fearful progress of this great disease day by day, can realize the poignancy with which such a request will come to any whose loved ones may be suffering in this way.

We take pleasure in publishing this prayer with the suggestion that the word "tuberculosis" either be substituted for cancer or included with it as a subject for prayer:

"O God, Who declarest Thy almighty power in showing mercy and pity to all who call upon Thee, and Who revealest to men, in each new discovery, a part of Thy truth; Enable with Thy Grace, we pray Thee, the dulness of our blinded sight, and grant a new vision to all those, who serve Thee in their search for the cause of Cancer and its cure. Lighten their darkness, Oh Lord, we beseech Thee and mercifully direct them into Thy path of knowledge and truth; Grant them the realization that through Thee all things are possible, pour upon them the abundance of Thy inspiration; and finally lead them to the attainment of victory, that the scourge of Cancer may be ended, and that we, being freed from this burden of fear, may live continually in the love and service of Thine only Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen."

The suggestion of our correspondent affords us the opportunity to remind our readers that there is no reason why religion in general and prayer in particular should not go hand in hand with science, and especially scientific research for the cure of disease.

Some people have the idea that because they pray for a thing, it requires some very unusual response to make them feel that the prayer is answered. Thus if one has been praying for restored health and finds a physician with a treatment that accomplishes this purpose, it is apt to be looked upon rather as the conquest of science than of prayer, whereas answer to the prayer may have been in the guiding of the suppliant to the right doctor.

If we recognize that all modern inventions are really simply discoveries of new applications of God's laws it brings the realm of science into closer touch with that of religion.

We believe firmly that the united prayers of many people will materially hasten the scientific conquest of such diseases as cancer and tuberculosis, and we earnestly commend to our readers the constant use of the above prayer.

PRACTICE IS BETTER THAN THEORY.

At this time when the Seminary is about to close, and graduates and under-graduates are making their plans, we take especial pleasure in calling attention to the combination of City Mission work with the special course offered by the General Seminary in New York.

We are advised that:

"This Course will begin June 1, 1924, and continue for nine months and will be offered to two clergymen recently ordained. The General Theological Seminary is cooperating and offers six months' residence. The City Mission Society offers from three to four months' residence, including room, board, and incidental expenses, such as car fares, postage, &c., and $600 cash for other living costs. If the stipend seems small to a prospective applicant it should be borne in mind that the City Mission Society will have to give more of the time of its expert workers in instruction than a student can equate by his work.

The plan is to associate the students for a period of time with different members of the staff of the Society in order that through this association training in that especial type of work may be secured.

The aim of the Course is, first, to give training in pastoral work, that is, dealing with individuals spiritually and from the standpoint of social welfare helpfulness. Considerable of the time will be given to hospital and prison visiting. The former affords an unusual opportunity for dealing not only with people when they are sick, but because of the close contact dealing with their doubts and personal problems in a much more intimate way than is usually offered in parish work. As a result of a few months of this work one becomes much more quickly familiar with this important phase of priestly and pastoral work than one would in a much longer time in ordinary parish work.

"This experience as a chaplain and also work with the Social Service Department of the Society gives excellent training in methods of meeting the needs of dependent people who apply for help. This is another important phase of the work of a parish priest, in which there is not apt, ordinarily, to be adequate training.

"Through assisting the Director of Boys' Work in a Settlement and the Summer Camp, training is offered in dealing with boys, a growing activity in many parishes.

"The Course will offer training in other phases of the work of the Society, such as the aiding of newly arrived immigrants, probation and parole work, and the running of Church institutions.

The extent of this opportunity is indicated by the fact that the Society has a staff of over one hundred workers, and spends considerably more than $200,000 a year. The principal departments of the work are as follows:

"Chaplaincy work in fifty institutions, charitable and correctional.

"Church and parish activities for Colored and Italian people:

"Settlement Work.

"Fresh Air Work, especially a Boys' Camp.

"Immigration Work.

"Probation Work in different courts.

"Goodwill Industries, for handicapped persons.

"Social Service Case Work.

"The Seminary will offer an opportunity for study along the theoretic lines as a background for this work.

"This Course is established in order that the younger clergy may have an opportunity for training in the problems of Church work in urban communities, especially from the standpoint of those activities carried on by City Mission Societies. It will give excellent training for capacities in important parishes, as well as for positions as executives in City Mission Work. There are at present twenty-two City Mission Societies in large cities in the United States, as well as a large number of parishes which are centres for types of work similar to City Mission activities.

"Application can be made to, and further information secured from the Rev. L. Ernest Sunderland, D. D., Superintendent, 38 Bleecker Street."

First Clergyman to Take Course Offered to Recent Seminary Graduates by the New York City Mission Society Says:

"It has given more practical experience than I could have acquired in years as a parish priest."

The Rev. Mr. Magnan says: "After having been engaged for the past eight months in taking the course in City Mission Work offered by the New York City Mission Society and the General Theological Seminary, it is my opinion that the course is of inestimable value to any young man just graduating from Seminary. The activities of the City Mission Society cover all phases of City Mission work, including chaplaincy work in hospitals, jails, settlement houses, fresh air camps, corrective institutions for boys and girls, etc. It has been my privilege as the present incumbent of the course to have participated in all these different phases of activity, which, even though I should not remain in City Mission work will have given me more practical experience, both in a pastoral and sacramental way, than I could have acquired in years as a parish priest. For anyone wishing to take up chaplaincy work of any kind the course is even more valuable. Besides the practical side one has the advantage of continuing one's studies at General Seminary, as time is given to take two of the splendid courses offered by that institution."

Church Intelligence

Meeting of the National Council and Department of Missions and Church Extension

The National Council met in New York May 14 and 15, every Province of the Church being represented.

The Council heard the report of the committee appointed at its last meeting to organize the movement for raising the fund for reconstruction in Japan and heartily approved of the designation of Sunday, May 25, as the day for a general offering to be taken throughout the Church.

A careful review of present conditions and of the appeals sent in by our missionaries convinced the Council of the superlative need today of a special demonstration by the Church of its Christian interest in the welfare of the nation and people of Japan and of its determination to rebuild its schools, hospital, and churches.

Mr. Franklin presented the report of the Japan Reconstruction Committee, and stated that a gift of $100,000 had been received from Mr. Samuel Mather of Cleveland, Ohio, a member of the Council.

Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio, the Rev. G. C. Stewart, D. D., and Mr. Samuel Mather were appointed a committee to represent the Council at the centennial of Kenyon College this June.

Word was received from the Bishop of Hankow that he had resigned as Executive Secretary of the National Christian Council in China. A cable was also received from the three Bishops in China requesting that the Council donate a money contribution to the National Christian Council, and the President was authorized to donate a sum not over $3,000.

Other business attended to was to give the District of Haiti opportunity to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the first Haitien Bishop, and authorizing the Bishop of Haiti to appeal for funds for the improvement of the work there to the extent of $25,000. The Presiding Bishop reported that the Bishop of New Mexico had been relieved of the District of Mexico, and Bishop Capers, of West Texas, placed in charge.

Bishop Brent was made an additional member of the Department of Religious Education, and Miss Mildred Carpenter of the Department of Social Service, and the Rev. J. M. B. Gill of the field department had their resignations accepted, the former by reason of ill health, and the latter because of new duties in the Church. Mr. Gill was appointed an associate secretary of the field department.

To take the place of Mr. Gill, the Diocese of Southern Ohio, through its Bishop and Chapter, released the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer as Diocesan Executive Secretary, and a resolution of appreciation was adopted for this service to the general Church. The Council also sent a resolution to the Venerable John C. White, expressing its good wishes in his new duties as Bishop of Springfield.

It was reported that the joint meeting of the Council and the House of Bishops would be held during the week of October 6, and one of the questions to be brought up would be, "How to build, present and execute the Program for the next triennium." The Council also voted that the meeting scheduled for next July should not be held unless imperative need demanded it, and the Council adjourned until October 6, unless called earlier by the President.

Department of Missions and Church Extension.

In the Department of Missions, which met on Tuesday before the Council meeting, in addition to the matters which are reported in the Minutes of the Council meeting the department arranged to pay part transportation of two Hungarian students who have graduated from the Seminary in Hungary and are coming to this country for post-graduate work. They will receive scholarships. The appropriation is to go toward the travel expenses, the balance to be provided from other sources interested in this work. An appropriation of $600 was granted from the Foreign-born Americans budget toward the salary of a lay assistant and teacher in the New Brunswick Hungarian Parish. Provision was made to care for the expenses of the Rev. Fred-

Mr. Franklin's Statement.

The statement of receipts from the Dioceses for the general work of the Church, to May 1, 1924, is not encouraging.

Allowing one month for the collection of the money, there should have been received $926,272 on the Budget share of the quota, whereas the actual receipts have been only $483,538.60, or a little over one-half of the amount due. Only eleven Dioceses and Missionary Districts have kept up with the amount due.

The amount received to date is over $100,000 less than the amount received at this time last year. The late date of Easter this year explains some of this falling off, because few of the Lenten offerings of the Church Schools were received in April, but this is no excuse for the fact that only a little over one-half of the Budget figure is met.

A few Dioceses have been an exception to the general rule, the following having reduced the amount of their underpayments as compared with last month, or else have so improved their records as to show an overpayment rather than an underpayment: Rhode Island, Delaware, Southwestern Virginia, Virginia, Washington, East Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, Upper South Carolina, Ohio, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Arkansas, New Mexico, Alaska, Arizona, Eastern Oregon, Utah, Mexico.

Don't forget that summer vacations are coming soon and vacation time is a mighty poor time to make up arrears.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

An Interesting Announcement.

Announcement has just been made of the marriage, in Quebec on May 3, of Bishop McKim, of Tokyo, and Mrs. J. E. Baird, a prominent Churchwoman of Philadelphia. Bishop and Mrs. McKim left at once for Vancouver and sailed May 15 for Tokyo. Prior to his departure the Bishop, who has been in mission service for forty years, announced his intention of retiring at the time of next General Convention, in New Orleans, in October, 1925.

Conference of Church Workers.

The Conference for Church Workers, which was held at St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock, Va., last June, and which proved such a success, will be repeated this year. The conference will run from June 9 to 13. The following leaders for the various groups have been secured: Miss L. T. Davis, Mrs. Jacquelin Smith, Miss Sallie Dean, Dr. Mary Brydon, the Rev. Dr. Kenney Hammond, Mr. R. Carter Beverley and Mr. John Goodridge, all of the Diocese of Virginia, and Miss Mary Hunter of Southern Virginia. Bishop Brown has consented to be present for part of the Conference.

Board and room will be furnished those attending at the remarkably low price of $1 per day and special rates on both bus lines (Richmond and Fredericksburg) have been secured. Busses leave Richmond at 8 A. M. and 2 P. M., and Fredericksburg at 2 P. M., for Tappahannock.

Those desiring programs or reservations will notify the Rev. H. S. Osburn, Tappahannock, Va.

Meeting of the Junior Auxiliary.

The annual meeting of the Junior Auxiliary was held in St. James' Church, Leesburg, May 7. Mrs. Robert Barton presided over the business meeting. All branches reported growth during the year, while great satisfaction came from the treasurer's report, which stated that a total of $4,480.04 had been given in money and boxes during the year. Mrs. Barton urged the older Juniors to volunteer for mission work during the summer, explaining the advantages of such work, not only to the individual, but to the work as well.

In the afternoon delightful talks were made by Miss Barber of China, and Miss Sallie Dean on the subject of life service. At the devotional service the Rev. William Marshall presided. Twenty-five dollars was subscribed to Mrs. Hibbert's mountain work and Bishop Brown closed the meeting with an appeal for the prayers and co-operation of the Juniors in raising his emergency fund.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Daughters of the King in Annual Session.

The second local Assembly of the Daughters of the King in the Diocese was held in St. Paul's Church, Salem, on Friday, May 9. The Chapter of Christ Church, Roanoke, was represented by a large delegation and there was representation also from Trinity Church, Staunton.

After morning service Bishop Jett made an address and corporate communion was celebrated by the Bishop and the Rev. David H. Lewis, rector of St. Paul's. The Assembly was then organized for business and the Rev. Mr. Lewis welcomed the visitors; the response being made by Mrs. B. O. Grove, of Christ Church, Roanoke. Interesting reports from the three chapters in the Diocese were then read.

The National President of the Daughters of the King, Mrs. A. A. Birney, of Washington, D. C., gave an especially instructive and helpful talk on the objectives and methods of the Order.

A very attractive luncheon was served in the parish house, and the afternoon was spent in discussion and conference. Diocesan officers elected for the coming year are:

President, Mrs. H. I. Johnson, of Salem; Vice-President, Mrs. Carter Braxton, of Staunton; Secretary, Mrs. Nannie B. Robertson, of Roanoke; Treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Wheelwright, of Roanoke.

The Assembly adjourned at four P. M., after having accepted a cordial invitation to meet in Christ Church, Roanoke, in May, 1925.

Work in Wythe County.

Six members of St. John's Church, Wytheville, took an active part in connection with the very successful clinic for crippled children, which was held at the courthouse in Wytheville on May 11, by Dr. W. T. Graham, of Richmond, under the auspices of the Red Cross Society. Dr. Graham is doing a wonderful work among these unfortunate children.

Mrs. William Wilkins, special missionary among the "Wythe County Missions," spent most of the month of April in Detroit, Chicago and Pittsburgh, speaking in behalf of her work. In this way Mrs. Wilkins has enlisted a great deal of interest in the mission work in the neighborhood of Ivanhoe, Wythe County.

Under the leadership of the Parish Aid Society, the churchyard of St. John's, Wytheville, is being beautified. The Sunday School of St. John's gave $239.39 as its Lenten Offering to the Church's Mission (the Field Department, or Nation-Wide Campaign); thus exceeding the quota of $225 which had been assigned by its rector, the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Council Largely Attended.

The thirty-second annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia met in St. Andrew's Church, Norfolk, Va., May 13 and 14, 1924, with the largest attendance in the history of the Diocese.

Bishop Tucker's address was of an unusually high order. Besides dealing with Diocesan matters, he touched on the discussion now in the Church, but not in a controversial way.

During the opening service of the Holy Communion, Bishop Tucker read that part of his address reporting the death of two clergymen in the Diocese and of ten Bishops in the Church.

Bishop Thomson, in his address, gave a very clear and interesting report of the affairs of the Diocese. In closing, he emphasized especially the importance of the pastoral side of the ministry.

The report of the Executive Committee, which embraced reports of the following sub-committees: State of the Church, Church Property, Clerical Support, and Lay Organizations, brought before Council in a concise and helpful way the condition of the Church in Southern Virginia.

These reports show that there are very few vacancies at the present time in the Diocese, and the work is progressing satisfactorily.

The Committee on Lay Organizations emphasized the fact that there is especial need in the Diocese for better organization in the work for men and boys.

At the suggestion of the Committee on Clerical Support, the Council adopted the recommendation that the minimum salary paid to a single clergyman be $1,500 a year, and to a married clergyman $2,000 and rectory.

The Committee, appointed to report to this Council on the Colored Work, reported that they were unable to reach any agreement. This committee was discharged. A new committee was appointed with enlarged powers to look into the entire status of Colored Work in the Diocese and report to next Council.

It was decided to hold the Council hereafter on the last Tuesday in January.

Two interesting matters connected with the old Jamestown Church were decided upon; one, that hereafter the old Jamestown Communion Service should be used at the opening service of Holy Communion at each meeting of Council; the other, that steps be taken to make old Jamestown the Church of Registration for old unattached members of the Church in America.

The matter of the Diocesan Camp was discussed. It was reported that arrangements have been made to open the Diocesan Camp this summer, near Bayville, in Princess Anne County. The Camp will be available for organizations of young people in the Diocese.

On Monday night there was a special meeting for laymen, at which time the work of laymen in the Church was discussed. Tuesday night the choir of St. Andrew's Church sang the cantata, "Penitence, Pardon and Peace." The Rev. J. M. B. Gill spoke of his work in China, and the Rev. Dr. J. W. Morris told of his work in Brazil. On Wednesday night addresses were made by Archdeacon Ribble on mission work in the Diocese among white people and by Archdeacon Russell on Colored work.

Elections: The Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., Secretary; Mr. W. W. Old, Jr., Treasurer; Judge Thomas H. Willcox, Chancellor of the Diocese; the Rev. William A. R. Goodwin, D. D., Register and Historiographer.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. J. Cleveland Hall, D. D., E. R. Carter, D. D., M. B. Marshall, Messrs. F. W. Darling, C. W. Grandy, E. W. Maupin, Jr.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. R. A. Goodwin, M. S. Taylor, C. E. McAllister, J. Scott Meredith, Messrs. H. H. Edmunds, E. B. Hodges, U. C. L. Taliaferro, Barclay Pretlow.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

The Convention: Gifts to Cathedral Fund Announced.

At the Diocesan Convention of New York, just held, Bishop Manning announced that he had raised $2,200,000 since February to start once more construction work on the Cathedral. The convention was taken by surprise. It was also taken with a period of loud applause. Others have turned in $105,000, and there has accumulated $256,000, so that with more than $2,500,000 in hand work is to start on the nave. Once started it is hoped it may not again stop. It is, however, a big task to keep it going to completion, for $12,500,000 is going to be needed, making the total structure stand, when completed, and if there are not further advances, more than $20,000,000. This will cover land, and all buildings, with endowment and it may reach $25,000,000.

The Convention went back to the old Archdeaconry system, but will draft the Suffragan Bishops to serve as Archdeacons in work if not in name. Six such were created, including Staten Island for one, the Bronx and Westchester for two, with the other five in the northern parts of the Diocese.

In his address Bishop Manning gave a ringing message on old orthodox lines, saying what he has many times said before. There followed his reading a motion to endorse the Bishop's address delivered at Dallas, and also a more conservative motion, intended as the mover explained to make it easier for some members of the Convention who do not hold over strict views, to stay in and work. The Rev. P. W. Fountleroy introduced the one, and the Rev. Dr. W. R. Bowie the other. The stage was set for a brisk debate on the forenoon of the second day of the Convention, but motions having been referred to the Committee of the Despatch of Business, that committee recommended that all be laid on the table, which was done by the Convention in a rousing vote.

The Social Service Commission announced that it has arranged for a Citizens' Jury, to begin work this fall, and pass upon complaints made concerning any plays on any stage on the ground of immorality.

It was stated that work on the Cathedral will start with the erection of the baptistry, for which a separate fund of $250,000 has been given by two sisters, the Misses Stuyvesant, and their brother, Mr. A. Van Horne Stuyvesant. Other givers to Bishop Manning include Messrs. J. P. Morgan, the banker; Frank A. Munsey of the New York Sun; Vincent Astor, the present head of the Astor family, and Edward F. Albee, a foremost purveyor of vaudeville, and vestryman of St. John's Church, Larchmont. For some years Mr. Albee, identified with many worthy enterprises, has contributed to the annual expenses of the Cathedral services.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Launch Campaign For Philadelphia Divinity School.

A $1,000,000 campaign, led by Bishop Garland, U. S. Senator George Wharton Pepper and Mayor W. Freeland Kendrick of Philadelphia, for buildings, equipment and endowment for the Philadelphia Divinity School was launched with a dinner in the Ritz-Carlton Friday night, May 16, and will continue until May 26. Nearly two hundred workers went forth that night, equipped with well-laid plans, to convince six thousand persons within the next few days that maximum giving is in order. Dean George G. Bartlett explained the urgent need to keep the Divinity School fit for the task it is expected to perform in training young men for spiritual leadership. With $1,000,000 it will be possible to erect St. Andrew's Chapel at the northwest corner of Forty-second and Spruce Streets, the dormitory building, the deanery, the power plant and faculty houses. This will be the next step in the building program of the school, which now owns the property bounded by Forty-second and Forty-third, Spruce and Locust Streets. Only one building, the library, has been completed.

Presentation of the Lenten Offering.

Delegations from nearly two hundred Sunday Schools in the Diocese Sunday afternoon, May 18, took part in the presentation of the annual diocesan Lenten offering for missions in Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia. Bishop Garland presided at the service, and Bishop Gallor, President of the National Council, delivered the address.

The Lenten offering for missions had its origin in the Diocese of Pennsylvania many years ago and the Diocese has always led all others in the total of contributions.

George W. Jacobs, treasurer of the offering, announced the total and the standing of each Sunday School after the service. The total was a little over $64,000.

Joseph B. Van Dusen, Jr., a vestryman of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, and for many years the accounting warden, died at home in West Philadelphia May 16. For the past thirty years Mr. Van Dusen was actively interested and gave his personal attention to all betterment and philanthropic projects. Up to the time of his death he served as treasurer of the Burd School, an institution of St. Stephen's Parish. He was particularly interested in the orphans there and children were the recipients of much of his attention.

An Inspiring Open Air Service.

A great and impressive service was held in the Cathedral open-air amphitheatre on Sunday afternoon, May 18. This service was designated as one especially for those who have been the absent congregation of the Sunday afternoon services in the Bethlehem Chapel, which have been broadcasted by radio all through the year, and who might now become a present congregation. Many thousands of people attended this service and by means of amplifiers, every one at the greatest distance was able to hear and participate. All details were carefully planned by the committee on arrangements, which was as follows: The Rev. Messrs. C. T. Warner, Enoch M. Thompson, E. S. Dunlap, John S. Moses, William H. Ness; transportation, Merritt O. Chance; music, Edgar Priest; grounds, Thomas W. McKnew; publicity, Oliver Hogen.

A committee of sixty members of Congress, with Representative MacLafferty of California as chairman, acted as ushers at this service, and a point of interest brought out by Bishop Freeman was the fact that the suggestion and request for this service came from members of Congress.

An important feature of the service was the presentation to the Cathedral of a National Service Flag of the Episcopal Church, representing by its blue stars the one hundred and five thousand men and women of the Episcopal Church who served their country in the World War and by a gold star those who made the supreme sacrifice. These records were compiled and verified by the general order of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the flag was the gift of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to the Cathedral. The presentation was made by the Hon. George Wharton Pepper of the United States Senate, and on behalf of the Cathedral the flag was accepted by Gen. John L. Hines, deputy chief of staff of the War Department. Following this the Bishop of Washington addressed in his inspiring way the congregation.

The singing was led by the Cathedral choir, other male choirs of the city and the Army Band, all under the direction of Edgar Priest, Cathedral Organist. Besides the choirs there were in the procession the Cathedral Chapter, the clergy, chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and Bishops Kin-solving of Brazil and Freeman of Washington.

Church Normal School.

The Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee and the Rev. Charles T. Wright arranged a Church Normal School in Knoxville, Johnson City, Chattanooga, Nashville and Memphis. Six monthly meetings are being held, beginning January and ending in June. The series is proving a great success. The aim has been to give officers, teachers, and parents of the Church School training and inspiration.

Y. P. S. L. Activities.

The Y. P. S. L. in the three convocations of Tennessee have become active. Convocational meetings were held at the Cathedral, Memphis, and at the Advent, Nashville, on May 10 and 11.

Columbia Institute.

The eighty-ninth commencement of Columbia Institute, under Mrs. Ernest Cruikshank, completed its year with commencement May 25-27. Under the present efficient management, this school bids fair to regain its former leadership in the South. The past year has shown marked improvement.

St. John's Church, Knoxville.

In St. John's Church, Knoxville, the Rev. Walter C. Whitaker, D. D., rector, an Every Member Canvass was conducted on the First Sunday after Easter. The financial result was an increase of considerably more than four thousand dollars in subscriptions.

The rector baptized thirty children on Easter Day.

The large use of a parish house was recently shown in this parish when by actual count it was developed that from eight hundred to one thousand persons attend the meetings of various organizations and classes every week in St. John's parish house.

The Young People's Service League now has an enrollment of forty-five active members. Attendance in the most inclement weather is close to the full enrollment, falling below thirty only once, and that when a number of the members were absent at the Convocational Conference.

The Church Orphanage is now caring for fifty children.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Convention.

For the second year the annual Convention of the Diocese of Georgia assembled on Sunday, this year, on May 4, at the evening service in St. Paul's Church, Savannah, the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, rector. The combined choirs of the host parish, Christ Church and St. John's Church, rendered the music, and, after a short service conducted by the Bishop, addresses were made by the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, vice-chairman of the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Service; the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, vice-chairman of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, and Dr. B. F. Finney, vice-chancellor of the University of the South. Monday morning, at a Celebration of the Holy Communion for the Convention delegates and the Woman's Auxiliary, the Bishop read his annual address. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Claud M. Hobart and the Gospel by the Rev. J. W. Fulford. The Bishop was the celebrant, assisted by the rector of the parish.

In alluding to a warless world and the numerous peace propagandists, who by their suggestions are endeavoring to produce extreme pacifists; Bishop Reese said: "One hesitates to turn down any statement which expresses the hostility to war and the desire to promote universal peace. But it certainly cannot be the duty of any good citizen to obligate himself in advance to disloyalty under any circumstances under which his country may find itself in some unforeseen emergency to be forced into a war of defense."

Bishop Reese spoke at length on the Historic Creeds and the present issue in the Church, which he said is as old as Christianity, and much older. "I beg you to stand fast in the Faith," said the Bishop, "without wavering and without fear. Let us be patient and let this storm spend itself as it will and as similar storms have spent themselves in the past. We must be, however, reasonable, without violent dogmatism and above all without uncharitable feelings or language towards those whom we reverently believe to be in error. Let nothing be said or done in strife or vain glory, but let all be courteous, and remember that "the greatest of these is love." Judge not that we be not judged. Negations and denials prove nothing. The world is not won by them. The earnest, humble spirit, expressing its convictions with positiveness, but without anger, and in a life of loving fidelity to truth and of manifest growth in holiness will ultimately prevail. For God is able to maintain His Truth through us and in us without our frantic and passionate warfare of words."

On Monday evening, a united service was held again in St. Paul's Church, and the speakers were the Rev. W. M. Milton, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., who presented the fall plans of the Field Department for the Church's Program, and the Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, Missionary to Liberia. At the business sessions resolutions were passed endorsing the plans of the National Executive Committee for the Japan Reconstruction Fund and on that part of the Bishop's address dealing with peace and war, one endorsing a bill before the State Legislature to provide a public defender for prisoners awaiting trial who are unable to employ counsel, and memorials were drafted on the three priests who have passed away during the year, the Rev. W. T. Dakin, the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, and the Rev. P. M. Prowell-Carrington (Colored). The invitation to hold the next Convention in St. Paul's Church, Albany, was accepted. Mr. W. K. Miller was reelected Chancellor and Rev. J. B. Lawrence was reelected Registrar and Secretary. The members of the Standing Committee are the Rev. Messrs. J. B. Lawrence, S. B. McGlohon, David Cady Wright, H. Hobart Barber and Messrs. J. Randolph Anderson, George T. Cann, Thomas Purse and A. B. Moore. The delegates to the Provincial Synod elected are the Rev. Messrs. John Moore Walker, D. C. Wright, W. A. Jonnard, D. Watson Winn, Robb White, Jr., and J. D. Miller and Messrs. W. K. Miller, John D. Twiggs, R. C. Balfour, A. B. Moore, R. Y. Smith and P. F. Gould. The members of the Executive Council were reelected, and the Rev. W. A. Jonnard was elected to take the place of the late Rev. W. T. Dakin.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Convocation Activities.

Alabama has considerable variation in its Convocational organization.

By Canon adopted last January the five former were reduced to three, and each has organized since that time, taking advantage of the latitude allowed by the Canon.

Mobile Convocation admits women delegates. They elected the Rev. J. F. Plummer, Toulminville, Mobile, Dean and Mrs. Paul T. Tate Secretary and Treasurer. Mr. Plummer had served for many years as Dean, under the appointment of the Bishop.

Montgomery Convocation does not admit women delegates, but elected laymen to all offices. Mr. Algernon Blair of Montgomery was chosen as presiding officer of Convocation.

Birmingham Convocation elected the Rev. M. S. Barnwell, Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Dean. The Rev. J. M. Stoney, Grace Church, Anniston, Sub-Dean. The Rev. T. G. Mundy, Albany, Secretary-Treasurer.

Each Convocation arranged for a fall meeting along good old-fashioned convocational lines, including public devotional services, inspirational preaching and at their business sessions discussions of more or less technical matters related to Church work.

The Montgomery Convocation will meet at Auburn, where the Church is doing good work for the students of the Alabama Polytechnic Institution at the time of the laying of the cornerstone of the new building about to be started there.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor
Rt. Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

A Significant Convention.

Not in its entire history has the Diocese of North Carolina held a more interesting or significant convention than that of May 13 and 14 in St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem. Bishop Joseph Blunt Cheshire, whose thirtieth anniversary was celebrated at this convention, presided, and Bishop Penick and Bishop Delaney were also present.

Plans were made for a campaign for $150,000 for Thompson Orphanage, for more definite rural work, for a student secretary at the State University at Chapel Hill, for a summer assembly grounds in the mountains of North Carolina, and for the general strengthening of the work of the Church throughout the Diocese.

The plan of having a diocesan executive council, corresponding with the national Church organization was adopted and the first council will be composed of the following members, elected at this convention: the Bishops, the Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire and the Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, and the Rev. Messrs. R. E. Gribben, R. B. Owens, I. W. Hughes; Messrs. W. H. Ruffin, James H. Webb, J. H. Cutter; Mesdames T. W. Bickett, Miss Emma Hall and Mrs. D. H. Blair.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod, which meets in October in Wilmington, N. C., were elected as follows: the Rev. Messrs. William J. Gordon, Spray; Thomas S. Opie, Burlington; Warren W. Way, Raleigh; William H. Harding, Salisbury; Lewis N. Taylor, Roanoke Rapids, and A. S. Lawrence, Chapel Hill; lay delegates, William A. Erwin, Jr., Duke; J. R. Wilkes, Charlotte; S. S. Nash, Tarboro; Erwin Holt, Burlington; Wade R. Brown, Greensboro, and Harry T. Adams, Raleigh.

In giving a brief sketch of his thirty years' administration in the Diocese, Bishop Cheshire spoke first of the mission work in the Western part of the State, and how the Diocese of North Carolina got hold of one, the Rev. Milner Jones, who did more in the mountainous section of the State than probably any other man who has ever been in that section.

He then spoke of the work in connection with buying and developing St. Mary's School in Raleigh. It was offered in 1894 for $50,000. At that time the parish had $10,000. The Bishop himself canvassed the State and succeeded in raising $4,000. With this $14,000 the school was bought. The Diocese of East Carolina and of South Carolina came to the aid of the local diocese, and now the school is one of the best in the country and is valued at around $150,000.

The Thompson orphanage was the next acquisition and he told of the development of that institution from nothing to its present place of prominence. St. Augustus School for the Colored in Raleigh was another. In 1894 this school had seventy-four students and now it has five hundred and seventy.

Taking hospital work as the next phase in which the Diocese has worked outside of the Church, he spoke of the hospital of St. Peter's in Charlotte; also the Good Samaritan Hospital for the Colored people established largely through the efforts of Mrs. Wilkes and then of the General Hospital for Colored in Raleigh in connection with St. Augustine's School.

He spoke of the growth in mission work. He declared that in 1894 he asked for $5,000 for mission work, as only about $1,500 was then being given. Last year the Diocese gave $36,000. In talking up another line of the work, he declared that the Diocese of North Carolina aided by other denominations in the State was largely responsible for repealing of the divorce law that had been a curse to the state.

The Thirtieth Anniversary of Bishop Cheshire's consecration was fittingly observed. The scene was a deeply affecting one when Dr. R. H. Harris, a physician, who has been a life-long friend of the Bishop, presented him with a large purse, made up by friends of the Bishop throughout the Diocese. This was a complete surprise to Bishop Cheshire, who was overcome with emotion.

The services of Bishop Cheshire to the Episcopal Church in North Carolina date back to April 21, 1878, when he began his ministry in the Chapel of the Cross at Chapel Hill as a deacon. On May 30, 1880, he was ordained to the priesthood in old St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem. He served as rector at Chapel Hill until 1881, going from there to St. Peter's Church, Charlotte, where he remained until 1893, when he was consecrated Bishop-Coadjutor to Bishop Lyman of the Diocese of North Carolina. By the death of Bishop Lyman, December 13, 1893, he became Bishop of the Diocese, and has since administered the duties of his office from the city of Raleigh.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

A Busy Week in Pittsburgh.

The first week in May was a very busy one in Church matters in the Diocese. The Rev. Dr. Howell, Diocesan Chairman of the Japan Reconstruction Fund, is pushing that Fund with great zeal and enthusiasm, and, on Tuesday, May 6, a luncheon and a dinner were given in furtherance of the campaign. The luncheon was for specially invited guests, and was held at the William Penn Hotel; and the dinner was for the clergy of the diocese and the key men of the parishes, and took place at the Fort Pitt Hotel. The guests of honor and special speakers on both occasions were the Rt. Rev. Charles Reifsnider, D. D., Bishop Suffragan of the Diocese of Tokyo, and Mr. William Cooper Procter, Chairman of the Executive Committee, into whose hands the National Council has given the carrying out of the project.

On Wednesday evening, May 7, the Laymen's Missionary League gave a dinner at St. Peter's Parish House, Pittsburgh, to mark the seventy-fifth birthday of the President of the League, Mr. Nathan P. Hyndman, who has for thirty years been President of the Association. Bishop Mann presided. A handsome Prayer Book and Hymnal were given to Mr. Hyndman, on the inside of the front covers of which there was an inscription, signed by the various members of the League. Mr. Hyndman responded in a very happy manner, and the evening was pleasantly spent in reminiscences of the work of the Society.

The Third Ingathering of the United Thank Offering of 1925 took place on Thursday, May 8, at the St. James' Memorial Church, Pittsburgh, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., at ten o'clock. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. L. Norman Tucker, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, Ontario. The offering amounted to almost twenty-three hundred dollars, with several parishes still to be heard from. There was a large and widely representative attendance of the women of the Diocese. At the close of the service a short business meeting was held, following which the Rev. Franklin J. Clark, of the Church Missions House, made a stirring appeal in behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund. Luncheon was served to all present by the Auxiliary of St. James' Church. In the afternoon, the Pageantry Department of the Diocesan Auxiliary presented a pageant, "The Brightness of His Rising," those participating being drawn from various parishes in the city and suburbs. On request, the pageant is to be repeated on the three remaining Sunday evenings of May, in Calvary, Trinity and Ascension Churches, to aid in bringing before the attention of Church people the matter of the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

Calvary Parish, Pittsburgh, has lost one of its oldest members, in the death of Mrs. S. Jarvis Adams, who entered into rest on May 7. Until her increasing years debarred her from active work, Mrs. Adams was much interested and occupied with Church and philanthropic work. She is survived by one daughter and two sons, Mrs. Garner, of Los Angeles, California, and Messrs. Marcelling C. and S. Jarvis Adams, Jr., of Pittsburgh. The funeral took place from Calvary Church, on Friday afternoon, May 9, Bishop Mann and the clergy of the parish officiating.

Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop

Annual Convention Held in Salisbury.

The fifty-sixth annual Convention of the Diocese of Easton was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 6 and 7 in St. Peter's Church, Salisbury. The convention was opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., was the celebrant and delivered his annual address. Immediately after the appointment of committees the report on the State of the Church was presented, showing a great material and spiritual increase throughout the Diocese. By a resolution the six months' residence required of new clergy was set aside, and five rectors who had just entered upon their clerical duties were admitted to seats and a vote in Convention, the Rev. Irving A. McGrew, of Denton; the Rev. William McClelland, of East New Market; the Rev. Roy Rolfe Gilson, of Berlin; the Rev. Robert W. Lewis, of Shrewsbury, and the Rev. Mr. King, of Toronto, now located at Crisfield.

Several parishes requested the right of women to vote in the election of vestries and to hold office, but as their requests were not presented in proper form, all were rejected, except Stevensville, whose form of request was approved.

On Monday evening prior to the opening of Convention, the Men's Club of St. Peter's gave a dinner to the Men's Clubs of the Diocese, at which the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., was the principal speaker. He was followed by the Rev. William McClelland and the Rev. Roy Rolfe Gilson. A Committee was appointed by the Bishop to consider the organization of a Diocesan Club.

Conferences for women were held during the meetings of the Convention and two mass meetings, one on Religious Education, led by the Rev. Dr. Gardiner of New York, and the other on Social Service.

A motion was presented by the Committee on Canons to increase the number of delegates from each parish according to its financial increase, but the motion was not carried. Delegates to the Provincial Synod were elected, and the Standing Committee was reelected without any change. The Examining Chaplains will recommend for elevation to the Priesthood the Rev. James Archbold Mitchell, and for ordination to the diaconate Mr. David L. Quinn and Edward Felix Kloman.

At the close of Convention a pilgrimage was made to old Spring Hill Church, one of the historic churches of Easton, where the delegates listened to an interesting historical address by the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, of Washington, author of "Religion and the Barons of Baltimore."

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Bishop.

A New Summer School.

Still another summer school is going to be started this year. St. Mary's College, Dallas, Texas, offers an ideal spot for a Diocesan Summer School, and this year one will be held there from June 8 to June 14. An attempt was made to have such a school last year, but it was not found possible to carry it through. This year all arrangements have been made and it is expected that there will be a representative attendance.

The Rev. Bertram L. Smith, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese, is in charge, and an able faculty has been secured, including Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, of the Department of Religious Education, Mrs. D. D. Taber, of the Woman's Auxiliary, Dean Chalmers, Mr. Carl Wiesemann, and others.

In connection with the summer school, the rapidly increasing young people's groups will hold their first gathering of a Diocesan character.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

St. James' Church, Greenville, Consecrated.

On the morning of April 27, the First Sunday after Easter, St. James' Church, Greenville, was consecrated to the glory of God and in loving memory of Eliza Powell, for many years a worker and teacher and who gave to the church the lot on which it stands, the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., officiating. The church has an interesting history. Founded in 1900, by the present rector, the Rev. A. R. Mitchell, then rector of Christ Church, the church was named after the first mission of the Episcopal Church in Greenville, organized by the Rev. Rudolph Dickerson in the old Record building in 1820. The cornerstone of the present building was laid on St. James' Day, 1914, and the Church was formally opened in January, 1915. Practically all of the furnishings are memorials or gifts. The Church Art Commission of the Episcopal Church has recently written Bishop Finlay asking for photographs of the most beautiful large church and the most beautiful small church in his diocese. Trinity Church, Columbia, is considered the most beautiful large church, and St. James' the most beautiful small church. It is built of rough uncut granite, just as it left the quarry. In the interior there is no wainscoting or plaster, the irregular stones forming the walls. The ceiling and the heavy Gothic beams that support the roof are a dark mission which contrasts excellently with the restful grey of the stones. The electric lights are concealed in heavy oak lanterns suspended behind the arched trusses of the roof. The altar, pulpit and reading desk, as well as the Bishop's chair, are of heavy carved oak, in coloring matching the pews, which are severely mission in design. Everything about the building is heavy and substantial and in perfect keeping with massive stones of the walls. In addition to the tablet erected to the memory of Miss Powell, another tablet bears the following inscription: "In loving appreciation of Henry C. Markley, whose generosity made this building possible."

Shepherd's Sabbath Song.

(From Uhland.)

Frederick Herbert Adler.

The Lord's Day now is here!

I am alone in earth's broad bounds,
Just one more bell to matins sounds,
Now silence far and near.

In prayer I bend my knee.

O dulcet awe! Strange, scarce-felt gust!
As if here many kneeled in trust,
Unseen and prayed with me.

All Heaven, far and near,

Now gleams so clear and festive bright,
As if it would reveal God's sight.
The Lord's Day now is here!

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Our Lord's Prophecy Concerning Jerusalem.

The Rev. Dr. Louis Tucker.

After the destruction of Jerusalem came first the emancipation and later the Roman triumph of Christianity. After the destruction of the Roman Empire came modern Christendom. After the preaching over the whole earth comes the time when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Each destruction makes way for a better thing, Apostolic Christians expected the Second Coming in the lifetime of men then living. They were disappointed. Christians of the year one thousand expected the Second Coming in a few years. They were disappointed. When the gospel has been proclaimed among all nations, literally all, shall we see the Lord in person? We think we shall.

Uppermost in Our Lord's mind was the thought of persecution as connected with preaching, for He continued: "But when they shall lead you and deliver you up, settle it therefore in your hearts not to take thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye. For I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost."

A man in immediate danger of death for Christ's sake is given inspiration from Christ through the Holy Ghost, which His adversaries cannot resist. This is large doctrine and ample; but we submit that it does not include the post-apostolic deduction of martyrs' rescripts. A letter from a martyr, written just before his death and forgiving some other Christian for denying Christ is not inspired. The letter does not deal with those subjects on which inspiration was promised.

Our Lord continues concerning betrayal. The carnival of treachery depicted is no over-statement. The hatred for "The Name's sake" is literally fulfilled in every riot against "Christians." The prediction of death joined with the promise that "There shall not an hair of your head perish," is casual statement of immortality more powerful than many pages of oratory.

Our Lord deals with matters which rabbinical apocalyptic literature proffered as signs of the end of the age—wars, famines, false Christs, earthquakes and persecutions—and warns against taking them as signs. The one true sign is, The preaching of the gospel in every nation. Then He deals with the answers of martyrs, the prevalence of treachery, the rise of heresies (false prophets), the waning of religious fervor because of iniquity—in-equity, injustice in religious life as well as private vice. These are not signs of the end for "He that shall endure to the end the same shall be saved." To the one true sign Our Lord returns it is the preaching of the gospel in all the world for a witness to all nations.

Telling false signs is for warning. Giving signs of progress is to prevent destruction of corporate faith, aghast at religious history. All nations are to hear but not to heed the gospel of the kingdom. We catch the idea of a world-wide evangel, nowhere thorough. Plenty of places may be overlooked; but all nations shall hear and shall know enough to accept if they choose. The world meant one thing to the Hebrew, another to the Roman, a third to us. There have thus been three great eras when the end was expected; A. D. 60 to 90 when the Hebrew world had been evangelized, hearing and rejecting the word; A. D. 900 to 1000, when all nations known to mediaeval Christendom had heard and accepted or rejected the word; and a third, which is upon us now. There cannot well be a fourth, for lack of unknown nations. When we have evangelized our world it would seem the end must come.

Next, Our Lord took up the destruction of Jerusalem. His curiously particularized and itemized directions as to suddenness of flight would be dismissed by most as Oriental hyperbole if Josephus had not written. As it is, we know that they are common sense. Comment wrangles as to the abomination of desolation; though, seeing that the Temple was used as a fort by John of Gischala, there seems to us scant need to seek further. The sign of Jerusalem compassed with armies was sufficient. By acting upon it the Christians of Jerusalem were saved. The remark as to vengeance goes counter to the easy-going trend of Christian thought. We know so well that vengeance is wrong for us that we infer that it is wrong for God. This is error. Absolute Vengeance and absolute Justice are one. Our poor weak fallible, unjust and unequal human revenge is wrong, God's Vengeance and God's Justice are one and are right.

Reference to the "Times of the Gentiles" is reference to the Book of Daniel. Modern critical schools repudiate Daniel. But the book existed in Our Lord's time, contained a certain prophecy and Our Lord refers to that prophecy, thus validating it. What, then, were the Times of the Gentiles?

In the Book of Daniel we find certain definite chronological eras given in terms of days. Comment agrees that days may mean years. It disagrees as to everything else except that, on the year-day scale the coming of Messiah the Prince and the destruction of Jerusalem seem predicted with accuracy; about half the comment seems bewildered at this. On the same year-day scale the book predicts an interval of three times and a half, doubled, or seven times in all, with some special event in the middle, as the period Gentiles shall dominate the world. A Time is a year of years; 360 in all, or 365 and one-fourth, according to taste. The Times of the Gentiles are, therefore, 2,520 years with certain epacts. An epact is the difference between one kind of year and another. For instance, the epact of the "Time" given above is five and one-fourth years. Various commentators contend for various years, lunar solar, and calendar, and so add various epacts. Two thousand five hundred and twenty calendar years is the time in which the moon returns exactly to the same place in the sky in relation to the sun. The Times of the Gentiles are 2,520 years, or 2,580 years, or 2,670 years, according to the epact added, as one chooses lunar calendar, or astronomical years to calculate by. The ambiguity is intentional. See Mark 13:32. Uncertainty is added by our ignorance of what event the book calculates from. It may be the captivity of the ten tribes, the captivity of Judah, or some date in the life of Daniel. Commentators wrangle into inextricable disagreement. There are possibilities of discrepancy of about one hundred and fifty years. Counting from the captivity of the Ten Tribes and assigning the shortest period the times of the Gentiles expired just before the French Revolution. Counting from the approximate date of the death of Daniel, as estimated by Devotional Commentators who believe there was such a man, and adding all the epacts, the Times of the Gentiles will end about 1940 or 1950. As Our Lord referred to the book and the book existed in His time, it makes no difference in our inquiry as to His meaning whether Daniel wrote the book or even lived at all. A prediction was current in the Jewish world assigning a certain duration to a political situation. Christ endorsed the prediction. That is all we need to know. Knowledge of the exact meaning of the prediction is best gained from study of the Book of Daniel.

Interesting Your Children in Books.

The other day Aunt Emmy Lou and I made a call at Hildegarde's. We found her sitting cross-legged on the floor with her nine-year-old son, Jim.

Beside them lay an open book, a pile of dried moss, stones, some small branches, crayons, a few Indian arrow-heads, and some sheets of heavy manilla paper.

"What in the world—?" we exclaimed in one breath.

"We are making scenes from White's 'Boy's Life Of Daniel Boone,'" Hildegard explained, after Jim had left.

We looked amazed; I suppose, for Hildegard continued, "As a child I learned to detest books and reading of all kinds. I came from a home where the reading of a book was a solemn rite, performed with a solemn countenance. Mother and Father never seemed to have time to discuss any of the books we read; they simply handed them to us from dusty library shelves with a 'Here's a book that will teach you many things you should know, so run along and absorb its contents.' I would run along, all right, but often I hid the book under a rock.

"When Jim was a little chap I made up my mind he should love his reading. His father and I often read the book he reads, so we can discuss it with him afterward. Sometimes we dramatize the scenes in a book together. If we have other books that will help him to understand more thoroughly the one he is reading, we leave them lying on the library table, where they will be sure to catch his eye."

"Well, my dear, you are wise," Aunt Emmy Lou approved, "and you also seem to have made a study of keeping Jimmy interested in the right kind of books."

"Indeed we have," Jimmy's mother smiled back. "His teacher tells us he is the best posted boy in the school."

Aunt Emmy Lou and I went away thinking what a wise little mother Hildegard was and wondering why we didn't all try so good a plan.

Why don't we, I wonder? Aren't books, after all, the real foundation of education? Don't we all know wonderfully brilliant people who are not college or even high school graduates? Ask any of them to what they attribute their success, and they will answer, "My education came from books."

Books! There are thousands of them available to all of us. Teach your children to love them.—Helen G. Green.

Blind.

The Spring blew trumpets of color;
Her Green sang in my brain—
I heard a blind man groping
"Tap—tap" with his cane;
I pitied him in his blindness;
But can I boast, "I see"?
Perhaps there walks a spirit
Close by, who pities me,—
A spirit who hears me tapping
The five-sensed cane of mind
Amid such unguessed glories—
That I am worse than blind.

When the Day Is Done.

To those who mourn the loss of loved ones there may be comfort and consolation in the recent experience of Dr. C—, pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia.

His wife lay dying for weeks. Throughout this ordeal he had to carry on the work of an exacting pastorate. When the end was clearly visible and from the depths of the Valley of the Shadow, he still felt impelled to write his weekly letter for his church bulletin. The result was the following, which has a message as widespread as humanity:

"I am writing the Pastor's Corner this week under conditions that are entirely new and strange; they might be called overwhelming. Billows from out the unknown sea follow each other over the soul and break on an unstable shore-line. I am sitting by the bedside of my dear wife as the midnight hour passes; an hour that pulls so hard on the frail spirits of those long sick. She has had a strong and cheerful spirit during the fourteen terrible but precious months, but the odds were against her. She has talked quietly of the time when the evening bell would call her in from the fields of service. There has been no complaint against life and no bemoaning her condition. Not that; but a willingness to accept what was in store in quiet confidence. Last week she asked me to tell the officers and teachers to 'go on; go.' Only today, in a brief moment of consciousness, she said, 'Don't cry! I don't want you to cry.'

So we are watching as the sand in the hour-glass runs out. And I am realizing that there is nothing exceptional in this room or in my experience. In our own church family just now others have watched and waited. I have been thinking tonight of the Gospel which I have preached; it has passed under review in the subdued, but penetrating light of this midnight hour. There has come to me a demonstration of the Gospel in this hour of conclusions. Any ship can sail a quiet ocean; any plan of life will work measurably when there is youth and health and sunshine. But the Gospel works at midnight when the last grains of sand are slipping through; or when the billows are mountainous. It is a wonderful plan to live by. And it fails not when the day is done and the light fades out of the sky and familiar forms become indistinct and implements fall from tired hands.

And that Scripture came to mind: 'My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning!' How strong is that desire for morning in the watcher, the sufferer, the lost traveler! The Psalmist seems to have paused to review what he had written, realizing how strong it was; and then he seems to say, 'Yes, it is true! I long for God more than the watcher longs for the morning.' So at this midnight we turn our faces to the morning and to the Day Star and to God."

A Real Hero's Support.

When Livingstone returned to Scotland, after an absence of sixteen years in Africa, the University of Glasgow conferred an honorary degree upon him. At such times the students usually had some boyish fun at the expense of the one receiving the degree. But when Livingstone appeared he was received with silent respect and reverence. He was weary and gaunt from severe exposure to twenty-seven attacks of African fever. The arm made useless by the bite of a lion hung helpless at his side. He was a real hero who had fought many battles for mankind, and his presence inspired a feeling of awe in the minds of all present. He told them he was going back to Africa partly to suppress the slave traffic, and partly to open the way for the preaching of the gospel. But every heart was stirred, and tears came to every eye when he said, "Shall I tell you what supported me all the years of exile among a people whose language I could not understand, and whose attitude towards me was always uncertain and often hostile? It was this, 'Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world.'"

Religion in a School.

Not long ago, I met one of our great school-masters—a veteran in that high service. "Where in your time-table do you teach religion?" I asked him. "We teach it all day long," he answered. "We teach it in arithmetic, by accuracy. We teach it in language, by learning to say what we mean—'yea, yea, and nay, nay.' We teach it in history, by humanity. We teach it in geography, by breadth of mind. We teach it in handicraft, by thoroughness. We teach it in astronomy, by reverence. We teach it in the playground, by fair play. We teach it by kindness to animals, by courtesy to servants, by good manners to one another, and by truthfulness in all things. We teach it by showing the children that we, their elders, are their friends and not their enemies." "But what," I said, "about the different denominations? Have you no trouble with the parents?" "None at all," he replied. "We have half a dozen denominations. But we treat the children, not as members of this Church or that, but as members of the school, and we show them that, as members of the school, in work and in play, they are members of one another. We teach them to build the Church of Christ out of the actual relations in which they stand to their teachers and their schoolfellows, because we believe that unless they learn to build it where they are they will not learn to build it afterwards anywhere else." "Do you talk much to them about religion?" I then asked. "Not much," he said, "just enough to bring the whole thing to a point now and then." Finally he added a remark that struck me—"I do not want religion," he said, "brought into this school from outside. What we have of it we grow ourselves."—From "A Living Universe," by Principal L. P. Jacks.

"He Refused to Quit."

On the campus of one of the large universities in the Middle West a monument has been set in honor of one of the students who died fighting in France. On it is this simple but appealing inscription: "He played on the scrub three years; he refused to quit."

Day after day the boy—Hanson was his name—went out and played with the "scrubs" to help the "varsity." Then came the summons to play a sterner game on the fields of France, and he took his place.

On the battlefield he exhibited the same fidelity as on the football field. One day his officer called for volunteers for a hazardous bit of scouting. Hanson went out with the party, but he never returned. And today that little inscription on the monument recalls to the hurrying students the story of a man who refused to quit.

"He refused to quit!" What finer tribute can be given to any man? When Jesus named for His disciples those qualities which He regarded as most essential in a Christian disciple He put at the head of the list steadfastness; and He closed His discourse with these solemn words that carry the same sense, "No man, having put his hand to the plough and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

A child of God under doubts and fears is like the earth in winter, its nights long, its days dark, good affections chilled, nothing done, nothing got, the hand sealed up. But comfort will return, the birds shall sing again and the flowers appear; arise, therefore, poor drooping soul and come away with thy beloved.—Matthew Henry.

For the Young Folks

The Boy Who Helps His Mother.

As I went down the street today,
I saw a little lad
Whose face was just the kind of face
To make a person glad.
I saw him busily at work,
While blithe as a blackbird's song
His merry, mellow whistle rang
The pleasant street along.

Just then a playmate came along,
And leaned across the gate,
A plan that promised lots of fun
And frolic to relate.
"The boys are waiting for us now,
So hurry up," he cried.
My little whistler shook his head,
And "Can't come," he replied.

"Can't come? Why not, I'd like to know What hinders?" asked the other.
"Why, don't you see," came the reply,
"I'm busy helping mother,
She's lots to do, and I so like
To help her all I can,
So I've no time for fun just now."
Said this dear little man.

"I like to hear you talk like that,"
I told the little lad;
"Help mother all you can and make Her kind heart light and glad."
It does me good to think of him,
And know that there are others
Who like this manly little boy,
Take hold and help their mothers.

Robin Redbreast and Bonny Bluebird.

Alice B. Joynes.

It had been a long, cold winter, with much snow and ice. The little birds had found it a difficult matter to keep warm and to find something to eat.

One morning, in late February, Robin Redbreast sat on the bare bough of a tree and looked out upon the world. It seemed to Robin that, in some way, this morning was a little different from any he had known for a long time. The ground did not look quite so cold and hard, and there seemed to be just a little warmth in the sunshine. So Robin thought to himself, "What does this mean? Can it be that spring is coming once more?" At the thought Robin's little heart gave a bound, and he cocked his head on one side, and looked about more eagerly with his bright black eyes. He did really believe that was it, and he gave a "cheer-up! cheerup!" of delight at the very thought of such a thing. Springtime, warm sunshine, plenty of fat worms to eat, how wonderful that would be! Then he gave a few little hops from branch to branch, fluttered his wings, and twittered quite lustily.

Hark! What was that he heard? There it was again, a little "tweet, tweet!" not far away. Could it be Bonny Bluebird coming back? So Robin called out more gaily than before, "cheerily-cheerup! cheerily-cheerup!" Then he stopped and listened.

"Tweet, tweet, tweet!" it came again, and there, sure enough, was Bonny Bluebird herself, sitting on a tree not far away! Off flew Robin from his tree in a hurry, and perched on the other tree near Bonny Bluebird. Then what a twittering and chirping the two friends kept up for a while, telling each other about the hard times they had had during the long winter months, and how glad they were that it felt a wee bit like spring again. They wondered when Jenny Wren would appear, and why Cardinal Redcap, who generally came so early, was nowhere to be seen. What a good time they had together!

But presently the sky clouded over and a chilly wind sprang up. Then how frightened were our two little friends, lest there should be more snow!

They bade each other a hurried goodbye, promising to meet again on that same tree the very next sunshiny day. Then away they flew in opposite directions, very much cheered by the friendly chat they had had, and quite sure that spring was really near.

When Grandmother Forgot.

Patty and her mother spent summer vacations on grandfather's farm. There was a big shady lawn with flowers and swings; there were baby chickens and ducks and calves, kittens and puppies, but what delighted Patty most was the playhouse that grandfather had built for her in the corner of the big lawn where the lilacs and snowballs grew.

There were white ruffled curtains at the window of the playhouse, and the door had a real lock. From the farmhouse attic grandfather had carried out to the playhouse all the little furniture that had once been mother's—a table and chairs and a doll's dresser. He put up shelves, on which she had kept the little gold-banded tea set. Patty made new clothes for Belinda, her mother's doll, and new sheets for the funny little wooden cradle in which Belinda slept.

Sometimes mother or grandmother could come to tea at the playhouse, but they were too busy to come every time Patty wanted company. So Patty was delighted when Marie came to spend the summer on her grandmother's farm, which was the next one down the road.

"Let's go to see Marie this evening, grandmother," coaxed Patty, "and Belinda and I will invite her to a tea party for tomorrow afternoon."

So they went, and, though Marie was a bit shy at first, Patty told her about the playhouse, and they were soon friends.

"Come early tomorrow afternoon," said Patty, and Marie promised to come at half past two o'clock and bring her doll.

What fun it was to get ready for Marie's visit! Patty swept the floor of the playhouse and dusted the furniture!

"I think I'll wash your sheets this morning, Belinda, and your pink gingham dress," she said.

Belinda just kept on smiling; she knew that Patty had washed them the day before. It was such fun to put water in the toy tub and rub things on the little washboard!

So Patty fastened one end of a stout cord to a snowball bush and the other end to a lilac bush, and soon not only the sheets and the pink gingham dress but most of Belinda's clothes were pinned to the stout cord with cunning little clothes pins.

"I'll just leave them up for Marie to see," Patty told Belinda, "they look so pretty!"

She carried the table out and covered it with a paper napkin that had a border of roses. Then she set the table, and in the centre of it she placed a little blue vase with one red rose in it.

Grandmother brought out some tiny sandwiches and a little frosted cake and some berries and lemonade.

Patty, who had run down the road to see whether Marie was in sight, hurried back just in time to drive away Squeedunk, the spotted black and white pig that always managed to get through the fence somewhere.

Then she heard footsteps, but it was not Marie. It was mother, so pale and unsmiling that Patty hardly knew her.

"Patty, darling," mother said, "a telegram just came saying that father is very sick; we must go home at once. If we hurry, we can take the train that leaves at half past two."

Patty hurried back to the house with mother. Delia, who helped with the work, was packing and soon Henry, the hired man, was taking them to the station. Grandmother and grandfather went too.

It was two weeks later that the doctors said that father would get well, and during that anxious time Patty had never once thought of Belinda and the tea table and the line of clothes left out to dry. Then one morning when grandfather and grandmother were going home Patty remembered.

"I left all my things outdoors, grandmother. Oh! I hope they're all right!" she said.

"I'll take them back to the attic," grandmother said. But when she got back there were so many things to do that she forgot.

The next June, Patty and her mother went back to the farm. It was raining so hard the afternoon they arrived that Patty couldn't go out to the playhouse, but she went up to the attic the very first thing. She looked about for Belinda, but the doll wasn't there. Neither was the wooden cradle nor the table nor anything.

"Grandmother," she called, "where are the things?"

"Why, dear," said grandmother, "aren't they there?"

"Can't you remember where you put them?" asked Patty anxiously.

"Why bless me, honey, I don't remember bringing them in! I must have forgotten. They've stayed out all winter."

"O grandmother, all through the snow and wind and rain, and maybe Squeedunk came! O dear, let's go right away to see. I left Belinda sitting in a chair by the table."

"Dear, grandmother is very sorry, but it's raining too hard, and it is too dark; we shall have to wait until morning."

Grandfather and Delia and Henry were just as sorry as grandmother.

"I should have thought about them, but there was so much to do," said Delia.

"Squeedunk hasn't been through the fence once this spring," said Henry, "and I saw some rabbits come from the lilacs last winter; maybe a rabbit family lived there through the cold and snow, and maybe the baby rabbits slept in the cradle."

"Rain and snow couldn't hurt Belinda's china head," said grandfather, but he looked anxious.

So Patty went to bed, and the rain pattered on the roof. The sun was shining when she awoke. She hurried down as fast as she could hurry, and grandmother and mother went with her to the playhouse.

The lilacs and the other bushes were as lovely as they had been last year. Mother, grandmother and Patty walked round one bush, and then stopped in astonishment. There, hanging from a stout cord, were two snowy sheets and all the other doll clothes! Not a thing was faded or torn. They walked round a bush, and there was the table all set just as Patty had left it: a rose-bordered napkin for a tablecloth and gold-banded dishes. A pink rose nodded from the blue vase in the center. There were tiny sandwiches and a little frosted cake and a dish of berries. Belinda was sitting in a chair by the table, as smiling and fresh as ever.

"Grandmother," Patty whispered, "do you suppose the fairies took care of them?"

Grandmother and mother looked round; they were as astonished and puzzled as Patty.

Then some one laughed, and from the playhouse door came Marie.

"Grandmother and I came that afternoon," Marie explained, "and Delia told us that you were called away. I wanted to see the playhouse, so grandmother and I came down here. Delia went to pick berries, and so we put everything into the playhouse and locked the door, and my grandmother forgot to give your grandmother the key and tell her about it. I thought it would be fun to surprise you this morning."

"Oh, it was; it was the loveliest surprise in the whole world!" cried Patty, and she danced about and hugged Belinda. "Half of the playhouse is yours now, and you must come every day."

"I brought my doll this morning," said Marie.—Jessie M. Lathrop, in Youth's Companion.

Being A Gentleman.

"Benny is a perfect gentleman," said grandma, who had come to visit at Charley's house from way out West.

Charley wondered why grandma had said that. Most everybody said he was a little gentleman, he stood so straight and tall, and his clothes were always so nicely made and carefully taken care of. But Benny wore clothes so long that they had to be mended, and he had just the least little bit of a limp when he walked.

"Benny is a gentleman," said grandma again the next day, and again Charley wondered. At last he made up his mind to find out what grandma meant.

"Grandma," he asked, "why do you call Benny a perfect little gentleman? He does not wear very nice clothes, and he does limp a little. You can see it, can't you, grandma?"

Grandma looked over her spectacles at Charley. Then she said quietly, "I called Benny a perfect gentleman, because when he came over here to play he was so kind and thoughtful. He played with you and enjoyed it, but when I lost my glasses and began to hunt for them he left off playing at once and helped me find them."

Charley opened his eyes. So that was being a gentleman. Nurse had never told him that.

"Then," said grandma, "the other day when Benny was over here to play with you, when Jack Coombs came over and wanted to tease little sister by pretending to hurt her doll, Benny quietly took the doll away from Jack and gave it back to her, then coaxed Jack away to play croquet."

"Why, grandma," said Charley, "I thought a gentleman was some one who dressed nicely and always looked well. Nurse says so."

"That is nurse's kind of gentleman," said grandma. "Now, my kind of a gentleman is one who has a heart and who lives by a rule you and I both learn about in church and Sunday school."

"Do you mean the Golden Rule?" asked Charley thoughtfully.

"Yes," answered grandma. "Any one who applies the Golden Rule, whether he wears fine clothing or is in rags, is a gentleman. Of course it is nice to be both kinds of a gentleman, one who is careful about his appearance and looks nicely, as well as having a kind heart. But if one cannot be both, which do you think is best?"

"I think the Golden Rule gentleman," said Charley. "I will be that kind, too, grandma."—Presbyterian Advance.

The Pharisees and Herodians.

Eugenie du Maurier.

At the time when Jesus lived on earth, Palestine was a part of the Roman Empire, somewhat as Alaska is now a part of the United States. The Herodians were those Jews who liked the Romans, and the Pharisees hated the Herodians; they thought they were traitors to their own country. The Herodians held the best places under the government, but the Pharisees held the highest places in the Jewish religion; though each hated the other, they were ready to unite against Jesus because Jesus taught that love and humility was the only right way. Hypocrites hate truth. A hypocrite is one who pretends to be better than he is. Sometimes he pretends to know more than he really does know.

The Pharisees were very careful to keep the Jewish law; the Herodians were more careful about the Roman law; they were sure that between them they would be able to entrap Jesus; they began by flattery, and then asked: "Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar or not?"

If He said "Yes," then He would be a traitor to the Jews; if He said "No," He would be a traitor to the government. In either case He would be ensnared. There are always people who are trying to make war between religion and government. But Jesus was Truth. And Truth is never afraid. It may suffer, it may seem to die; but forever and forever, it will rise again. They had told Him that He was truthful and not afraid, although they did not mean it, but they found that was just what He was. He told them that the Roman rule must be obeyed. That was the power that maintained order, that protected their persons, their property, their streets and cities. Money, the tribute to Caesar, was necessary for this. But above that law was the higher law which made them servants of God and fit to be citizens, not of Rome, nor of Palestine, but of Heaven. Before He gave that wonderful answer He showed them what hypocrites they were by trying to so place His answer that He must offend one or the other, but in all wisdom, in all justice, in all truth, came the great decision—"Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

IN MEMORIAM.

ELIZABETH WETMORE HOLMES, oldest daughter of Gen. Theophilus Hunter, and Laura Wetmore Holmes, was born near Fayetteville, N. C., on May 16, 1842; on March 30, 1871 she was married to Mr. William Harrison McPherson of Cumberland County, North Carolina; on April 5, 1924, she entered into eternal rest, at her home near Fayetteville, after six years of helplessness. She was a communicant of St. John's Episcopal Church Fayetteville, N. C.

"They shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

FRANCIS DEANE WILLIAMS.

Entered into rest at St. Luke's Hospital, on May 7, FRANCIS DEANE WILLIAMS, aged 63.

"Death, the old mystery dim; Midnight to us was morning to him."

For he had fought the good fight, he had kept the faith, he had finished his course, and henceforth there was laid up for him the crown promised to the faithful warrior who had "Climbed the steep ascent to Heaven, Thro' peril, toil and pain."

Of distinguished ancestry he revered the memory and was proud of the history and services of his grandfather, Judge Leigh, the friend of John Randolph and John Marshall, and of his grandfather's brother, the eminent jurist and probably the most outstanding figure of the famous Virginia Convention of 1829. He was one of the first to see the need of the Virginia Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association and to give it life, and its members have given their cordial testimony to "the fine spirit of a high adventure for humanity, with which he entered the crusade for the betterment of the farmers, whom he knew so well," and also to "his unstinted application to the carrying out of every obligation." No faint praise this from those who knew.

He was President of the Chamber of Commerce from 1908 to 1919, and always a prominent member thereof, his services in behalf of the development of James River being especially noteworthy. He was Director in the First National Bank of Richmond, his associates testifying that his advice and judgment were of great value there, and that he always "thought straight and fought fair." He was a member of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and an earnestly conservative Churchman; but his great personal faith and piety were known only to those who loved him best, enabling him to meet the tidings of the nearness of death not only with his life-long courage but with exceeding joy in the blessed assurance that he would meet his Pilot face to face when he had crossed the Bar.

His relaxation from the cares of strenuous business was found in books and in the congenial companionship of his cultured wife, who was the daughter of the late distinguished scholar and gentleman, Colonel Archer Anderson. She is left to mourn her irreparable loss, and to find comfort and support in her four lovely children, Mary Mason, Archer Anderson, Frances Leigh and Francis Deane Williams, Jr. May his memory and example be their inspiration and incentive to "carry on" his aims and ideals.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Convention of the Diocese.

At the celebration of the Holy Communion opening the one hundred and thirty-ninth session of the annual convention of the Diocese of Delaware, held in Christ Church, Dover, May 13 and 14, the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., delivered a charge in which he urged the duty of work rather than of controversy in the Church at this time.

The convention organized by the election of John S. Grohe as secretary and the appointment of the Rev. T. Getz Hill and E. L. Boyce as assistants.

Other elections resulted as follows: Standing Committee: the Rev. Messrs. C. W. Clash, R. W. Trapnell, B. F. Thompson, Messrs. A. Felix du Pont and William E. Valliant.

Trustee of the Diocese: William P. Orr, M. D.

Member of Committee on Canons: Hon. Richard S. Rodney.

Executive Council: the Rev. Messrs. T. Getz Hill, Alban Richey, D. D., B. F. Thompson, Messrs. George Elliott, Frederick Bringham and Judge Richard S. Rodney.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: the Rev. Messrs. R. W. Trapnell, Joseph H. Earp, Alban Richey, D. D., Robert Bell, Messrs. E. S. Hellings, Victory C. Records, Victor D. Handy and C. R. Miller; alternates, the Rev. Messrs. R. B. Mathews, D. D., F. M. Kirkus, D. D., E. A. Rich, L. L. Williams, Messrs. George Elliott, Samuel Elliott, Howard Seaman and Lewis Booker, M. D.

In the Bishop's address delivered separately from the charge, he advocated rotation in the offices of the diocese, as well as in vestries and Bishop's committees in missions. This recommendation, together with a further suggestion offered by the Rev. Dr. Richey that the holding of several offices by one person be discouraged, resulted in the appointment of a nominating committee to present names to the next convention after taking the above policies into consideration.

The Rev. R. W. Trapnell reported for the Department of Religious Education and Christian Social Service. The announcement of Mr. Trapnell that on account of the request of the field department of the National Council that he give a part of his time to the general work of the Church in addition to his duties as rector of the large parish of St. Andrew's, Wilmington, he could not allow his name to be presented as a candidate for reelection to the Executive Council, caused universal regret. Mr. Trapnell was active in the formation of the Council and has given faithful service to the work which is now to be done under two departments.

The report of the Department of Ways and Means was presented by its efficient chairman, the Rev. Frederick M. Kirkus, D. D.

The announcement, made by Joseph C. Ellis, that the heirs of the late Rev.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK.

to the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, with its offering of $1,055.69.

Trinity Church, Columbia, was awarded the banner for the largest attendance at the Church School service in proportion to distance traveled to the convention. Trinity was represented by seventy-seven delegates, who traveled more than a hundred miles to the convention.

Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education; the Rev. Frank A. Juhan, Associate Chairman and Director of Young People's Work, and Mrs. Frank N. Challen, of Greenville, Field Secretary for the Young People's Service League, have planned and worked systematically for many months for the success of this convention, and have been finely supported by members of the Young People's Service League and by the Church School forces of the Diocese in general. They are very grateful for the complete success of the first convention.

Diocesan Organization.

At the regular sessions of the convention a Diocesan organization was effected, a Constitution and By-Laws were adopted, officers were elected for the year and business of importance was transacted by the young people themselves. Miss Clelia Mathews, President of the League of the Church of the Advent, presided and handled the convention like a veteran.

The hospitality of the Church of the Advent and the people of Spartanburg is proverbial. This high reputation was maintained in every respect on this occasion. Besides the banquet on Friday lunch was served on Saturday to five hundred persons. The young people were royally entertained and showed an appreciation that made their entertainment a privilege and pleasure.

Special addresses were delivered by the Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rev. Ellwood Lindsay Haines, Missionary to Liberia, and by Miss June Taylor of Anderson, Volunteer for Life Service from Upper South Carolina.

The offering of the Corporate Communion amounting to $34 was given to Mr. Haines for his work in Liberia.

The following officers were elected for the Young People's Service League:

Miss Mary Bacot Prevost of Columbia, President.

Frank Woodruff of Columbia, Vice-President.

Miss Clelia Mathews of Spartanburg, Secretary.

Joseph Earle Trowbridge of Anderson, Treasurer.

Mrs. Frank N. Challen of Greenville, Executive Secretary.

These with Miss Daisy McGregor, of Columbia, and Miss Lloyd Pegues, of Greenville, members at large, constitute the Executive Committee.

Lewis W. Wells, former rector of St. Mark's Church, Millsboro, have presented to that parish the house used by the late rector as a rectory, together with its valuable furnishings, was received with a rising vote of thanks to the generous donors.

The convention dinner was held on May 13 at the Hotel Richardson. The rector of the parish, the Rev. B. F. Thompson, presented the Bishop as toastmaster, and addresses were made by the Rev. Edmund Lloyd Souder and Dr. Mary James, both of Wuchang, China, and Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast, of Philadelphia. Informal speeches were also made by Governor Denny, former Governor C. R. Miller and Mr. William E. Valliant. Pastors of local congregations in Dover were present as guests.

On Tuesday afternoon a pageant, directed by Mrs. Henry Ridgely, of Dover, under the auspices of the Church School Service League of the Diocese, of which Mrs. Philip Cook is president, was given in the Dover Opera House. Lantern views of the Church's work in China were shown by Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese held its annual meeting in connection with the Convention. There was a corporate communion, with presentation of the United Thank Offerings, and an address by the Bishop, in Christ Church, on Wednesday morning, and addresses were made by the Rev. E. L. Souder and Dr. Mary James at the session following. Mrs. Preston Lea, the new President of the Auxiliary, presided at the meeting.

Luncheons were served at the Century Club rooms and a tea was given at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ridgely, following the pageant. The parish and citizens of Dover were most hospitable as hosts of the Convention and Auxiliary.

The next meeting of the convention will be held as guests of St. Peter's Church, Lewes.

The Rev. John H. A. Bomberger, of Hay Market, Virginia, has been called to St. Philip's Church, Laurel, Delaware. Mr. Bomberger and his wife recently visited the parish, and it is hoped they will return.

The address of the Rev. E. N. Joyner is changed from Edgefield, S. C., to Edgemont, N. C.

The Rev. Eliot White has accepted a call to be senior curate at Grace Church, New York City, the Rev. Dr. W. R. Bowie, D. D., rector.

Mr. John W. Lethaby, General Field Secretary of the Society of the Nazarene, is resigning in order to prepare for Holy Orders and to devote himself to literary work. Mr. Lethaby will conduct evangelistic services in the territory south of Washington and has already accepted many invitations for Missions. During his work with the Society the number of Guilds registered has increased from twenty-four to one hundred and eight and a complete directory is ready for the press.

ORDINATIONS.

On Sunday, May 11, at St. John's Church, York, Pa., Carlton DeCastro Beal, was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, Ph. D., D. D., Bishop of the Diocese. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Alexander McMillan. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, rector of the parish. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Leroy F. Baker, and the Gospel by the newly ordained deacon, who also assisted in the administration of the Holy Communion. Mr. Beal will complete his course of study at the Philadelphia Divinity School.

In St. Andrew's Church, St. Andrew's, Tenn., on Wednesday, May 14, the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Tennessee, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. John Marvin Luke, formerly major, inspector general, United States Army, and for many years an officer in the regular army. During his diaconate, Major Luke was attached to the clergy staff of Christ Church, Chattanooga, and his presenter at Wednesday's ceremonies was the Rev. W. C. Robertson, rector of that parish.

The ordination sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Mercer P. Logan, formerly rector of St. Ann's, Nashville, and now dean of DuBose Memorial Church Training School, Monteagle. The call to the priesthood was read by the Rev. Louis Leroy, O. H. C., and the preface to the ordinal was read by the Rev. James R. Sharp, who acted as chaplain to Bishop Maxon.

A number of clergymen and visitors were present from Chattanooga, Nashville, Monteagle and Sewanee.

Immortality

Foiled by our fellow-men, depressed, outworn,
We leave the brutal world to take its way,
And, "Patience! in another life," we say,
"The world shall be thrust down, and we upborne."

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
The world's poor, routed leavings? or will they Who failed under the heat of this Life's day
Support the fervors of the heavenly morn?

No, No! the energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun;
And he who flagged not in the earthly strife,

From strength to strength advancing—only he
His soul well knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

—Matthew Arnold.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Belief is the acceptance of a chart. Faith is the taking the voyage."—Jowett.

"Courage! Courage! 'Tis never so far From a plodded path to a shining star."

Many a boy has turned out poorly because his father bore down too hard on the grindstone.

It does not take much of a man to be a Christian, but it takes all there is of him.—Huxley.

If in your hands a candle lit,
And you the holder be,
The people that in darkness sit
A sudden light may see

Whoever says, when clouds are in the sky, "Be patient, heart; light breaketh by and by" trusts the Most High.—Bulwer Lytton.

The most important work of a Christian minister is to live throughout the week that the people will feel that the things spoken of in church on Sundays are realities.—A. B. Davidson.

Our aim is not only to rescue souls from a wicked world, but to save the wreck itself, repair its broken spars, and send it on a happier voyage.—Dr. W. H. P. Faunce.

In very truth Christ is God, but what matters it to us, or through us to others, if while we call Him God we keep not His new commandment, willfully sinning against His supreme law, the law of Love?

The merest grass
Along the roadside where we pass,
Lichen and moss and sturdy weed,
Tell of His love Who sends the dew,
The rain and sunshine, too,
To nourish one small seed.

—Christina Rossetti.

Christ has made the world better than it was. Only Christ can make the world better than it is. Christ was the hope of the world before He came. The hope of the world is still in Christ and in those in whom the Christ Spirit dwells.—C. W. Fulton.

Every real and searching effort at self-improvement is, of itself, a lesson of profound humility. For we cannot move a step without learning and feeling the waywardness, the weakness, the vacillation of our movements, or without desiring to be set upon the Rock that is higher than ourselves.—Gladstone.

The Christian world today furnishes many evidences that the age of Schism is past. Reunion of the Churches, reconstruction of the Church, has become a haunting vision, one is fair to say an urgent necessity, throughout Christendom.—Prof. W. A. Curtis.

Each race has some special need of its own, of which it will find the full satisfaction in Him. Each, therefore, as it embraces Christianity, will bring out some new feature in His character which had previously been hardly realized: thus the spread of Christianity will be a progressive discovery of the fulness of Christ.—Sir Harry Reichel.

I do not say, remember, that the Christian life to every man, or to any man, is a bed of roses. No educational process can be thus. And perhaps if some men knew how much was involved in the simple "learn" of Christ, they would not enter His school with so irresponsible a heart. For there is not only much to learn, but much to unlearn.—Henry Drummond.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

EDITORIALS

Vol. 89.

RICHMOND, VA., MAY 31, 1924.

No. 22.

THE NEW EDITOR OF THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

With this issue of the Southern Churchman the present editor, according to the announcement made on the third of May, terminates his conduct of the paper. Our subscribers and the Church public in general will be interested in the following statement which it is our privilege to print today:

"The Board of Directors of the Southern Churchman beg leave to announce to its readers that on the first of June the Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D., will assume the duties of editorship. Dr. Dunn's ministry of thirty years has been spent in Virginia. He studied at the University of Virginia, the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, and at the Cambridge Theological School. He was, with Bishop Jett, a founder of the Virginia Episcopal School. He has been an active member of the General Convention since 1910. He brings to his task a sympathetic understanding and love of that type of Christian thought and living, which is associated with the name of the Church in Virginia.

"With every confidence in his loyalty to those principles for the proclaiming of which this paper came into being and has continued to exist for ninety years, the Board has given him an untrammelled freedom to direct its future course.

"LEWIS C. WILLIAMS, President."

It is a satisfaction to the present editor to pass the responsibility for the paper into such capable hands. Dr. Dunn is known not only through the Virginia Dioceses, but widely through the General Church, as a writer and preacher, as a Deputy to General Conventions, and as a friend of many men. As a student for a time at the Theological Seminary in Virginia and later as a student and graduate of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, he partakes of the spiritual heritage of both Schools, and to the conduct of the Southern Churchman he will doubtless bring the warmth of evangelical zeal and the missionary devotion which have the particular glory of the one, and the progressive scholarship which has been, not, of course, the peculiar possession, but the particular emphasis, of the other.

A SPEECH AND ITS REBUTTAL

When President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, at a dinner of the Missouri Society a short time ago, denounced the whole policy of prohibition and expressed his hope that the 'constitutional amendment would be repealed, there was great rejoicing among those who wanted that sort of message spoken. The interests which still have not quite given up hope of seeing the liquor traffic, with all its money profits, restored, were galvanized into a convulsive effort to break down belief in the law in this political election year. The supposedly "good citizens," who deliberately violate the law because they do not like it, were encouraged by President Butler's fervid championship of "personal liberty."

And that other and far more to be respected group, the men and women who do not violate the law themselves, but who yet consider that it is, and will be, so generally violated that it is useless to keep it on the statute books, were confirmed in their personal opinion.

But an argument is not concluded when one side has presented its case. An appeal which may look impressive by itself may be sadly frayed and unravelled when the rebuttal has finished with it. And the rebuttal to President Butler's speech is beginning to come in.

The Citizens' Committee of One Thousand sent out to the presidents of the leading colleges and universities of the country, immediately after President Butler's speech, a letter asking whether they agreed with President Butler's contentions: First, that prohibition was a "great mistake." Second, That the laws could not be enforced.

At the last report, twenty-six replies had been received to this inquiry. Every one of these states that the college or university president who signs it is unqualifiedly and unconditionally opposed to President Butler's position.

Among the academic leaders of the last half century, perhaps no other single one has been so eminent as Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University. This is what President Eliot wrote:

"You tell me that the Citizens' Committee of One Thousand believe that if the statement made by President Nicholas Murray goes unchallenged, it will have three very bad effects: First, it will encourage people to violate the Prohibition laws and other laws; secondly, it will dishearten the students of American universities in their efforts to enforce Prohibition legislation on university premises; thirdly, it will announce to the whole world that American constitutional government has failed.

"In my opinion President Butler's statement will have no such effects. It will not increase the number of 'wets' in the United States; it will dishearten no 'dry' students; and it has no tendency whatever to prove that American constitutional government has failed.

"You ask me for a 'concise statement of the attitude of our educators' towards the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act. Of course, I have no authority to speak for 'our educators', but I am glad to have this opportunity to express three opinions, my own opinions, as follows:

"1. An overwhelming majority of the teachers and educators of our country believe in bringing up all children not to use alcohol in any form for the sake of their own health and of the public health, and also believe that the reasons for the abolition of alcoholism should be taught in all schools as part of the regular instruction in personal and community hygiene.

"2. The testimony now being given by manufacturers, physicians, nurses, and social workers as to the improvement in the condition of the population at large which has taken place since the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted is so potent that it will soon convince the great majority of the American population, both native and foreign, that the complete disuse of alcoholic drinks will result in enormous benefits to any people that accomplishes it.

"3. The prohibitory legislation is being better, and better enforced; and its complete enforcement will follow after a time upon the appointment of enforcing officers on the merit system instead of the 'spoils' system. The first batch of officers to enforce the Prohibition legislation were all spoils men, that is, were appointed by members of the Senate and House of Representatives in their personal or party interests; and inevitably a large proportion of the men so appointed turned out to be either morally or mentally incompetent."

Then President Eliot closes his letter with a statement the reading of which may give pause to any who may have thought that they might make political capital out of President Butler's speech. Through all his remarkable life, President Eliot has been a man who looked to the future, and acted boldly in the light not only of what already existed, but of what we believed the coming years would prove. Here is the future as he sees it:

"I venture to add to these statements of opinion the following prophecy:

"Neither the Republican nor the Democratic Party will venture to put a 'wet' plank into its party platform at the coming presidential election. Even the wettest of the politicians see the strong trend of public opinion towards the enforcement of all the laws against the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks. This prophecy is based on the extraordinary progress of democracy throughout the world during the past ten years, a progress which has been characterized by active support of all promising means of promoting the public welfare. Among these means there is none better than the abolition of alcoholism."

THE FUTILITY OF CIVILIZING WAR

One of the popular but erroneous ideas current in the world today is that poison gas and other barbaric war paraphernalia have been eliminated by such conferences as that held in Washington. Sadly, but truly, one reads in the press of the erection of a poison gas plant in Spain, the establishment of an Italian chemical warfare service, the employment of gas bombs in the revolution in China, not to mention the improvements in the chemical warfare apparatus of the army of our own country. Rather than being eliminated, poison gas seems to have advanced beyond the fondest imaginations of its inventors, and even the League of Nations seems to have endorsed the use of gas and chemicals as legitimate weapons in war.

Thinking men are astounded that the idea that war can be made, and is a chivalrous thing, is still current in the universe. The only way to eliminate the barbarian uses of war is to eliminate the primary cause which is war itself. The use of gun powder probably was looked upon as an unnecessary adjunct of war when it first came into use, but those who knew, knew that if war was to be continued at all gun powder would be the weapon with which it was conducted. In 1899 at The Hague Conference our representative, Admiral Mahan, a man of sane judgment and common sense, refused to be a party in agreeing not to use noxious gasses in war, for he recognized war in all its savagery, and knew that anything as inhumane as war could not be legislated into a thing humane. The German experts who knew war better than any others agreed with him, but signed the pact not to use gas, and fifteen years later, "through necessity," broke it.

History, if carefully read, reveals the fact that once a weapon is demonstrated as powerful in war, it will never be abandoned until a more powerful one supplants it. It is not beyond the legitimate imagination to visualize whole populations being eliminated by poison gas. There is only one answer to the question for Christians, and that is that war must cease, and when that is done all the barbarian acquisitions will disappear also, and not until that time.

A PRAYER

For the Spiritual Union of Mankind.

War has failed to end war.
Diplomacy has failed to end war.

Only ties of the Spirit infallibly unite.
Therefore We Pray For
The Divine Alliance of Nations.

Eternal God, Father of all souls,
Grant unto us such clear vision of the sin of war
That we may earnestly seek that cooperation between nations
Which alone can make war impossible.

As man by his inventions has made the whole world
Into one neighborhood,
Grant that he may, by his cooperations, make the whole world
Into one brotherhood.

Help us to break down all race prejudice:
Stay the greed of those who profit by war, and The ambitions of those who seek an imperialistic conquest
Drenched in blood.

Guide all statesmen to seek a just basis
For international action in the interests of peace.
Arouse in the whole body of the people an adventurous willingness,
As they sacrificed greatly for war,
So, also, for international good-will,
To dare bravely, think wisely, decide resolutely,
And to achieve triumphantly. Amen.

Feel As You Pray That Endless Others Are Aspiring With You.

World Dreams Of."

FOUR ASPECTS OF THE CHURCH'S WORK

By the Right Reverend Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D.

Part of the Convention Address

IN this my second address to the Convention I report upon that part of the administration of the Diocese committed to me at my election, the Self-Supporting Parishes and the Church Service League. In this large field I wish to speak only of two or three subjects which in the past year have most deeply impressed me: namely, (1) the religious opportunity of the parishes as the time for the annual confirmation draws near; (2) the gradual development of the ideal and purpose of the Church Service League as a permanent part of the life of the Church; (3) the growing vision of the work of the whole Church reflected in the Parish; and (4) the hope of genuine leadership of the young as an inspiration to the courage of the Church.

I.

First of all, then, I speak of Confirmation. Confirmation offers to a parish a definite goal towards which the most earnest part of its life can be directed. The obligation to take thought for it rests not only upon the rector, but also upon every communicant of the parish, especially upon those who are sponsors. The rector naturally keeps before him all through the year the names of those who he thinks ought to be confirmed. Loyal parishioners ought likewise to be thinking of those among their acquaintances who might be induced to take the step by a friendly word from them. And then when the intensive preparation begins, in classes or lectures, the old parishioner will come with the perhaps timid candidate to share the instruction and to give the sense of fellowship.

One is often asked about the age at which children should be confirmed. There are exceptional children who awaken early to the meaning of life. But my experience, both as presbyter and as bishop, leads me to believe strongly that if a boy or girl is confirmed at about fourteen or soon after the gift which is bestowed in Confirmation is more likely to be consciously received and permanently cherished than if the confirmation is administered very much earlier. There is that in this period of the opening life, which, by God's providence, then is ready to appropriate the mystery of His Holy Spirit. Looking into hundreds of faces after Confirmation, as I have been giving to each class a few words of counsel, I have again and again been cheered and even amazed by the evident recognition in these faces of the divine privilege which Confirmation brings; and that recognition has seemed to me deepest when the age has not been (as I think) too young. This conviction but confirms my experience when I was myself year by year preparing classes. I quite recognize that others, with as long and full parochial experience as my own, may give a different answer to this very important question concerning the best age for the confirmation of youth. I heartily respect every word which comes out of real experience; but this one conclusion I am confident we should all admit; each parent and sponsor and pastor must do his utmost to discover the approximate time when Confirmation will mean most to each life which receives it, that the outward act may indeed be the token of the inward strengthening of the Holy Spirit.

Then there are the adults which in a normal parish ought to be in every class. In every community there is a large proportion of people who have never really understood the appeal of Christ, who have never associated themselves with His Church in any communion. They may be careless people who hurt others. They may be of fine quality, showing forth the very spirit of Christ. If the Church in a city or town is worth anything it ought to be seeking both these types, for the sake of what they can be to the Church as well as for the sake of what the Church can be to them. They cannot be won simply by carrying on services and by offering indifferently a supposed opportunity. They must be sought one by one as our Master sought His disciples. If His followers today can be so filled with Him that they will appeal as He appealed to John and James at their fishing-nets, or Matthew at his receipt of customs, then the glory of the early Church will be upon us.

I am not appealing for large classes at Confirmation, though I hope they will be always larger. I am appealing for the search for all who, not yet having understood, will be made glad for ever by the gracious invitation to enter, through the gift of the Holy Spirit, into the full fellowship of the Body of Christ. Every announcement of Confirmation ought to suggest a crusade for that which is best and truest. It ought to mean very hard work on the part of the whole parish. It ought to mean appeal again and again. It ought to mean solid training before and after Confirmation. It ought to mean an outpouring of the Holy Spirit not only upon the candidates before the communion-rail, but upon the whole congregation, so that the whole church should be filled with the glory of it.

II.

Let me now speak of the gradual development of the ideal and purpose of the Church Service League as a permanent part of the life of the Church.

The Diocese of Massachusetts is making an earnest effort to fulfil what was begun at the General Convention in Detroit. Other dioceses are also at work upon the problem. The task is not easy: that makes it the more alluring. We have not yet seen its full possibilities; instantly the eye reaches out to wider vision. Once we begin to grasp its principles, we dream that the whole Church will again be vitalized with the spirit of service. I am convinced that there is within it a genuine force; and I plead that no one look upon it as an experiment, but that every one see in it an enterprise to which the Church is permanently committed. There must be no looking back or hesitation. Here is a plan which must be filled with life.

The work of the Church has hitherto been confused. Various boards and guilds have held out their purposes and have invited adherents. The parishioner has felt at liberty to reject them all. Now the Church calls every member to be a member of the Church Service League. Every one who is baptized is summoned to Christian service. The ideal, which we tend to realize is that every parish definitely recognize the full range of the commission given by Christ; that is, work for the parish, the community, the diocese, the nation, and the world. The parochial leaders of the Church Service League ought to be as scrupulously chosen as the members of the vestry. The whole parish should be officially committed to the work of the whole Church.

The Diocesan Council of the League appreciates the loyalty with which parish after parish in this last year has organized itself in accordance with the suggestions set forth in its program. As these parochial units develop, grateful words come to us of enlarging responsibility and deepening interest, so that meetings of the workers in the parish are, we are told, not only more efficient for the causes for which the Church exists, but compel the attention of those who hitherto held aloof.

Speakers, both men and women, from the Diocesan Council hold themselves ready to go to any parish in the Diocese to explain the advantages of active participation in the ideals of the League and ways in which organization can wisely be effected, with due regard for local conditions. I trust our parishes will freely call upon these speakers who represent the Diocesan Council; and as President of the League I shall be glad personally to help in any way I can.

Through the Publicity Bureau at the Diocesan House parishes may be supplied with speakers describing some definite part of the various fields. From our own Diocese speakers will tell you about the Church Home, a remarkable work for Church children in the State of Massachusetts, and about the House of Mercy, a wise work for unfortunate women. Bishop Hulse has recently been in our parishes telling of the opportunity in Cuba. Bishop Reifsnider has told of the havoc which he saw when Tokyo was destroyed. Let your parishes know the thrill of the missionary's story.

III.

Within the function of the Church Service League lies the work for the Church at large, which is represented by what we commonly call the apportionment. In this is the estimated budget for the Diocese and for the Church beyond the Diocese. Each parish receives due warning of its share of this Diocesan and General expense, as well as it can be divided. I know the difficulty of finding a reasonably fair distribution of the responsibility. Much as I long to see the day when the Diocese of Massachusetts will pay its full apportionment, I am not intending now to speak of money. I wish only to speak of one development of our missionary plan within the last year.

At the request of our Diocesan Council and with the full approval of the National Council, a special Diocesan Committee, with hard work and rare skill, has turned the budget, which formerly was only in terms of money, into terms of work. The effort has been made to present to each parish the work likely most to appeal to it. If this new method is carried out fully, each parish will know, with some detail, how the money is being spent, and there will grow up a personal relationship between the parish at home and the workers far away. This relationship will benefit the parish quite as much as it will encourage the distant missionary. The time may come when the apportionment will no longer be thought of as a burden, but will be the estimated expense required for people who have become dear friends, doing their self-sacrificing labor in the Name of Christ. We shall then be sending our gifts with the same naturalness with which we would help an aged father, or a sister, living bravely at some heroic post. We shall do more than is asked of us, because, knowing both the work and the workers, we care to the bottom of our souls.

If there is any parish represented here which does not know its proportion of the need in terms of personality, will you not do all you can to make known this more vivid appeal. Will you not keep before yourselves and others the various people and causes that your gifts will represent, and give yourselves the happiness of knowing when each person or cause receives that share which enables the work to go on. And then send your prayers with the gift, and ask God to bless the work, beyond your feeble power to help, as only He can bless it.

There is one part of the work of the whole Church which this year belongs to each one of us. The Church in Japan has met with disaster, and we are this month asked to pledge ourselves to build the waste places. Those who ask us know the special power which our gifts will have at this particular time. The Church in Japan has begun to take responsibility as a National Church. It not only has self-supporting parishes, but it has two native bishops, who are supported by the Japanese. We may hope that soon the Church in Japan, passing the stage of self-support, will be a generous benefactor to others. We have the opportunity to demonstrate the Spirit of the Lord Jesus in loving kindness to a friendly nation, and to stand beside courageous brethren in their hour of desperate need. I am sure that Massachusetts will take its accustomed place in this effort to help in a truly great way.

IV.

There is only one other subject of which I wish to speak. This Diocese is trying earnestly to meet the singular opportunity presented by the presence of many colleges and schools within our borders. Two special committees have been working steadily through the last year to meet the need. Something has been accomplished. We are studying, inviting help, and praying for guidance. And we hope for the future. The difficulty is to secure men especially adapted to this work who are not already so established at important posts that we can hope to gain their cooperation.

Meantime, there are one or two convictions which are perhaps worth recording, so far as study with the problem directly allows conclusions.

First, I am sure that, in general, the college youth of this vicinity are of fine quality in personal life and in ideals. For many of them, religion may be subconscious, but it rises when the need or the appeal is serious enough to bring it to the surface. It is not, ordinarily, a conventional type of religion, but it is, none the less, intensely real. It is apt to speak out with a more rugged sharpness than the more restrained among us quite understand. When boys and young men are religious today I seem to find that they have reached a surrender to Christ which their religious parents have not attained.

These reflections lead to a practical suggestion. Why should not the Church give to forceful religious youth genuine responsibility while they are young? Would it not be impressive if one important vestryman in each parish who had served, let us say, for fifteen years or more, should resign his office on condition that a vigorous man, under thirty, take his place, always assuming that the retiring vestryman work harder than ever before, in some other capacity, for the parish and the church as a whole?

The church too often plays safe, afraid of criticism or failure, and thus maintains a respectable dignity at the expense of the life of the Spirit. Too often we hold for older men all offices of real responsibility and persuade ourselves that the young enthusiast just out of college, ready for adventure for Christ, is satisfied to be an usher at services or a librarian of the Sunday School. He may be satisfied; but the church ought not to be satisfied. We forget, if we ever thought about it, that Our Lord was a young man when He exercised His earthly leadership. We forget that probably most of His disciples (perhaps all) were younger than Himself. He dared to trust the fate of His Church to the leadership of young men.

I often wonder if He is not sad that His Church today has the aspect of age, when to Him it was transcendently youthful.

So my final plea is that we run the divine risk of trusting the oncoming generation for the new life, which through it, Christ shall show to the world.

THE UNCHANGEABLE RICHES OF CHRIST

A Part of the Address to the Annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia

By the Right Reverend Beverley D. Tucker, D. D.

DURING the past few months, there has been much discussion in the Church and in the columns of the newspapers, of the great truths of the religion of Christ. However much we may regret the fact that this discussion has been carried on, in part, in an atmosphere of controversy and of strife, and at times not in the spirit of Christian love, there is one thing for which we may be thankful, and that is that it has focussed the thoughts of men upon the Christ, Who is the supreme revelation of God.

The Church is the family of God. In every true family there is a unity of love which binds together its members, despite the differences of temperament and individuality. The family spirit is lost if its members divide themselves into groups and label one another with epithets. It is because of this that I have never believed in organized parties in the Church. I feel that when Christian men differ, as they have always done, in their interpretation of the truth, there is no necessity nor justification for a spirit of bitterness and of strife. Even when men seem to have departed in some ways from the faith, as The Church has received it, we must deal with them not in denunciation, but in the spirit of Christ, who in answer to the cry, "Lord I believe, help Thou mine unbelief," wrought a miracle of grace, and who said, "He that is not against us is on our part." We must speak the truth, but we must speak the truth in love.

I, myself, believe that the faith, which has survived the assaults of nineteen centuries will not be essentially changed. There will be, as there have always been, differences of interpretation, but Christ will still be to us the One in Whom dwelleth the whole fulness of the God head bodily.

The best way, I believe, to meet the doubts of men and to satisfy their hearts, is for our ministers to preach Christ, not as He is found in the speculations of men or in abstruse theologies, but as He is revealed in the everlasting Gospels, on which alone we base our Creeds; Christ the Son of God, conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, risen from the dead, alive for evermore, and seated on the right hand of God in glory. It is not so much the philosophy of religion, the preaching of theological doctrines that men crave, but the message which they declared who went everywhere preaching Jesus and the Resurrection as the hope of the world. May I, dear Brethren of the Clergy, urge upon you to make this the burden of your preaching, so that the people to whom you minister may hold fast that which they have received and find in Christ their hope and their salvation.

There should be no doubt to any one who has read the story of Christ in the Gospels, of the reality of His humanity. He ate and drank with men, He shared their joys as well as their sorrows. He was ahungered and athirst. He was wearied. He turned aside from no path which we must tread. As a babe, as child, as man, He shared our human experiences in life and in death. He was very man of very man, He is so revealed in the Gospels.

But if these Gospels had only given us the picture of this man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, of the lowly peasant, however beautiful in its simplicity and purity the character revealed, however lofty the teaching, it would all have been a story of the past, a beautiful memory, even if it had survived, which is not probable, a wonderful dream. If this were all we would have to say with Matthew Arnold,

"Now he is dead—far hence he lies,
In the lone Syrian town—
And on his grave with shining eyes,
The Syrian stars look down."

But the wonder of it all is, that as we look in the mirror of this same Gospel, we see not only the Son of Man in His humility, in full participation in the experiences of human life, knowing tears, and pain, and weariness, and shame, and agony, and death and the grave, but from the beginning to the tragic end there comes to us glimpses of the divine and the eternal, which reveal Him not only as the Son of Man, but as the Son of God.

These alternations, between glory and humiliation, between that which is indicated by the cry of Pilate, "Behold the Man," and by the Voice of God on the Mount, "This is my beloved Son in Whom I am well pleased: Hear ye Him"—these alternations showing us Christ as Very Man and then again as Very God, we find all through the Gospel story. It is so in the brief and graphic Gospel of St. Mark, as well as in St. Matthew, St. Luke and St. John. It is the same Gospel.

We can reject it, but we cannot change it. We cannot have the divineness of Christ, without having His full humanity and we cannot know Him as Very Man without knowing Him as Very God. We cannot erase from the Gospels, as Thomas Jefferson tried to do, all traces of the miraculous, because the same Gospels which tell of the gracious words that proceeded out of His lips, tell of the marvelous works that He did, and give no uncertain attestation to the truth that God was His Father, and that He and the Father are one. You cannot, if you seek the Christ in the Gospels, and it is there only that He is to be found, have the human without having the Divine Christ.

Indeed, it is not, as I have indicated, in the range of probability, that the name or the teaching of Jesus, Who lived in an obscure part of the world, a simple peasant, should have come down to us, through the centuries, making their way through the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome, touching the life and the thought of humanity, of all races and of all sorts and conditions of men, as Socrates and Plato, and Aristotle, and Cicero and Caesar, and Marcus Aurelius have never touched them, if He had not been, as these Gospels declare and these Creeds affirm, not only the Son of Man but the Son of God, Divine as well as human.

The proof, as St. Peter recalls, when he looks back at the Mount of Transfiguration, is imbedded in the Gospels. It cannot be erased. As we turn to these Gospels, we find these alternations of lowliness and of glory. There was the humiliation of Bethlehem, the lowly stable, the manger, the helpless babe in the mother's arms. But there was the prelude of the Annunciation, first to Mary, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon Thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore also that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

Then to Joseph, "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived of her is of the Holy Ghost."

There was lowliness and even squalor, in the scene of the Nativity, but there was a vision of angels and Heavenly music, "Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men." There was the adoration of the shepherds, and the recognition, even in the face of the Babe, of the truth, "unto them was born a Saviour, Christ the Lord." There was poverty and obscurity, but there was the guiding by the star of the wise men, and gifts to the King, just a Babe in His mother's arms, "Gold and frankincense and myrrh!" He was just a Babe when Simeon held Him in his arms, and yet the aged servant of God saw in Him, "a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of God's people Israel."

He was just a boy in the temple, and yet He had the consciousness that He was the Father's Son, in the Father's House. At his Baptism in Jordan, He submitted Himself to the ordinance of men, and yet He was hailed from above by the voice, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him." He was weary and faint from fasting, tempted in all points like as we, and yet the angels came and ministered unto Him. He was ahungered and yet He fed many with bread miraculously multiplied. He was athirst and yet He promised to others the water of life. He was aweary and yet He said to the heavy laden, "Come unto me and I will give you rest." Himself He could not, because He would not, save from death, and yet He gave back the son to the widow, the little maid to the father and mother, and the brother to the sister of Bethany. Bowed beneath the olives of Gethsemane, He drained to the dregs the cup of human experience of agony and of sorrow, and yet an angel came and strengthened Him. He was bruised, and marred, and scourged and wounded, and spitted upon and rejected of men, deserted by His disciples, nailed to the cross, yet He spake with conscious regal power, "Today, Thou shalt be with me in Paradise." He cried, "Eloi, Eloi, Lama Sabacthani," when darkness veiled the earth, and then there came the light of the consciousness of the nearness of God, "Father into Thy hands I commend my spirit," and the triumphant cry, "It is finished." His body was laid in the sepulchre, hope seemed to be gone—then came the earthquake, the rolling away of the stone, the vision of angels, the never failing light of the Easter morn, the Christ alive for evermore, and then the Mount of the Ascension, the return to the Father in the clouds of glory, and so the Gospel ends.

You cannot separate the lowliness from the glory, the defeat from the victory, the earthly from the Heavenly, the human from the divine.

It is the same Jesus, yesterday, today and forever. It is Christ the Child, Christ the King, Christ sharing our weakness and Christ conscious of His divine power. It is Christ scorned by men, Christ hailed by God on the Mount of Transfiguration. It is Christ beneath the shadows of Gethsemane, Christ hanging bruised and broken and pierced on the cross, and yet Christ risen from the dead and alive for evermore. In Him dwelleth the whole fullness of the God head bodily, and yet He is bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, Very Man of Very Man, and yet Very God of Very God.

May the Spirit of God be with us all, that in our lives and teachings we may proclaim the Christ of the Gospels, as the hope of the world's salvation.

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

A New Movement in the Church

A GROUP of men and women interested in philanthropic and religious activities have formed the Council of the Outline of Christianity, whose purpose, primarily, seems to be ascertaining what the word Christianity actually means. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, a member of the new organization, says in explanation of its mission:

"Christianity is a big word. What does it mean? After twenty centuries of devout thought and controversial explanation, there is still no generally accepted statement of that meaning. The Modernists base it in reason and science, as they point out St. Thomas Aquinas did in his earlier day. Fundamentalists defend their charters, a response to attack which is instinctive in the modern man when his liberties are threatened.

"Traditionalists cry 'A plague on both your houses!' and rest on immemorial custom as handed down within the institution. The sociologists and social service group, without irreverence, are disposed to be cavalier about the institution and to find their answer in a world-wide movement, slowly gathering head, in the direction of what they call social justice. Meanwhile, the man in the street plays golf and puzzles out operating problems of the radio.

"The Council of the Outline of Christianity has undertaken to settle on the common meaning which the word has for all these types of opinion. At first sight, that seems a tall order for a group of busy men and women. But where, they ask, is the insuperable difficulty? In spite of superficial complexity of differences, Christianity is not a different thing for each different body of interpreters. Subtract it from our contemporary civilization and you take away a great part of the world. The Council, promising that Christianity is not merely theology or economics or an ethical state of mind, and that the present controversial confusion, until it is cleared away, will continue to beset all Christian activity, has set itself the task of submitting a generally acceptable statement of the facts in their broad and simple outline.

"At an informal luncheon last October an interdenominational board was formed to guide the project away from all strictly theological pitfalls. And at the meeting of last week, Dean Fosbroke of the General Theological Seminary

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

TRAINING OF LEADERS FOR WORK AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE.

At the Brookline Conference the question of the training of leaders was introduced by Canon Gabriel Farrell, of Newark. It is his conviction that we must look upon the Program as a continuing process for the development of leaders—that that is the ultimate goal sought. For a long time the custom has been to vary the meeting with "outside speakers"—usually men and women with a sympathetic approach to the adolescent mind, or those who have become conspicuous in their professions, and bring a message born of their success. A different custom is now being established. Speakers from the outside are members of other Societies. It is a healthy sign when this exchange becomes general, as it widens the field of one's appeal and develops initiative and a sense of leadership, to have a Leaguer go from his own group to face a strange League and bring to them a message from the successful experience of his own body.

Leaders are to be developed also in the intensive period of Summer Conferences and Camps, Week-End and District Conferences. Canon Farrell stressed especially the thought that we must give the young people the material they need in our Summer Conferences, and he suggested three sets of courses which would be helpful to the developing youth movement in the Church:

1. (a) Organization and Program of the Young People's Movement.
- (b) Bible Study Course.
2. (a) Discussion Method and Group Leadership.
- (b) Church History.
3. (a) The Program of the National Church.
- (b) Personal Religion.

Both in the Programs at home and in Summer and District Conferences, some opportunity should be offered for a frank discussion of life enlistment in definite Christian service. The variety of opportunity needs to be stressed and it is conceivable that with sympathy and cooperation, an increasing number of young people can be enlisted to fill the growing need of the Church for leaders in the several branches of her activity.

INSPIRATIONAL SERVICE.

Greenville (S. C.) Conference.

This service was largely given over to representatives from the Church Schools of the Diocese, large delegations coming from almost every one. Trinity, Columbia, came up with over seventy delegates. The Orphanage at York came over en masse in a truck, and many others too numerous to mention. Every one formed in procession with the school banners, and marched into Church singing Onward Christian Soldiers. Our well-beloved Bishop gave us his first annual address, and we shall look forward to this every year now. He asked us whether we would have on our bodies the mark of the Lord Jesus, the cross, as St. Paul did, or whether we would have the mark of the beast, as spoken of in the Book of Revelations.

Then Mr. Haines told us of the boys and girls in Liberia, and their work and most remarkable of all the sacrifices they had made to get their Easter offering and to contribute to the Nation-Wide Campaign. They made us ashamed of ourselves. Then our very own little June Taylor told us how happy she was in her preparation to go to Liberia as a nurse, and urged us to think seriously of offering for service.

And then came the taking up of the Easter offerings from the Schools. It was a beautiful sight when at last, the various delegations, with their banners were assembled in the Chancel and Bishop Finlay at the altar presenting our offering to God, for use in His work. This should be a tremendous inspiration to us to make it much larger next year.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

GOING FORWARD ALONG MANY LINES.

It is a glorious thing to see a community awakening to the fulness of its opportunities and the responsibilities that always accompany opportunity.

There is no place in this country where this has occurred recently more impressively than in the State of North Carolina. Last week the writer had occasion to observe the results of this progressive thinking and acting by reason of a commencement sermon delivered to a graduating high school class at the high school in a small town in this progressive state.

The Chairman of the Board of Education met me at the station. He is a prominent lawyer and is setting the right kind of example in showing the importance and the advantage of the best and most cultured people taking an active part in public school matters. Perhaps no one thing has played so large a part in holding back the educational progress of the public school in the South as the fact that its representative people have too often looked askance at the efforts of the "free school system" as it used to be called. From the station I was taken to a new, well-equipped modern school building with an auditorium large enough to be used for civic gatherings of all kinds.

Concrete roads run in and out of this town, and hard surfaced highways interlace the state in all directions.

In the afternoon we drove over to a nearby manufacturing town, where is located one of the largest damask mills in the world. This town has a school building that cost nearly half a million dollars, a beautiful little hospital, contributed to by the mill employees at the nominal rate of ten cents a week for which they are entitled to all its advantages. There is a park and swimming pool, and above all there are no slums. The mill employees have neat, comfortable cottages, each with its own yard, so that there is no crowding in demoralizing tenements.

The most impressive building, however, that the writer saw was the county home, which is the modern substitute for the county poorhouse. It cost about $40,000, is situated on a farm of more than four hundred acres, and is an attractive looking brick building with its own lighting plant and water system. The white and colored inmates are comfortably housed in separate wings of the same plant with the superintendent's quarters between. There is a sun parlor or rest room for each, and each person has an individual room. The wife of the superintendent was a trained nurse before her marriage, and, therefore, has the best possible knowledge of the needs of the inmates.

So often we are apt to be dismayed with the way in which progress in material matters outstrips our social and spiritual outlook, but this county home is a monument to the fact, that good roads may carry a greater inspiration than many sermons. The poorhouse that one drives by frequently, becomes an eyesore, and the pauper in an out-of-the-way place on a muddy road becomes an object of consideration when his hovel is passed daily by many automobiles rolling along a hard surface road.

In this same town of about two thousand inhabitants there is an Associated Charity organization with five hundred members, and an energetic group of women organized as a literary club have induced the town council to give them a brick building formerly used as the city hall, that will soon be filled with books and transformed into a public library.

All this has not taken place in a newly settled community, where there are no burdens of old conditions to be shaken off. It is in one of the oldest counties in a state that originally helped to form this Union. At the county seat is a Masonic temple, whose records date back to almost a century before the American Revolution, and nearby are the ruins of the house in which the benefactor of Paul Jones once lived.

We cite the situation above because it seems to us to be an impressive example of the way in which responsibility always follows opportunity, and in this instance the increase of physical comforts has not left behind the need to think for others. Our rural clergy and those living in small towns should take an active interest in every form of material development going on around them, so that they will be active participants, if not leaders in the activities of their communities, and Christianize with their presence and inspiration the energies thus displayed.

SOUL SAVING IN AN IMPORTANT FIELD.

The efficiency of the social service work of the New York Episcopal City Missions Society was paid a high and practical tribute the other day when the administrators of the John R. Hegeman Estate set aside the sum of $40,000 to be used by this organization for work among the young women paroled from the New York State Reformatory at Bedford. This endowment provides for a woman worker to help these girls in the problems of finding employment, and the other difficulties ahead of them as they leave the institution.

No work is more well worth while than the mission work carried on in this sort of institution. In very many instances the girls and young women who are there have been dragged to their ruin by circumstances entirely beyond their control which have created temptations well-nigh irresistible.

The chaplains work in helping the girls to face things with new courage, and the will to live up to the best there is in them, is greatly strengthened when, through the instrumentality of an efficient and well trained social worker, the good intentions thus implanted can be strengthened and supplemented by frequent visits from a kindly woman who has both the sympathy and the knowledge of how to render the most efficient help.

Most of our state institutions of this character have a parole officer, whose duty it is to render this kind of service, but few of them can afford to employ enough officers of this kind to make their visits as frequent as they should be. In any case the very fact that such a visitor is an officer of the institution has a hampering effect to some extent. We believe that the employment of a disinterested mission worker, who will cooperate with the officials, will be a means of rendering a service to this type of girl, whose value will be inestimable.

It is almost impossible for the average person to appreciate the difficulties facing a girl on coming out of such an institution. Her previous record almost compels her to seek a new locality in which to establish herself. The question of their existence is always imminent and pressing. The difficulty of getting proper recreation under conditions that are not degrading is very great. To often the public dance halls have insufficient chaperonage or none at all, so that every thing combines to wreck the good desires, that may have been instilled in the institution.

We trust that the example set by the Hegeman Estate will be followed by other philanthropic organizations in many of our states, and we congratulate the New York City Missions Society on rendering a service which has received, and no doubt deserves, such a splendid tribute.

Young People's Service League.

The seventeenth Annual Council of the Diocese of Atlanta met in St. Paul's Church, Macon, Ga., May 11 to May 13, preceded by the First Annual Convention of the Joint Diocesan Young People's Service League, May 9-11.

It was an inspiring sight to see over two hundred young people gathered together at the banquet on the opening night of the Georgia Joint Y. P. S. L. Convention of the Dioceses of Georgia and Atlanta. A few grown people were special guests, and among them were Bishop Reese, Bishop Mikell, Rev. W. A. Jonnard, of Savannah, the Rev. Karl Morgan Block, of Roanoke, Va., the Rev. O. J. Hart, of Macon, and a few others. Hubbell Andrews, vice-president for the Diocese of Atlanta, gave the Leaguers welcome and the Bishops, Mr. Jonnard and Mr. Block made fine addresses.

At the business session the next morning it was found twenty-four Leagues were represented—fifteen from the Diocese of Atlanta and nine from the Diocese of Georgia. Thos. M. Johnson, of Atlanta, was the Chairman of the Convention. Among the many matters under discussion by the Convention was whether the Y. P. S. L. should function as a joint-diocesan organization in the future or not. This led to much discussion and resulted in the election of a joint diocesan president in the person of Thomas Johnson, of Atlanta, and gave each diocese a full compliment of officers in the future, whereas, heretofore, there had only been a vice-president. Although the question of a Y. P. S. L. pin was discussed, it was decided to delay the conclusion of this matter until 1925.

The Rev. Karl Block led in a question-box conference which brought out many questions of importance to the Leagues and a "demonstration Y. P. S. L. Meeting" was held with a prepared program and speakers. The subject was "Our Principles" and the subjects covered were, "Worship," "Service," "Study" and "Fellowship."

A picnic supper was enjoyed Saturday night on the Winston estate, after which the Rev. Karl Block held a preparation for the corporate communion to be held the next morning at which nearly one hundred and fifty of the delegates were present.

The convention was voted a great success and the delegates went home with a new estimate of their duty to the Church.

The Diocesan Council.

The Council formally opened at Christ Church, Macon, Sunday evening, May 11, with addresses by Dr. W. C. Sturgis and the Rev. Karl Block.

After the corporate communion the following morning the Council proceeded to elections with the following results: the Rev. R. K. Smith, Secretary; Mr. Robert C. Alston, Chancellor; the Rev. Thomas Duck, Registrar; Mr. C. L. Bunting, Treasurer; Mr. T. H. Austin, Sr., Treasurer of the N.-W. C. The following Standing Committee was elected: Clerical, the Very Rev. T. H. Johnston, the Rev. W. W. Memminger, the Rev. C. H. Lee; Lay, Col. Z. D. Harrison, Judge C. L. Pettigrew, Mr. T. E. Berry.

Among the other committees appointed and elected was one to cooperate with the Commission on Faith and Order and consisted of the Rev. H. S. Cobey, the Rev. F. H. Harding and Mr. J. H. Hancock.

At four in the afternoon of Monday the delegates motored out to the new Appleton Church Home and viewed the beautiful new buildings which will be the new home of the Diocesan Orphanage. The site is a glorious one and the buildings, when complete, will be most modern and serviceable in every way. The buildings and grounds were dedicated in a short service and the Bishop made a short address followed by a brief talk by the Rev. O. J. Hart, in which the latter said he hoped it would soon be possible to erect a memorial chapel in memory of Bishop Beckwith to go with the new buildings.

In the evening the Bishop made his annual address. In this he dealt with matters of diocesan importance and appealed to the communicants of the diocese to get a strong grasp on the verities of the Christian Faith. Dr. Sturgis presented the Japanese Reconstruction Fund in a most forceful manner.

One of the most important discussions held in Council Tuesday was that concerning the missionary work of the diocese and the advisability of securing either a diocesan missionary or missionaryer was given much time. The result was that a committee on evangelism was appointed to report on the whole matter at the next Council and this committee consisted of the Very Rev. T. H. Johnston, the Rev. C. P. Willcox, the Rev. G. W. Gasque, Mr. Bernard Suttler, Mr. F. F. Baker and Mr. N. K. Smith.

The treasurer of the Appleton Church reported that about $10,000 more would be needed to complete the new Home, and $3,850 was immediately pledged from the floor of the Council. After this, the clergy were asked to bring the matter to their congregations on the first Sunday in June that the balance of the $10,000 might soon be in hand.

In the evening a service was held in St. Paul's Church, at which two remarkable addresses were made: one by Dr. W. C. Sturgis, on Prayer, and the other by the Rev. J. A. Schaad, D. D., on the Program of the Church.

The following day an all-day conference for the clergy was held by Dr. Schaad, which proved of great spiritual benefit.

The Council was pronounced one of the best that has ever been held in the Diocese. Not only was there aggressive action taken along lines of missionary enterprise, but, from every angle, it was apparent that all the delegates were making a united effort to further the work of the Church in the diocese and throughout the world by their deliberations. All the speeches made showed the presence of a true vision of service in the speaker, there was everywhere a spirit of unity and cooperation to be seen and felt.

The Council will meet next May in St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary Convention met at St. Paul's Church, May 12, with Miss Lucinda Snook, diocesan president, in the chair. The work of the organization for 1923 was reviewed and commended. The Auxiliary raised and expended $10,186.93 during the past year; helped six of the nine candidates for the ministry in the diocese in their education, for which they pledged $1,200 per year and sent off boxes to missionaries whose value was $2,200, besides giving a thank offering of $1,593.11 among other things.

Memorial Dedicated.

The Memorial Fountain, given to Zion Parish House, Charles Town, W. Va., by the children of Major and Mrs. McDonald in honor of their parents was dedicated at 10:30 A. M. Sunday morning, May 11, 1924, by Bishop Gravatt. It was presented by Mr. John McDonald, on behalf of his brothers and sisters, in the presence of Zion Sunday School, the little ones gathering closest to the fountain, which bore the inscription: "A cup of cold water in His Name." It was accepted by Mr. Gerhardt on behalf of the building committee, by Mr. Brazier as Superintendent of the Sunday School, by Mr. Forrest A. Brown on behalf of the wardens and congregation, and then by the rector, the Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, who expressed his appreciation of the gift to the parish and spoke of its appropriateness. The rector then presented the Bishop of the Diocese, who had been rector and close friend of Major and Mrs. McDonald. He spoke in affectionate terms of this loyalty and faith. The service was concluded with the prayer of dedication by the Bishop. Mrs. McDonald was the daughter of the Rev. William T. Leavell, a godly clergyman of the Episcopal Church, who spent many years of his ministry in what is now the Eastern Convocation of West Virginia.

Meeting of the Eastern Convocation.

The Eastern Convocation had a most successful session in Zion Church, Charles Town, from May 6 to 8 inclusive. The speakers were Bishop Strider, the Rev. J. L. Oldham, the Rev. John Gass and Miss Charlotte Forsythe of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. A number of the sessions were given over to lectures by Mr. Gass and Miss Forsythe on the subject of Religious Education, which were very helpful. On Wednesday afternoon, May 7, the entire Convocation drove to St. Andrew's-on-the-Mount, where the buildings were inspected, a service held, and a delightful luncheon served by the people of St. Andrew's. The Convocation was one long to be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

Opening of New Parish, St. Matthew's, Charleston.

On Wednesday evening, May 14, the new gymnasium connected with the parish house at St. Matthew's, Charleston, was formally opened with appropriate exercises. This gymnasium is part of a plant soon to be completed which will give St. Matthew's one of the largest and best community houses in the Diocese. During the past three years the people of St. Matthew's have carried out building projects costing about $36,000, of which $26,000 has been raised. This work, situated on the rapidly-growing southside of Charleston, is a very promising field for the growth of the Church.

New Parish House in Clarksburg.

The new parish house in Clarksburg is progressing rapidly towards completion, the walls now being up to the eaves. It is expected that the entire structure will be completed this fall. The rector of Christ Church, the Rev. J. T. Carter, presented a good confirmation class upon a recent visitation of the Bishop.

A Chapter of the Young People's Service League.

In the Church of the Good Shepherd, Parkersburg, there is a very flourishing Young People's Society, which meets every Sunday evening three quarters of an hour before church service. The young people have exclusive charge of the devotions and great interest is taken in the meetings.

Consecration of the New Church at Point Pleasant: The handsome new stone church recently built and still more recently paid for in Point Pleasant, will be consecrated by the Bishop of the Diocese on Wednesday, May 28.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary: The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese will be held in St. Paul's Parish, Weston, the Rev. J. S. Alfriend, rector, on June 11 and 12.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Freeman Addresses Delaware Church Club.

Religion as the great theme of the day, the solidarity of the Episcopal Church, and its adherence to the fundamentals of Christianity, the need of greater respect for public officials, and the projected Cathedral at Washington, were the principal points discussed by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, at the semi-annual dinner of the Church Club of Delaware at the Hotel duPont in Wilmington on May 15.

Judge Richard S. Rodney, the newly-elected president of the Club, in his introductory remarks referred to differences of opinion within the Church. He noticed that in this controversy the layman has little part. He wanted to say, however, that as a judge if he disbelieved in the laws he was administering he would not and could not hold his position.

Bishop Freeman took his keynote from the remarks of the chairman. He defended the declaration of the House of Bishops in its meeting at Dallas, and said that while it might be desirable to change a phrase or two the Bishops have nothing to apologize for in that statement. He denounced the members of the House who remained silent and then charged that the action was not unanimous.

Bishop Cook made a short, but telling address, in which he contrasted the opposite methods of force and arbitration as means of securing peace, and denounced the stupidity of war. He censured the action of Congress in its exclusion of the Japanese by legislation and commended the effort to rebuild the Church's churches and schools in Japan.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Convention.

The Fiftieth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Newark was held in Trinity Cathedral, Newark, on May 20 and 21, with a very full attendance. Dr. Hamilton and Archdeacon Ladd, Frank L. Crawford and Edward O. Stanley were reelected members of the Standing Committee, and Judge Alfred E. Mills, of Morristown, was elected to fill a vacancy. Almost without exception the members of the boards whose terms are expiring were reelected. Canon Dunseath, the Rev. Messrs. Filkins, Hyde and Kinsolving, and Drs. Reazor and Lau; Messrs. Burhorn, Stanley, Woodhull, Pulsford, Baker and Washburn were elected Deputies to the Provincial Synod. The appointment of Justice Charles W. Parker as Chancellor was announced. The Rev. Messrs. Ladd, Farrell and Kinsolving were elected after nomination, as examining chaplains.

After careful study by committees, action was taken upon ways of saving time in elections. The terms of those holding offices will be lengthened and one-third of boards and commissions will be chosen each year, alternates being chosen from those who failed of election on the first ballot. The Cathedral Chapter will be somewhat diminished in number being made up of certain officers and of representatives chosen by commissions or by the Convention, or by appointment. It was voted to ask for offerings for the Cathedral Fund, which now amounts to nearly $100,000, upon one day in the year. The reports of the various commissions on Social Service, Religious Education, Diocesan Missions, the Foreign Born and public institutions showed much work accomplished. The observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Diocese in November next aroused much interest and showed a strong desire to make it a memorable year in setting free from debt parishes and missions, and in setting forward many good causes. Christ Hospital, Jersey City, was reported as having entered upon a campaign to raise $60,000, with which to erect a new building, with many large subscriptions already made. St. Barnabas' Hospital, Newark, was reported as having been greatly enlarged and improved. The beginning of the work of the largely endowed Laura Augusta Home for Orphans was reported.

Bishop Lines' address was largely given to the presentation of the movement towards the reasonable interpretation of the Creeds, such as has come about in the reasonable interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. He pleaded for the definite and generous presentation of religion, without departure from the old standards and a patient peaceful solution of questions which have been raised. He spoke also of the necessity of having larger thoughts about religion and the work of the Church as organized religion, of acceptance of the work of men of science, with great hope and great courage. The address ended with a vigorous exhortation for interest in the endeavor to make war impossible through friendly international relations, to make an end of the trade in strong drink, for the preservation of childhood, industrial justice, prison reform, and more Christian unity. Bishop Stearly's address was largely given to the presentation of the great duty of the Diocese towards the whole Church and its work for humanity and for the recognition in a large way of duty towards the Diocese. The present condition of Diocesan work was stated, with recognition of the considerable bequests of the last year, and a plea for generous support of Church undertakings. He presented in part the program for the observance of the Jubilee Year of the Diocese. He said that as all people could not come to a central place of observance of the anniversary, that an effort would be made to have the Bishops and the officers of the Diocese and representatives of its activities visit every Church in the Diocese in the autumn for prayer and instruction. The duty of the support of the present great plans of the National Council and the work among the foreign born were also presented.

The Diocesan Church Club made all the clergy and delegates to the Convention their guests at a great dinner in the evening, which was attended by nearly five hundred men, a gain of nearly one hundred over last year. The spirited singing of many popular songs added much life to the dinner. The addresses were by the two Bishops, Dean Dumper, Dr. John W. Wood and Governor Silzer. They were all upon a high plane, full of instruction and recognition of the great service and opportunity of the Church. The Convention adjourned on the second day at noon, and it was the general feeling that it had been a good useful Convention, sending all who had come to it back with renewed devotion to the service of the Church.

Two new parishes, one at Mountain Lakes and that of the Incarnation, East Orange, were admitted into union with the Convention.

United Thank Offering.

At the women's presentation of the year's gifts for the United Thank Offering at St. John's Church, Jersey City, on May 16, despite the rain, about five hundreds women came together. Both Bishops were present and the addresses in the afternoon were made by Dr. John W. Wood and Deaconess Hart. The offerings for the two years of the present triennium were announced as $20,000 as against the three years offering at Portland of $27,000 in 1922.

The Sunday-school Lenten offerings were presented at a service to which representatives of the Sunday School came together at Christ Church, Bloomfield and Glen Ridge, on May 10, with both Bishops present, and the address made by Dr. John W. Wood. It was a very striking gathering of junior choirs of girls and Sunday-school children. The amount reported, to be somewhat increased, was over $20,000. The parishes standing first in the list being St. Luke's, Montclair, St. George's, Maplewood, and Grace Church, Orange. The service was in charge of Canon Farrell.

Many parishes have building projects planned for the enlargement of the churches or parish houses, as at Irvington, Upper Montclair, St. Andrew's, South Orange; St. Mark's, Newark; Ridgefield Park; Morsemere, and Mountain Lakes. Grace Church, Newark, has rented on a long lease for business purposes, on very favorable terms, the property long used for a rectory and has obtained on the rear of the church a new rectory in a more quiet situation.

making a very desirable home for the Rev. C. L. Gomph. The ordination for deacons is to be held on Sunday, June 1, at Calvary Church, Bayonne.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocesan Council.

A conference of laymen of the Diocese met this year on Tuesday, May 20, preliminary to the official opening of the Council. This conference was called by the Bishop to give an opportunity for lay delegates and other interested laymen to consider in detail the budget as prepared by the apportionment committee, and in this way avoid lengthy discussion in the council itself. The meeting was presided over by Mr. John Stewart Bryan, and Mr. R. Carter Beverly as secretary, and proved to be of great value by giving opportunity for the frank expression of opinions, and acquiring information about each item of the budget. The latter was adopted as submitted after considerable discussion. This conference has no official authority, but it may become a feature of the annual council on account of its usefulness in clearing the way for more expeditious transaction of business in the council.

Tuesday night was given over to the Board of Social Service. The Rev. George P. Mayo, chairman of this board, presided, and brief addresses were made by the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Dr. Mary Brydon, the Rev. R. Cary Montague, and the Rev. Robert B. Nelson. There was a large attendance, and the work of the diocese along social service lines was presented in detail so as to arouse greater interest in this important branch of the Church's work.

The council convened on Wednesday morning, and the Bishop, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. Brydon, Ribble and Hall, administered the Holy Communion.

The reading of the Bishop's address was listened to with great interest, and he brought out with fine emphasis backed by incontrovertible figures the amazing way in which the Church in Virginia has grown in numbers since the inception of the Nation-Wide Campaign, showing that the results of that movement had been as valuable to the life of the Church as it has to its finances.

The rest of the morning was taken up with routine business. Immediately after luncheon the Rev. Robert Patton was introduced and spoke enthusiastically in behalf of St. Paul's Industrial School for Colored Youth at Lawrenceville. As a result of his address, an item of $2,500 was added to the budget of this year. During Thursday afternoon nominations were made for the usual committees and deputies to the Provincial Synod. At the night service the Rev. Dennis Whittle spoke on the mountain work as he finds it around his parish at Luray. He was followed by the Rev. Junius Taylor, rector of St. Philip's Colored Church, Richmond, who spoke on the progress of the work among the Colored people in the diocese.

On Thursday morning the council proceeded to the election of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, as follows: The Rev. Messrs. Berryman Green, W. H. Burkhardt and W. J. Morton; Messrs. Gardner L. Booth, A. R. Hoxton and J. B. Minor.

After considerable balloting the following clerical and lay deputies were elected to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. W. Roy Mason, F. D. Goodwin, K. J. Hammond and G. P. Craighill; Messrs. R. C. Beverly, L. C. Williams, W. W. Chamblain and J. M. Taylor.

The Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D., was elected historiographer.

By far the most interesting features of the council were the majority and minority reports of the committee on canons. A minority of this committee had prepared a report placing the final decision on apportionments with the vestries instead of with the apportionment committee of the diocese. This minority report was presented by Mr. Murray McGuire, who, though not a delegate, was given the privilege of the floor to present and discuss this matter. Almost all of Thursday afternoon was taken up with this discussion, and although intense interest was manifested, the best of feeling prevailed, and finally the majority report of the committee on canons was adopted. This report leaves the final decision on apportionments in the hands of the diocesan committee, but gives greater opportunities for objections from vestries.

The Bishop had asked for a committee to consider the advisability of electing a Bishop-Coadjutor at the next council. Dr. Green, as chairman of this committee, reported, recommending that steps be taken to secure the consent of the General Church, and arrange for this election at next year's council.

The reports from various committees showed a very healthy state of the Church in all branches of its activities.

Adjournment was reached on Thursday afternoon, in time for many of the delegates to leave for their homes that night.

FLORIDA.

Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., LL. D., Elected Bishop.

The eighty-first annual convention of the Diocese of Florida met Wednesday, May 21, in St. John's Church, Jacksonville, with the largest representation of clergy and laity in its history. The session opened with the celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta. In place of the usual address of the diocesan, Bishop Mikell read a memorial to the late Bishop Edwin Gardner Weed, head of the diocese from 1886 to 1924.

Dr. Van Winder Shields, rector of St. John's Church, and president of the Standing Committee, was elected permanent chairman of the convention. The first order of the day, after organizing, was made the election of a bishop. Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, late Bishop of Tokyo, Japan; the Rev. G. H. Harrison, of Pensacola; Dr. Henry T. Phillips, of Columbia, S. C.; Dr. John Durham Wing, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dr. H. W. Starr, of Charleston, S. C.; the Rev. Fitz-James Hindry, of St. Augustine, and the Rev. C. W. Frazer, of Jacksonville, were placed in nomination. On the first ballot Phillips received, clergy 4, lay 12; Wing, clergy 4, lay 10; Harrison, clergy 1, lay 11; Frazer, lay 4; Tucker, clergy 12, lay 7; Starr, clergy 5, lay 3; Hindry, clergy 2, lay 6; Bishop Tyler, lay 1.

On the fifth ballot, Bishop Tucker received more than the required majority; whereupon his election was made unanimous. Bishop Tucker was nominated by the Rev. R. E. Boykin, of Tallahassee, who paid a high tribute to the elected diocesan. Dr. Shields, Mr. Boykin and Judge B. A. Meginnis were named as committee to wait upon Bishop Tucker and notify him of his election. The convention sent its newly-elected head a wire telling him of his confidence in him, and asking his acceptance. A reply from Bishop Tucker thanked the convention for its tender of the high office, and stated that the matter would receive his most earnest consideration. Bishop Tucker was the leading candidate from the start, and it was evident on the second ballot that his selection was certain. The salary of the bishop was placed at $6,000, with $1,000 for incidentals, and a residence. The convention unanimously determined to stand behind Bishop Tucker should he determine to assume oversight of the diocese.

Much routine business was transacted. The diocese is growing, and evidence of much new life was shown. The committees of the diocese were elected, with the Rev. Messrs. C. A. Ashby, L. Fitz-James Hindry, R. B. Templeton, A. M. Blackford, G. H. Harrison and C. H. Jordan, as clergy, and Messrs. Frank P. Dearing, George W. Thames, Jr., W. A. Bours, Giles J. Patterson, M. H. Haughton and O. T. Hiver, as lay delegates to the Provincial Synod. The convention adjourned to meet next in Pensacola.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Council.

The fifth annual council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia met in Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, May 20 and 21. It was an interesting session, and several important actions were taken. The Rev. W. Cosby Bell, D. D., preached the Council sermon from St. John 10:10. Bishop Jett, in his address, laid special emphasis on the campaign for the Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund, the Seminary Centennial Fund and the Tri-Diocesan Summer School, to be held June 23 to July 4, at Sweet Briar College. He appealed for the cooperation of the clergy in connection with the Summer School and for their personal attendance. He spoke of the work that has been done among the colored people of the diocese, especially at Lynchburg and Bedford, and noted with regret the resignation of the Rev. William N. Harper, M. D., who has been in charge of this work for the past year and a quarter. He described vividly the extent and variety of activity in the Associate Missions field (formerly known as the Archdeaconry), in the Southwestern part of the diocese, and noted especially the faithful and splendid work of the various missionaries under the direction of the Rev. H. H. Young, the Dean of Associate Missions. He referred to the new mission being opened at Appalachia by the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, of Big Stone Gap; the new chapel at "Folly," Brookewood, Augusta County, which will be under the charge of the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., rector of Trinity Church, Staunton; the new chapel at "Henrytown," near Saltville, under the charge of the Rev. Edgar C. Burnz; the mission work being done on "Twelve O'clock Knob," near Salem, by the Rev. David H. Lewis, rector of St. Paul's Church, Salem, and the chapel it is proposed to erect there in the near future. He made a strong appeal for increases in the salaries of the clergy; spoke with enthusiasm of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary in this Diocese; called attention to the Campaign for the Japan Reconstruction Fund; appealed for cooperation of all Churchmen in the matter of financing the needs of the Diocese and General Church. He referred with expressions of the deepest gratitude to the thoughtfulness and generosity of Deaconess Adams, who has labored for many years as a missionary in this Diocese, and who has now offered practically her entire estate as a contribution to the work of the Diocese. He spoke of the attempts being made to secure international peace, and urged membership on the part of this country in the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Some Resolutions Adopted: Sympathy for the Rev. Frank Mezick, who, on account of illness, was prevented—for the first time in twenty-five years—from attending the council. Message to Senator Swanson, congratulating him on his stand in regard to adhesion by the United States in the World Court, and urging that this matter be reported out of the Foreign Relations Committee to the present Congress. Appreciation of the generosity of Mrs. Arthur J. Smith, who has made large contributions, both in personal interest and financial aid, to missionary work at St. John's-in-the-Mountains, in Franklin County. Commending to the people of the Diocese the campaign for the Virginia Seminary Centennial Fund, the work of the Near East Relief and the Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund. A special resolution was also adopted, conveying the sympathy of the council to the family of Mr. W. E. Wolfenden of Salem, who had been elected a delegate to the council and who died on May 19.

Among the especially important actions taken by the Council were the final adoption of the new constitution, which had been first passed upon by the Council of 1923, and the adoption of a new system of parish apportionments in connection with the financing of the Field Department (Nation-Wide Campaign).

At the evening sessions most interesting addresses were made by Canon Reese of St. Louis, on the Tuttle Memorial and Young People's Work; by Dean Lathrop of New York, on Social Service; by the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., on The Church in Japan, and by Mr. C. Edwin Michael of Roanoke, on the finances of the diocese and the General Church.

Spring Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Archdeaconry of Altoona.

The spring meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Archdeaconry of Altoona was held in St. John's Church, Huntingdon, on Friday, May 2. Seven branches, with fifty out of town women, were in attendance. The morning session was opened with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, at which Archdeacon F. T. Eastment, of Philipsburg, was the celebrant, assisted by a vested choir. Mrs. W. F. Hillier delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by Mrs. George Zeigler, of Philipsburg, vice-president of the Archdeaconry Woman's Auxiliary. At the opening of the business meeting a motion was adopted requesting a telegram of sympathy and affection be sent to the Diocesan Secretary, Mrs. M. W. Van Horne, of Williamsport, on the death of her father.

Following the luncheon, the reports of the winter work of the branches were read. Every report indicated great activity, every branch in the Archdeaconry having a Mission Study Class, and cooperating on the Prayer Partnership Plan. The report of the Summer Conference for Church Workers at Eaglesmere was given by Mrs. C. H. Boyer, the Diocesan President. Every branch was urged to send at least one representative to be trained as leaders for the Mission Study Classes. The Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, gave an address on the subject, "Opportunity." Addresses were also made by the Rev. Messrs. Eastment, Cady and Bishop. Mrs. Zeigler spoke on "The United Thank Offering." Supper was served at the close of the meeting. The autumn meeting will be held at Lewistown.

Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Harrisburg Holds Conference at Danville.

The Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Harrisburg held a Conference at Christ Church, Danville, on Wednesday, May 7.

It was the first diocesan gathering in fourteen years, and was certainly a marked event in the history of the work. Mrs. J. C. Heiges, of York, the Diocesan President, took charge of the afternoon business session, which was attended by representatives from Mt. Carmel, Sunbury, Bloomsburg, Berwick, Harrisburg and Williamsport, besides York and Danville. After the opening prayer and hymn, Mrs. Robert Hughes read the minutes of the meeting of fourteen years ago. Bishop Darlington, Archdeacon Schmaus and the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, of York, presented their greetings to the Conference. The various branches reported on their work, and the announcement was made that a new site for the "Burnt Cabin Camp" had been purchased at a price one-third of what had been expected. This site has a splendid pool, which added much to its attractiveness, and last year's cook had promised to serve for the coming season.

Mrs. J. C. Heiges was reelected President. Miss Sara Pritchard, of Danville, was elected Vice-President, and Mrs. Robert Hughes was reelected Secretary-Treasurer.

The new Department Leaders are: Candidates, Mrs. W. L. Wilhelm, of York; Commendation, Mrs. A. C. Amesbury, of Danville; Extension, Mrs. James A. Case, of Danville; Literature, Mrs. Floyd Appleton, of Danville; Missions, Mrs. John Spinley, of Mt. Carmel; Social Service, Mrs. John Oliphant, of Berwick.

It was decided to hold the next Diocesan Conference next May at York.

Miss Anna E. Gettel, President of the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Bethlehem, made the principal address and brought a most cheerful and encouraging message of true optimism. Bishop Darlington was in his best and happiest mood, and did and said much to contribute to the success of the occasion. He called upon Bishop E. Arthur Dunn, of British Honduras, who said that he appreciated his opportunity to learn about so important a work which he hoped to introduce into Central America, where many of the younger married women were in need of just such an organization. Mrs. Dunn was also called upon. She spoke of the importance of close relations between the various organizations doing parish work, so that there might be a place for everybody.

The question of a National Field Secretary was discussed. It was decided that for the present the four branch secretaries should serve as a committee to manage whatever was possible to such work in the diocese.

At five-thirty P. M. over one hundred sat down to a bountiful collation provided by the workers of the parish. The procession, made up of the choir, clergy, bishops, officers, associates and members, left the Parish House at seven o'clock. The Rev. H. R. Bennett, rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, led in the saying of the Creed and Prayers. The Rev. Paul S. Atkins happily introduced Bishop Darlington, who spoke of the modern young woman's place, position, and influence. After the singing of the "Girls' Friendly Hymn," Bishop Dunn was introduced and spoke of certain missionary principles which he illustrated from the work in Central America. Archdeacon Schmaus read the closing prayers, after which Bishop Dunn pronounced the benediction.

On Thursday morning, Bishop Dunn celebrated the Holy Communion.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. J. C. White, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. White Consecrated Bishop.

The Rev. John Chanler White, formerly archdeacon of the Diocese of Springfield, was consecrated the fourth Bishop of that Diocese in St. Paul's Church, Springfield, Wednesday, May 14. It was the first consecration of a Bishop of Springfield in the history of the Diocese, and was attended by ten Bishops, many priests and a host of laymen from all over the Diocese.

Incidentally this was the first consecration officiated at by Bishop Talbot, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

The co-consecrators were the Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Ph. D., of Quincy, Ill., and the Rt. Rev. Reginald Weller, D. D., Bishop of Fond du Lac, Wis.

The Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Colorado, and a former classmate at the Seminary of Bishop White, was the preacher.

Bishop Johnson's text was "One must be ordained to be a witness of Christ's Resurrection," and was a strong and compelling appeal for all to live the Christ life.

The presenting Bishops were: the Rt. Rev. William Walter Webb, D. D., Bishop of Milwaukee, Wis., and the Rt. Rev. Harry Tunis Moore, D. D., Bishop of Dallas, Tex.

The Rt. Rev. Sheldon Munson Griswold, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, read the Litany. The Rt. Rev. Charles Palmer Anderson, D. D., Bishop of Chicago, read the Epistle, while the Rt. Rev. Harry L. Longley, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Iowa, read the Gospel. The Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Missouri, read the consents of the Bishops.

The certificate of election was read by the Rev. Joseph G. Wright, President of the Standing Committee, the canonical testimonial was read by the Hon. Bluford Wilson, senior member of the Standing Committee, the certificate of ordination by the Rev. Henry M. Chittenden, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Paris; the certificate of compliance with the canons was read by Mr. Henry M. Andre, of Jacksonville, member of the Standing Committee; the certificate of the consents of the Standing Committees was read by the Ven. Frederick D. Butler, B. D., of Alton.

The attending presbyters for the Bishop-elect were: the Rev. Edward John Houghton, rector of St. Paul's Church, and the Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Christ Church, both of Springfield.

The deputy registrar was the Rev. George Peabody Hoster, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Memorial Church, Champaign, Ill.

The Rev. Arthur George Wilson, B. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Danville, Ill., was the master of ceremonies.

The Rev. John Mitchell Page, chaplain of the Church at the University of Illinois, Champaign and Urbana, Ill., was the chaplain to the Bishop.

St. Paul's Church, stately, commodious and churchly, was a typical setting for the consecration of a bishop, while the parish house, of goodly size and cloisters, added to the conveniences. The edifice itself was crowded to such extent that many stood on the sidewalks to witness the procession of bishops and clergy and choir with the attending participants in the ceremonies.

There were celebrations of the Holy Communion at seven and eight o'clock A. M. for the laity, followed by Morning Prayer at nine o'clock, and the service of consecration began at ten o'clock. None but the bishops and clergy and their families communed at this hour.

Mr. Frederick N. Morgan, organist of St. Paul's Church, Springfield, played the organ. He also played at the ordination of Bishop White to the diaconate and at his wedding.

The beautiful episcopal vestments were given to Bishop White by his former parish, Trinity, at Lincoln, Ill., which he was serving at the time of his election, in addition to being archdeacon of Springfield. The pectoral cross was the gift of the laity of the Diocese and the episcopal ring was the gift of the clergy of the Diocese.

Following the consecration a banquet was tendered the new Bishop at the Leland Hotel, attended by about three hundred persons.

Fraternal welcome was extended to Bishop White by Rabbi Mayer Lippman and by the Rev. Fr. F. S. Mazir, of St. Barbara's Catholic Church, in behalf of Bishop Griffin, who was in the East, and by the Rev. W. R. Creamans in behalf of the Protestant clergy of Springfield.

Dr. E. E. Hagler presided at the banquet as toastmaster.

"Christian Unity" was the subject of two addresses at night in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, the speakers having been Bishop Johnson, of Colorado, and Bishop Weller, of Fond du Lac. The speakers presented different phases of unity. The meeting was presided over by Bishop Talbot. It was opened by the Rev. Hudson H. Pittman, pastor of the First Congregational Church, and closed with the benediction by the Rev. W. F. Rothenburger, of the First Christian Church.

O God, the King of Glory, Who hast exalted Thine Only Son, Jesus Christ, with great triumph unto Thy Kingdom in Heaven; we beseech Thee, leave us not comfortless, but send to us Thine Holy Ghost to comfort us; and exalt us unto the same place whither Our Saviour Christ is gone before, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. The Coming of His Feet.

"This same Jesus . . . shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven."

In the crimson of the morning, in the whiteness of the noon,

In the amber glory of the day's retreat,

In the midnight, robed in darkness, of the gleaming of the moon,
I listen for the coming of His feet.

I have heard His weary footsteps on the sands of Galilee,

On the temple's marble pavement, on the street,

Worn with weight of sorrow, faltering up the slopes of Calvary,

The sorrow of the coming of His feet.

Down the minster-aisles of splendor, from between the cherubim,

Through the wondering throng, with motion strong and fleet,

Sounds His victor tread, approaching with music far and dim—

The music of the coming of His feet.

Sandled not with sheen of silver, girdled not with woven gold,

Weighted not with shimmering gems and odors sweet,

But white-winged and shod with glory in the Tabor-light of old—

The glory of the coming of His feet.

He is coming, oh, my spirit, with His everlasting peace,

With His blessedness immortal and complete,

He is coming, oh, my spirit, and His coming brings release,

I listen for the coming of His feet.

Far-Off Christians.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie.

There is a Scripture which says, "Peter followed Jesus afar off." Had Peter been close up, he would probably not have denied the Saviour! He was too far off to feel the pull of the Christ—too far off to sense His power—too far off to feel the impulse of His great love.

Is not this what is wrong with the world today? Are we not following afar off? Christianity itself is far behind Christ. We are far off from His peace, His power, His purity—far off from His love, His loveliness, His loveliness, His life and His light. We are far from His teachings, His example, His conduct and actions. We have substituted the "traditions" of men for the real truth of Christ!

Men must keep close up to the Church, to the pastor, to the Bible, to the Lord's table. Men must keep close up to their vows and sacred promises. Do not follow afar off! You are bound to lose the way, or to grow weary or indifferent. It is only by keeping "in touch" that men gain and retain zest and enthusiasm and courage. Far-off Christians are daily denying their Lord and bringing reproach upon their church.

Men let automobiles, pleasure, comfort, business, self and what not come between themselves and Jesus, and the contact is broken—the "wires are grounded"—there is a "short circuit"—and the "lights go out!"

Christ is moving. Christ is progressive. Christ is climbing the heights. Despite the imputations of men, Christ is not two thousand years behind us—but more like two thousand years ahead of us! We must keep going if we would keep close to Christ. We must keep step with His life, His love, His good works, His leadership—if we would keep in His company, conscious of His presence and His power.

"He followed afar off," might be said of most failures in the Christian life. That is how NOT to follow Christ. That is how NOT to be a Christian. That is how NOT to be a good church member. That is how NOT to be a success in the drama of Christian life.

Not until the world gets closer to Christ can we look for more love and less hate—for more peace and less war—for more constructive service and less destructive disservice—for more light and less darkness—for more Heaven and less hell.

A New Mayflower Voyage.

Dr. R. R. Reeder.

On our boat from Piraeus to Alexandria was an interesting group of fifty Armenian refugee girls from fourteen to eighteen years of age. They were pioneers, these orphaned heroines, and this was their Mayflower voyage to a strange country a thousand miles from their native land. The girls, if they make good, are the advance scouts of hundreds, perhaps thousands, to follow, of their exiled comrades stranded now and scattered through Greece, Syria, and the islands of the Aegean.

This great host of orphaned refugees is under the care of Near East Relief in schools, hospitals and orphanages, where they are being restored to sound physical condition, taught in the schools and trained in various industries for self-support.

Egypt, which contains an Armenian population of some 20,000 has opened her doors to admit these orphans to be placed in family homes of their own race. Homes for these girls had been selected by an agent of the Near East Relief, who was waiting to receive them when we landed at Alexandria.

Experiences and responsibility, beyond their years, was written on their faces. The sudden uprooting of their homes, the severing of kinship ties by disease, massacre, deportation and exile, had left their trace of premature hardships, suffering and bitter memories on mind and body. But their spirits were not daunted—youth is exuberant and rebounds quickly to the touch of kind treatment to restored vigor and opportunity. These girls were not downcast; they looked out over the blue Mediterranean toward Egypt as the land of promise. Those of us who knew the tragedy of their past lives and contemplated the significance of their present venture had greater difficulty to restrain our emotions than had these brave young girls.

Each girl had a complete outfit of clothing, necessary toilet articles, food for two days' voyage, and a blanket. All slept on the floor in one of the big rooms of the steerage quarters of the boat. Other steerage passengers included Moslems, Arabs, and Greeks. When toward evening with one of the Near East Relief staff I visited the room to see if the girls were safe for the night, we were surprised to find that they had already organized a relay of night-watches, with two girls as sentinels for each period of the night. Past experience and danger and a sense of group responsibility had made these young girls prudent and vigilant. Among them were three little girls who were going to Egypt for legal adoption in family homes of their own race; special responsibility for these was felt by the older girls.

On Sunday afternoon we all gathered on the open after deck of the little steamer. The Associate General Secretary of the Near East Relief gave the girls a talk on the significance of this Mayflower voyage of the first group of the five hundred girls already registered for homes in Egypt. At the close of his talk and after a little hurried whispering among the older girls, one of them stepped forward from the group and expressed their appreciation and thanks for all that America through the Near East Relief had done for them and their full realization of how much the record they were to make in Egypt would mean to those who might follow them.

When, through an interpreter, I spoke of Egypt as the land of opportunity for Joseph, who, whether as a slave in Potiphar's house, a prisoner behind the bars, or as prime minister in Pharaoh's court, always kept his courage and pushed upward, I found them quite familiar with this old story.

The girls then sang some of their national airs, a verse of our American national hymn whose "sweet land of liberty" they could enjoy in imagination only, camera shots of the group were taken, we played Ring-around-Rosy with the smaller ones, and then said "good-bye" to these double orphans of both family and country.

In every way these girls seemed to realize that they were the pioneers going on before of a new emigration, a sample lot of the thousands of their comrades still under the care of the Near East Relief, and that it was up to them to make good in this new and strange land.

The purpose expressed in their serious faces made it easy for the imagination to spell out the words of that veteran Christian pioneer and victim of many persecutions shipwrecked on this same sea two thousand years ago: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth to those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Spring Song (After Isaiah).

Who is this that cometh with dyed garments, leaving gleams
Of purple on the hills and in the streams?
Deep chalices?
This that is glorious in apparel, weaving dreams
Of far kings' palaces?

Go, set a watchman; let him now declare
Who rideth on the air!

There grew a murmur when the night was late.

O you who are the Lord's remembrancers
And stand upon the gate,
What banner stirs?
Who has considered now the ancient days,
And come upon our darkened ways
With glint of gold inlaid by great Artificers?
What mighty restoration hath
Set these fair colors on the barren path?

Now get you up into the mountain, you that bring Good tidings; lift your voice and sing,
You that have seen
His arm revealed
By every hill and field,
Whose planting this hath been.
Sing! for acceptable the year returneth,
And His salvation as a lamp that burneth

Makes the waste places plain.
Sing! for again,
By trees regenerate and on hallowed grass,
The ransomed of the Lord shall pass.
—Anne Goodwin Winslow.

Seeing the King Face to Face.

Isaiah says: "Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." The context makes it plain what were the pre-requisites of beholding the King's face—a realized sense of personal sin, the holiness and majesty of God, and the need of a pure heart and pure lips. A vision of God, a vision of self, a vision of sin, and a vision of purity, become indispensable in seeing the King in His unobscured glory. Seeing God in His sublime purity reveals very often one's own sinfulness, and at the same time the great and imperative need of pure lips, a clean heart and a transparent sight.

Sin blurs one's vision, vitiates one's thoughts and purposes. Sin throws a film over one's outlook and prevents the sight of the King. The Christian must be separated from all sin, and thus the film over the soul is removed. A sight of the purity of God reveals the lack of human purity. To see the King, the organ of vision must be clarified. Nothing brushes aside the covering over man's soul like a personal application of the cleansing blood of Christ. The face of our King can only be seen by people who are pure in heart.

Beholding the face of the King is the privilege of the children of God provided by the King Himself. Potentates are rarely seen by their subjects. Only on special occasions is royalty disclosed. Seldom, if ever, are subjects of rulers permitted to fellowship with them. But not so with the Lord of hosts. He delights to commune face to face with all who have learned to know Him by a blessed experience of pardon and purity. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

Beholding Him produces assimilation of likeness, purpose, aim and objective. Of His people it is said: "The King's daughter is all glorious within." "All glorious within" consists of the Divine image, Divine glory, Divine ideals, and Divine aspirations. Divine likeness and Divine ideals sustain a very intimate relation. They are inseparably connected. The face of Moses shone after he had had communion with his God, face to face on the Mount, and he wist not that his face shone. The glory was so brilliant that shone on his face that he had to veil his countenance so he could commune with the people. This was but a reflection of the Eternal God.—Rev. W. Bucks.

The Snoring of Alma.

A minister was approached by a woman of his congregation. She was unhappy, and principally because her husband snored so she could hardly stay in the house with him. He sounded like a flivver in low without a muffler. Not since their marriage had she secured a good night's rest. She had reached the point where she did not feel she could endure it any longer.

The minister laughed. "It is psychological," he said, "and a matter of nerves. The first time you heard your husband snore, it roused your sensibilities. Hearing your loved one make that racket was not compatible with romance. Instead of growing used to it, you have grown more and more opposed to it.

"I can talk to you understandingly because I have been through the same thing. Alma snores." Alma was his wife. "It seems incongruous that my beautiful Alma should snore, but she does,—vigorously and reverberatingly. For years, I thought I should go crazy, because I have nerves myself.

"Then Alma stopped snoring; for our little girl was taken desperately ill. Day and night Alma watched over her without a wink of sleep until the crisis was passed; and then Alma could not sleep. Her overwrought nerves would not relax, they only grew the more tense. Night after night she lay with her bright eyes staring into the darkness, while I caught fitful snatches of miserable unconsciousness. The doctor said that if Alma did not sleep she would die.

"That night, as I lay in the still hours with a prayer on my lips, I was startled by a sound. At first I could not believe I had heard aright. But it was true. Alma was snoring. It was the sweetest sound I had ever heard. With tears of thankfulness trickling down my face, I turned over and drifted into delicious, peaceful slumber. Since then to hear Alma snore makes me happy. She can snore me to sleep any time. It soothes me as the crooning of a mother does a babe. After all, it's all in the way one looks at it."

The visitor arose and gathered up her wraps. "I'm going home," she declared, "and learn to love to hear John snore."—Wickes Wamboldt.

Dear Dogwood.

Julia Walcott Cockerott.

Cobwebs trail across my face,
Twining me in their embrace,
Where a sprig of dogwood clearly
Court'sies low to greet me dearly.
Cloistered in their interlace
Time is given to slowly trace
Backward vistas down my path—
Lovely!—which dear dogwood hath Etched upon my days by merely Swaying there and blooming yearly.

"At this moment you are the sum total of every thought that has ever germinated and developed in your brain—and of every thought that you have permitted to enter from without and find lodgment within; and as your life goes on you will continue to be more and more what you choose to make of yourself by the exercise of your thinking powers."

God Bless Thee.

Jesse Jouitte.

God bless thee now in sunshine bright,
In cold, in storm, by day by night;
In pathways that thou dost not ken—
God bless thee, then!

God keep thee near whilst thou art strong,
When days are full of gladsome song,
But when less joyous thy retreat,
God lead thy feet!

God grant to thee a clear pathway,
And give His love to light thy way,
But if the encompassing shadow fall
God hear thy call!

God fix thine eyes on Heavenly ways
And grant thee joy to sing His praise,
But if no song at thy command,
God understand!

God use thy powers to work His will,
And in thy days His wish fulfil,
And when life's gloaming fades to night,
God be thy light!

Christ, the Saviour.

At the close of a preaching service a stranger came to the late Dr. Stevens and said: "I don't like your preaching. I do not care for the Cross. I think that instead of preaching the Death of Christ on the Cross it would be far better to preach Jesus, the Teacher and Example." Dr. Stevens said: "Would you then be willing, if I preach Christ the Example, to follow Him?" "I would," said the stranger. "Then, let us take the first step," said Dr. Stevens. "All right," was the reply. "This is the first step," said the preacher, "Who did no sin? Can you take this step?" The stranger was somewhat confused. "No," he replied. "I do know sin, I acknowledge it." "Then," said Dr. Stevens, "you do not need Christ first for an example, you need Christ for a Saviour."—J. B. James.

It is not faith only to see God in what is strange and rare. This is faith, to see God in what is most common and simple; not so much for those strange sights in which God seems to break His laws, as from those common ones in which He fulfils His laws. It is difficult to believe that, because our souls and minds are disorderly; and therefore order does not look to us what it is, the likeness and glory of God. The greatness of God is manifest in that He has ordained laws which must work of themselves, and with which He need never interfere. The universe is continually going right because God has given it a law which cannot be broken.—Charles Kingsley.

When we love, we think ourselves capable of anything. Suffering or death seems nothing to us. Of all kinds of rashness, the most incurable and the most unreflecting, and at the same time the most excusable, because it is the most sincere, is not the rashness of the mind or the will, but the rashness of the heart.

For the Young Folks

I Know a Garden.

I know a garden; safe it lies
From straying feet and curious eyes,
But you may find it if you search:
A garden that is like a church
On sweetly solemn afternoons
Of gentle Junes.

The worshippers stand all so still
That I can count them when I will:
Cornflowers gay in fringy frocks,
Delphiniums in fine blue smocks,
Petunias prinked, and ranks of tall,
Beruffled, slender hollyhocks;
Daisies in starched white bonnets, small
Sweet Williams grouped beside the wall,
Snapdragons in their very best
And many a little nameless bloom
That, nudging in among the rest,
Finds somehow elbowroom.

Once in a while a wind is heard
As quiet as a Scripture word;
Now and again a bee's low croon
Is like an old hymn's tender tune;
And sometimes silence settles there,
A tranquil silence long unstirred,
As perfect as a prayer.

The congregation bend and wait
The benediction, still, sedate.
Not all of them are orthodox.
The wee pinks whisper to the phlox
When, halting in the open gate
With sideways head and questioning eye,
A skeptic robin lingers late
To listen doubtfully.
Sometimes a jeweled butterfly,
An utter worldling, passes by,
Flouting the sermon; poppies nod
(And yet they have their dream of God),
But roses bend in all their beauty
To think sweet thoughts of love and duty;
Each pansy lifts a reverent face,
Petitioning for gift of grace,
And even little outcast weeds
Present their humble, piteous needs
In that most lovely place—
That garden holy as a church,
That is not meant for careless eyes,
Though you may find it when you search
If you are wise.

Parables.

Eugenie du Maurier.

"Jesus was the best and greatest teacher that ever lived. He taught by using parables. What are parables? They are pictures of the familiar things: men at work, planting, reaping, fishing; pictures of money lenders and their debtors; pictures of the fields, the birds, the plants, the vineyards and the laborers; and the hard-working mother making bread. By using these familiar things Jesus told some of the most wonderful stories ever known, and made clear the truths of religion.

Jesus explained to the Apostles what these parables meant. But He did not explain them to the crowds because He wanted to make the people think of the meaning and find it for themselves. The best teachers are those who make us think. We like the stories that begin with "once upon a time." Jesus began His wonderful stories with "THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS LIKE UNTO." It is always like unto something that brings peace, happiness and justice through doing what is right. While we live here on earth the Kingdom of Heaven is in our hearts. It is the fellowship of those who find peace and happiness through doing His will.

In the parable of the mustard seed we learn how great a thing may come from a very small beginning, be it good or harmful.

A stable in Bethlehem became greater than a palace in Rome; a group of humble fishermen conquered more than armies; a pleasant word, and a whole day is made happier; one prayer, and the heavens are moved.

Another parable also tells of the importance of little things. Leaven is yeast. A yeast cake is very small. But it makes the bread light. Yeast in some form is necessary to have good bread; but it must be good yeast, and well mixed with the dough to have it work well.

God's commandments must be in our hearts as the yeast, or leaven, is in the dough. But they must be well used in our daily actions if these actions are to result in brave, cheerful, kindly conduct. Conduct forms character. Character is what we are. Christian children can be like the leaven if others see in them more truth, kindness, gentleness and obedience than they themselves possess. A splendid way to be missionaries!

The Church Mouse.

Mary E. Batchelder.

Did you ever hear any one say, "quiet as a church mouse?"

You could have seen one for yourself last night in the little church at Critters Creek. He poked his whiskers out of a little hole by the organ, sniffed and wiggled his tiny black nose up and down, glanced round fearing a kitty-cat, and then waited. The church was dark, silent, quiet, empty. Not a sound to scare the frightened little mouse. Outside on the rough road a heavy coal cart rattled by, but mice don't mind noises that are too far off to hurt them. Inside nothing stirred. Do you remember a Christmas poem that says, "Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse"? That was just like the church last night, after all the people had gone home, the minister and everybody. Not a clock ticked or a watch because there wasn't any to tick. Nobody kicked over a kneeling bench or rattled pennies in his pocket or whispered or coughed or sneezed or cried, because nobody was there. Even the organ was as still as if it didn't know how to throb and rumble and trill and sing and make you feel all solemn inside, or joyful and lively. The empty seats seemed to stand with their mouths wide open, but never said a word. The pulpit had a very lonesome look, and oh, how long and dark and silent was the aisle! The shadows behind the tall pillars were just as black as ink. Maybe you would have felt frightened, but the Church Mouse wasn't frightened a bit. He felt as happy and cheerful in the dark as we do in the bright sunshine.

So when he was sure no little cat was waiting to pounce on him, Mr. Mouse slipped out of the hole, way out this time, and scampered off as fast as a boy runs out of the school-house door when the bell rings. Down the aisle he flew and right by the door he stopped. There was a little crumb there and the Church Mouse licked it up and looked around for more. Then up the side aisle he slipped, over the pew cushion and the back of the pew and up the wall by a window frame and round over the top. More crumbs up there? No, the Church Mouse was disappointed, only a bit of green hemlock left from Christmas trimmings. Whew, how bitter it tasted! He spit it out. Down the other side of the window, over the pew again and across the kneeling bench. Oh, goodie, what luck! Here was a cough drop somebody had left; it tasted something like tooth-paste mixed with ice cream, only the little Mouse had never tasted either. One tiny little crumb he found again as he scampered round the organ, and then he ran down to the door to make sure he had missed nothing there.

But, oh my! On the back pew right by the door the Church Mouse saw a very frightening thing. He did not stop to look twice; just one glance was enough to nearly scare him into fits. Back to his hole scampered the Church Mouse just as fast as he could go. He crawled right in and told the Mouse family all about the terrible thing he had seen. And not a member of the family dared poke his whiskers out again that night.

* * * * *

The telephone rang just as Grandma was sitting down to supper. Now she did not like that very well for it was rather upsetting. You see Grandmas at supper have to lay down their knives and forks neatly, or set down the teapot perhaps, take off one pair of glasses and put another pair on, push back their chairs without mussing up the rug, get up and cross the room and go into the closet under the stairs, take up the receiver and say, "Hello, yes, this is Mrs. Snookes." It is quite a job to answer the telephone unless you are young and spry. That evening she was tired and did not hurry. The bell rang two or three times before she got to the telephone.

"Hello! yes, this is Mrs. Snookes."

"What! No, Baby is not here. She went home with her Father directly from church, I suppose."

"Certainly not."

"No indeed."

"What did you say?"

"Why, yes, of course, the child is at home, where else could she be at this time of night, nearly seven o'clock?"

"Why, not there? What do you mean?"

"But where is the child?"

"Have you notified the police?"

"Come right around and get my car and run round Critters Creek till you find my Grandchild. I won't have that baby lost, do you hear me?"

Grandma laid down the receiver.

Baby was lost. They had all gone to church together that evening, Grandma and Daddy and the little boys and the Littlest One, just a wee tot, but so good and quiet they often took her to church and she would just snuggle down and go to sleep and wake up when it was time to go home. Why hadn't they all gone home together? Probably each one thought the Baby was with somebody else, and Daddy never could go till all the money was counted and he took the collection bag home with him to put away safe till it went to the bank. But where was the Baby? Grandma was getting pretty scared, the more she thought about her. Had she been stolen? Taken away off somewhere? Whenever would they see the dear little thing again? Oh dear, oh dear! thought Grandma. She did not go back and eat any more supper that night; nothing tasted good with the Baby lost.

Certainly there was a pretty lively time the next two or three hours. How busy the telephone was, how fast the automobiles ran round, how quickly people talked, how worried they all were! Cook threw her apron over her head and sat right down and cried. "Sure the darlin' is dead entirely," she sobbed, rocking herself back and forth, "May the Saints protect us all." Cook was Irish, the only girl in Critters Creek that came from County Cork. The name of her old home and the name of her new one both begin with the same letters, you see. She thought that was good luck (the Irish think a great deal about luck.) While cook sat there crying the rest of the family were more active. The aunts heated blankets at the fire; the uncles went to see what the Mine Rescue Boss could do about finding Baby, the cousins ran round to all the neighbors to see if they knew where the Darling was, one of them ran to the Commissary, another to the doctors, the preachers, the teachers, the railroad station, the garage, the garbage-removers. Mother and Father never did know what they did that distracted evening. It was a terrible time. How everybody hurried and worried and scurried! But not a trace of the Baby could they find. Suddenly Grandma had a bright idea. Grandmas do sometimes, you know, even though they are very, very old. This one was nearly fifty, but, as Cook said, "the Misses has got a head on her like a tack!" She surely had a splendid idea this time.

"Let's go and look in the church," she said; "it's just possible the poor little thing has got locked in there."

So off they all went to the sexton's house, got the keys, opened the door, turned on the lights and looked all round. What do you think they saw! There curled up comfortably on the back pew right by the door, where the Church Mouse had seen her, lay the Baby, fast asleep.

The only creature that knew all the time that Baby was safe and sound was the only creature that could not tell about it—the Church Mouse!

The Carpenter of Nazareth.

Ruth Bell, age 13.

(The Editor of the Young Folks' Department receives so many good poems from the Southern Churchman's big family of children that she is going to put them into a special Little Poet's Corner. The Little Poets must be under fifteen years of age, and the poems must be original. The Editor will be glad to have so many poems submitted that the Corner will be full every week. Here is the first.)

Today I went to church, because
On Sunday I always do,
To hear them read that Good Old Book
And hear the sermon too.

I heard how once He stilled a storm
On the Lake of Galilee,
And healed sick folks, and worked at the bench
Of a carpenter, just like me.

To think that He worked in Nazareth,
Each day, like other men,
He, who'll be King of Glory
When He shall come again!

But, still, I like to think of that,
When at the bench I bend,
At work, and that work seems so long
I think it will never end.

I think of Him swinging the hammer,
Working like other men,
And sawing the wood and drilling the holes,
And it seems easier, then.

We all have our own picture of Him,
Some think of Him as a King,
Some think of Him as a healer,
That to all His peace He does bring.
Some think of Him as a Shepherd,
Some, as a Prince of Peace,
Whichever He is, we all are sure,
His blessings will never cease.

But I think of Him as a carpenter,
Bending o'er the bench, the way
Other men do, and I'm glad to know
That He worked as I do, every day.

Sticking To It.

Albert felt very proud as he climbed onto the seat of the hay-rake. He slapped the lines on old Nellie's back and she started off slowly.

Father needn't have worried about his getting tired. He was eight years old now and he'd show father how he could stick to a thing. Raking hay was only fun, anyway.

Back and forth across the long field Albert drove old Nellie. Every few yards he pressed down on the foot-lever that lifted the big rake-teeth in the air and let the hay drop in the wind-row. How sweet the clover hay smelled! How bright and warm the sun shone! Albert was enjoying himself. Why had father been afraid he would not stick to it, he wondered.

Back and forth. Back and forth. Albert wondered what time it was. It was getting hot now. How the sun's rays did beat down on his head. "S'pose it's good hay weather, though," he said, aloud. His leg was getting pretty tired pushing down that old lever. It went harder than it did at first. Guess I've pushed it a thousand times, he thought.

Back and forth. Back and forth. It wasn't fun now. It was work. But he was going to stick to it. "I'll show father he can depend on me," he said to himself.

Still it seemed a long time until the whistle blew at noon. The big hay-field was nearly all raked up now. How nice the long straight wind-rows looked. Albert unhitched old Nellie from the rake, climbed on her back and rode to the barn. He put her in her stall and gave her her dinner before he went to his own.

After dinner there was a half hour's rest in the hammock. Then Albert and his father went back to the fields to work.

"About two hours more raking and you'll be through, my boy," his father said, patting him on the shoulder. "You've certainly stuck to it like a man today and I'm going to have a surprise for you tonight."

The two hours passed quickly for Albert that afternoon, he was so busy wondering what the surprise would be. There was one thing he wanted more than anything else in the world, but he didn't dare hope for that.

Yet, as his father came in the gate that night, Albert knew that his dearest wish had come true. Straight up the steps his father came and dropped in the boy's lap a soft, round, wriggling object, which instantly began to lick Albert's face widely, with a wet pink tongue.

The boy's arms tightened around what he knew at once to be the smartest and most beautiful collie puppy in the whole wide world.

"Oh, father," cried Albert, and then stopped. He was too happy for words.

"I know you've wanted a dog for a long time," his father said, sitting down on the porch, beside the boy, "but I was afraid you weren't old enough to own one. You know, if he's to be your dog, you must take care of him."

"Oh, I will," put in Albert. "I'll take the very best of care of him." He hugged the puppy tighter.

"I thought," continued his father, "that if we got you a dog you might neglect it after a while, but when I saw the way you stuck to that raking today, I decided you could be trusted to stick to other things. Get down, you little scamp," he added, as the puppy attempted to lick his face as well as Albert's.

"Scamp!" cried the boy, "Oh, father, I'm going to call him Scamp. Don't you think that will be a good name?"

"Yes," agreed his father, "and now let's find a place for him to sleep and then I guess it'll be time for you to go to bed yourself. You've had quite a busy day."—E. G. Baker, in The Boys' Weekly.

The Weather Man.

The Ice man always brings to you
Just how much Ice you ask him to,
And Shoe men change your shoes and boots
Until they find a pair that suits.

Likewise the busy Grocery man
Fills orders truly as he can;
While all our tradesmen everywhere
Are chosen with the greatest care.

From those who try to be polite
And always fill our orders right;
But I am sure that I can't see
What use a Weather man can be!

For he can't change a rainy day,
No matter how much cash you pay,
Nor make the sun shine warm and clear
When picnic days are drawing near.

Nor keep the ice all thick and fine
Through all the happy skating time,
Nor make a snow-storm, soft and white,
Nor bring the stars through clouds at night!

And I can't think, now, say, can you?
Of anything that he can do?
So, when I'm grown, I do not plan
To ever be a Weather Man!

A Bright Bit of Blue.

"I wonder," said Miss White, the jolly little teacher of the first grade, "I wonder how many of you had your eyes open when you walked back to school this noon."

It was just before closing time on a winter afternoon. The children had become listless but every hand was quickly raised at the question. They were sure they had not walked with their eyes closed.

"Then," said the teacher, "perhaps you saw the same bright bit of blue that I saw. I will let you guess what it was."

Several hands went up.

"It was Jimmie's blue stocking cap," guessed a boy on the back row when the teacher nodded to him.

"No, it was a brighter blue than that."

"Was it Margaret's new dress?"

"No, my blue object had some white about it."

"Was it the sky and the clouds?" asked another boy.

"No," said Miss White, "if your eyes had been wide open you would have seen that the sky is gray today. This bright bit of blue has also a bit of black. We will have one more guess."

Virginia Kincaid on the front seat was waving her hand frantically.

"You may tell us what it is, Virginia."

Now Virginia had formed the bad habit of raising her hand when the others did, whether she had an answer ready or not. This was one of those times when she had not stopped to think. Slowly she rose to her feet wondering what to say, when—the bell rang!

"Never mind, Virginia, we must put our desks in order now. You keep your guess a secret and we will let you tell us tomorrow morning what you think it is."

Virginia sat down with a relieved sigh. She was sure she could think of the right thing by morning and she promised herself that always after that she would do her thinking first.

She was eating her supper when she heard a jay bird calling, "Please, please, please," it seemed to say.

"I wonder what can be the matter with that bird," said Virginia's mother, "it has been calling that way for a long time."

Virginia, too, wondered about it. She went to the back door and listened. Surely the bird was in trouble, but it was almost dark and Virginia did not want to go out to see about it. She would have to put on her rubbers, her cloak and tam—it was so much trouble. Still, there must be something wrong. Finally she wrapped herself up and went out into the growing darkness. She could just make out the fluttering bird on the feeding perch.

"Why, you poor thing!" she exclaimed, "you have caught your foot in the wire suet basket."

Carefully she loosened the bird's foot. She stood a moment with the freed jay bird in her hand and stared hard at it.

"You're it!" she cried, pointing her finger at him, "you're the bright bit of blue." The bird did not deny it. "Tell me, did you fly over the schoolhouse about noon?" And the jay as he flew upward said something that sounded exactly like, "Deed-I-did, 'deed-I-did." —Selected.

We have more to do with others in our words than in almost any other way, so that the Golden Rule is to be applied especially to speech. We do not want others to speak unkindly of us or harshly to us, we do not want them to ridicule or mock us, or find fault with us. Therefore the Golden Rule tells us we are not to do these things to them.—A. R. Wells.

MRS. E. C. PULLIAM.

MRS. E. C. PULLIAM, nee Louise Ashton Vaughan, died suddenly in her home in Roanoke, Va., in the early morning of May 13, 1924. For several years her health had not been vigorous, but her earnest spirit enabled her to do much for her family, friends and Church. She retired in apparently normal health, and passed away without indication of ailment. The doctors state that the end came without pain. Her husband, E. C. Pulliam, preceded her to the grave several years ago.

Mrs. Pulliam leaves several brothers, one sister and two daughters, Mrs. Robert Trucks and Miss Elizabeth Pulliam. She had made her home in Roanoke, Va., for a number of years, but was originally from Hanover county. While in Roanoke she made a wide circle of friends and was most active in the work of the Episcopal Church there.

Large Confirmation Class.

In Christ Church, Vicksburg, on Sunday, May 11, Bishop Bratton preached and confirmed a class of thirty-seven, presented by the rector, the Rev. Charles E. Woodson.

Dr. Woodson during his ten years' ministry at Christ Church, has presented two hundred and forty-one for confirmation, averaging over twenty-four to a class and probably no other church in the Diocese has been able to attain such a fine record.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Death of Deaconess Graham.

Annie Johnson Graham, Deaconess, entered Higher Life on May 2, after a long illness at Orlando. For many years a helpless invalid, Deaconess Graham bore her heavy cross of pain and infirmity with brave patience.

Her early life was spent in Philadelphia and she received her training in the Deaconess' House of that city, but her active work as deaconess was in South Carolina. Later she and her sister, Miss Elizabeth B. Graham, made their home in Sewanee, Tenn., but they have lived in Orlando, Florida, through recent years. She was buried in the churchyard of St. James the Less, Philadelphia.

A NEW MOVEMENT IN THE CHURCH.

testified to the conspicuous efficiency and absence of friction with which the board has been functioning since its creation.

"In other words, this is not such an inquiry as has been set going by the National Conference on the Christian Way of Life. It is not duplicating that admirable attempt to stir thought in the outer fringes of a public, which shall gradually press in toward the centre to supply with all possible promptness the best digested statement of Christianity in all its implications which can command general assent. The results, when finally formulated, will be disseminated by publication and by means of a lecture campaign running through a chain of principal cities.

"The members of the Council are not cherishing any pride of opinion in their adherence to the movement, or attempting to put forward a new program of evangelization.

"Though the movement is designed to keep in touch with the churches, it arises outside of them; it does not look toward union or federation, though taking due notice of those tendencies as they develop. It addresses the Church public as a part of the general public of practical-minded men and women, responsive, in whatever mood, to Christian motive. The subject proposed for study, in the words of one of the members, Dr. Ernest M. Stires of St. Thomas' Church, 'fires the enthusiasm of Churchmen and non-Churchmen alike. In its theme they will find the signal for a common advance and that advance is needed'."

Council membership includes Herbert L. Satterlee, Rudolph H. Kissel, H. B. Thayer, Bishop Shipman, Dr. Henry van Dyke, Mrs. Robert E. Spear, and Major General Mason M. Patrick, U. S. A. The Council is limited at present to twenty-one members, but, affiliated with it, groups of representative men and women are forming in other parts of the country as associates interested in forwarding the Council's declared aims.

Northern Convocation.

The spring meeting of the Northern Convocation of the Diocese was held at St. Jude's Church, Monroe City, opening with Evening Prayer April 29, with the Bishop of the Diocese and ten of his clergy in the chancel. After a short informal address by the Bishop, the Rev. Edward S. White, rector Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, spoke on "The True Objective of Christian Social Service.

Wednesday morning Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop, with sermon by the Rev. Charles F. Edwards, Dean. A short business session was held at the rectory, followed by a conference on the Church School Service League, led by the Rev. J. Boyd Cox, Diocesan Director. After a bountiful luncheon at Odd Fellows' Hall, the afternoon was given over to the Woman's Auxiliary meeting. Mrs. J. P. Kem, of Macon, presided, and Mrs. E. F. Cushing, of Webster Groves, was the principal speaker. After a short sacred concert, Evening Prayer was said. Mrs. Cushing spoke on, "The Parents and the Church." The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. H. Decker, rector of St. Paul's Church, Mexico. Thursday, St. Philip and St. James' Day, the fifty-seventh anniversary of Bishop Tuttle's consecration, Holy Communion was celebrated at nine A. M. The closing conference was on "The Church School," led by the Rev. Luther B. Franck, of Monroe City. The Convocation adjourned to meet at St. Paul's Church, Palmyra, in the fall.

Hospitality was the outstanding feature of the Convocation. Homes were thrown open and everything possible was done for the enjoyment of the visitors.

A Morning-Glory Seed.

One spring morning a little girl dropped a morning-glory seed into a hole in the ground. "Morning-glory seed," she said, "hurry and grow—grow until you are a tall vine covered with green leaves and lovely flowers."

The earth was dry, for there had been no rain for a long time. The poor little seed could not grow at all.

For nine long days and nine long nights it said to the ground around it, "O ground, please give me a few drops of water to soften my hard brown coat. Then it will burst open and set free my two green seed-leaves, so I can begin to be a vine."

But the ground said, "That you must ask of the rain."

So the seed called to the rain, "O rain," it said, "please come down and wet the ground around me so that it may give me a few drops of water. Then will my hard brown coat grow softer and softer until at last it can burst open and set my two green seed-leaves free and I can begin to be a vine."

But the rain said, "I cannot, unless the clouds hang over."

So the seed said to the clouds,

"O clouds, please hang lower and let the rain come down and wet the ground around me, so that it may give me a few drops of water. Then will my hard, brown coat grow softer and softer until at last it can burst open and set free my two green seed-leaves and I can begin to be a vine."

But the clouds said, "The sun must hide first."

So the seed said to the sun, "O sun, please hide for a little while, so that the clouds may hang lower, and the rain come down and wet the ground around me. Then will the ground give me a few drops of water and my hard brown coat will grow softer and softer, until at last it can burst open and set free my two green seed-leaves and I can begin to be a vine."

"I will," said the sun, and he was gone in a flash. Then the clouds began to hang lower and lower.

The rain began to fall faster and faster. The ground began to get wetter and wetter. The seed-coat began to grow softer and softer, until at last open it burst, and out came two bright green seed-leaves.

The Morning-glory seed had begun to be a vine.—Elizabeth V. Brown.

Noon in My Garden.

Julia W. Cockcroft.

At dawn when the grass is wet with dew
God walks my garden through and through.

I know, for I've seen the flowers raise
Their sleepy heads to gaze and praise.

God walks my garden, too, at night.
I know, for I've seen the fireflies light
Their tiny torches to guide Him through.
Noon in my garden proves it true.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

For all of us, the weakest and the humblest, there is a place and a time for special service to be rendered to the eternal King, Who condescends not merely to expect but to need it.—Canon Liddon.

Life and love so close are interweaving
That none can live and yet be por-tionless,
And days must come with hours all retrieving
The dreary years of unfound happiness.

For every hour that passes, there is a record,
For every hour that strikes, there is a joy,
For every hour that comes, there is a hope.

—From the Italian.

"Souls are built as temples are—
Based on truth's eternal law,
Sure and steadfast, without flaw.
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and up the building goes;
Every thing finds its place,
Every hard thing lends a grace,
Every hand may make or mar."

O Lord, with whom is the fountain of Life, give us all, we entreat Thee, grace and good will to follow the leadings of Thy most Holy Spirit. Let the dew of Thy grace descend and abide upon us, refreshing that which droops, reviving that which is ready to perish;
until the day when all Thy faithful people shall drink of the river of Thy pleasures. Amen.—L. G. Rossetti.

Thou hast power in prayer, and thou standest today among the most potent ministers in the universe that God has made. Thou hast power over angels, they will fly at thy will. Thou hast power over fire and water, and the elements of earth. Thou hast power to make thy voice heard beyond the stars;
where the thunders die out in silence thy voice shall make the echoes of eternity.—C. H. Spurgeon.

RICHMOND, VA., JUNE 7, 1924.

No. 23.

"WHAT WILL THIS BABBLER SAY?"

In entering upon our duties as editor, it would be the assumption of a confidence that we do not feel, if we should use that note of easy assurance that seems to come naturally to editors, and proceed forthwith to point out the short and easy path to a solution of the problems that today disturb the mind of the Church. That there is a widespread feeling that some dire catastrophe in the life of the Church is impending, it would be idle to deny. We can only say to the readers of the Southern Churchman that we do not share that feeling. In the sympathetic study for many years of the origin and growth of the Christian faith, we have ourselves weathered too many storms to be greatly disturbed by what the sailors would call "the bit of thick weather" that is on us at this hour.

After nineteen centuries of history and after unnumbered vicissitudes the Church's grasp of the truth as it is in Jesus, is today more like that of the first two centuries than it has been at any time since then, which is merely to say that the ethical character of the Gospel is better understood and more thoroughly appropriated.

It is perhaps this very emphasis upon Christianity as a life, bringing, as it does, the quickening vigor of a new hope and a new vision, that tempts the mind to undervalue the theological aspects of the faith. Not to know history is to be forever a child; and surely it would be childish to forget that it was that very theology alone which gave worth to the individual. The very slowness of the growth of the universal hope is perhaps the surest earnest of the final strength and vitality of that which it will produce.

When one has followed the Christ along the Galilean highways, and seen His creative touch make the dead trunk of a broken life bud and blossom into the fruitage of selfless service, it would seem to us a useless task to try to convince such an one that the potentialities of the Saviour of the World had existed in the sin-sodden race of men, or that His birth was as that of any other child of earth, even though the home to which he came was as sweet and clean as that in which Mary gave a new meaning to motherhood.

Despite the importunate insistence of men whose integrity it would be an impertinence to question, there is no more reason to fear that the Gospel narrative will ever need to banish from its pages the Angel of the Annunciation, or devitalize the resurrection into something less than the triumphant and tangible conquest of death, than that the majesty and charm of Christ's person should fade like the pictured face in an old daguerrotype.

We have neither taste nor talent for controversy, but we have every desire and determination to share with the readers of the Southern Churchman our reasons for holding to the ancient sanctions and the ancient sanctities of the Christian faith. If in such effort there should ever appear bitterness and intolerance, we beg the readers to bear in mind that the presence of these in our pages must be put down as our failure to be true to Him Whose life knew neither.

EDUCATION IN A DEMOCRACY

We have drifted far away from the ancient ideal in education. That ideal fixed the goal in a word, virtue, i. e., manhood. The student in any true sense started out to find his destiny. The first quest was to attain to a conception of what constituted a man. This ideal of education was utterly unrelated to religion. In Greece and Rome it was indeed necessary to discard both the belief and practice of religion before a beginning could be made. This was a necessary step from the fact that the religions of Greece and Rome, apart from their degrading tendencies, did not deal in universals. The Gods were the gods of the land. But neither Plato nor Aristotle was able to find in philosophy the universal note denied them in religion. The "complete man" of the ancient world was the privileged citizen. Ethics never ceased to be provincial. Manners and morals were one. The basis of right living was, privilege. The world was made for the elect.

The Stoics sensed the failure of the other systems and began to talk of man, but with them the political system forced the individual back upon himself. Truth was to be found within the man; but the truth was imprisoned there and could not get out into the world of men. They found the precious metal of truth, but the metal was yet in its fossil state, and they had no instrument at hand to free the gold. An increasing pessimism marks its history, and suicide became the accepted solution of life's mystery.

The history of education under the Church is again the story of failure. Having succumbed to the Pagan State whose ethics at its highest was the ethics of privileged citizenship, the Church found its way to life blocked by the Pagan State, and offered salvation as a substitute for suicide. The collapse of the Church as a universal institution opened the way to the many systems of the modern age. Neither citizenship, nor self-culture, nor training for salvation beyond the bounds of earthly life, could compel the allegiance of men.

The idea of what should constitute the goal of endeavor still held the thought, and in a time when the conquest of nature was the absorbing and exhilarating dream of mankind, the goal seemed clear at last. Education was to be training for success in the material world. The ideal man was the one who could wrest from Nature her secrets or appropriate the profits of conquest.

It is a startling fact that in a world that is clamoring for democracy, the education offered is largely training for the exploitation of the weak. It scoffs at religion, and is oblivious of any ethical content of life. The State taxes itself to train its citizens to prey upon one another and preaches a shallow patriotism that declares that the myriad ills of such an existence can be remedied by the exercise of the franchise.

With all the apparatus of teaching ready to hand, with ready access to the docile mind of every child, there has been found no state brave enough to teach as a paramount principle the worth of man.

Popular education in its spirit and purpose is a denial of the very principle of democracy; for when exploitation is the method; and warfare, whether commercial, racial or national, is the means, there is no possibility of an ordered existence save through the armed strength of a centralized government.

The question as to the assigning in any true system of education the place to be occupied by the affections and the intellect, is not to be answered by making one or the other master of the situation.

Democracy (to use no larger term) is a principle. If it mean anything at all, it is the vehement assertion of the dignity and worth of man. This man is conceived of not as an abstraction, but as individual, present and potent. Of so much worth does it count this individual, that while it declares he exists for society, it also affirms that society exists for him. In a true democracy these truths are of equal worth. To deny either is to deny the fundamental principle of democracy. Surely then these should be truths offered for the acceptance of youth. Again, the true patriotism can only be the application to a particular group of a principle universally true. If a democracy be built upon the assumption of the worth of man, then any patriotism worthy of the name, must take into account the race of men. A patriotism that arrays a democracy against the welfare of any race or nation is a denial of its own birthright. It is still true that "spirits are not finely touched but to fine issues" and the bastard brand of patriotism which shows itself in provincial prejudice, and selfish class interest is born of an utter ignorance of the very genius of democracy. The same passion which shows itself in partisan love and noisy declamation should and could find a nobler expression in devotion to democratic ideals.

It is just here that we find not merely the justification, but the supreme necessity of schools distinctly Christian. The public school can only reflect the aims and ethics of those who look to the public for approval upon their efforts. There is one Christian school that we know of that has as its motto: "The full measure of manhood." It knows but one standard in class-room, dormitory and on the campus, loyalty to Him Who was the one full-grown Man of the race. Shirking in the class-room, bullying in the dormitory, dirty ball on the athletic field, all fall under one category, disloyalty.

No extension of privilege, and no march of ideas will ever do away with the necessity of leadership, and it is to the Christian Schools of our land that we must look for those who shall lead men "on to the bound of the waste, on to the city of God."

A SONG OF A SHIRT

There is a strange fatality that seems to dog the steps of a party name. Like the shirt of Nessus it begins to destroy the body it enfolds. The word catholic has an outlook as wide as Christian charity. It speaks of open doors and tolerant kindness. Catholic as a party name has come to denote a group who have hypnotized themselves into thinking that the universal Church means nothing more nor less than "all of us."

Agnostic, a perfectly harmless adjective when applied to a state of mind, becomes a virulent mental poison when attached to a group, and comes at last to signify "I don't believe that anybody except myself, knows anything." Fundamental is a word that signifies that which relates to the foundations. Fundamentalist as a party name carries those it enfolds even below the foundations, and demands that they live in the rather unhealthy atmosphere and half-light of the cellar.

Modern in Tennyson's day used to imply that we were "the ancients of the earth" and "heirs of all the ages." Modernist as a party name demands that he who bears it, blot out the past and make today bright and shining. As yesterday is of the past, the "touching up" must be done daily. Modernism has had but a brief history as yet, but it seems to promise to its elect a world of wet paint.

In every mind there is the tendency to favor by neglect the weakness of an undeveloped part, and to cultivate the natural strength of temperament till strength itself breed deformity. Catholic aspiration needs the humility of science in the presence of the unknown. Science needs to remember that the soul has hands that reach beyond the things of sense. The zeal of untutored loyalty must beware lest it strangle in its fierce grip the thing it loves. The eagerness to force the fruitage of the tree of life must take heed lest it kill with pruning knife the tree itself.

The word of caution to every honest seeker after truth is forever given by St. Paul: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are worthy of reverence, whatsoever things are of good report, think on these things," which roughly paraphrased would read: "Don't forget that reverence is ever the handmaid of Truth, and be ye gossips of good things."

THE CHURCH IN VIRGINIA

Someday there will be one who will tell the story of the Church in Virginia. It will have to be the song of the native-born. If St. Paul could have written to the Christians here he would have sent greetings to his friends as to "Philemon and to the Church that is in thy house," for surely it was a home Christianity. The grace at meals was a real blessing. Braxton Bryan used to call it the Jamestown Grace, and says that it was part of the equipment of the first colonists, and had been in use in every home along James River ever since.

Christ was ever "Our Blessed Master," and so real was the note it sounded, that even the slave recognized that his own master and mistress were but servants too, and those slaves always spoke of God as "Ole Marster," their master's Master and theirs.

The Prayer Books were never left in the church, but always brought home; and if bad roads or bitter weather kept the family from church, there was always a service in the home. Prayer was as familiar to the mind of a child as study or play. It would have been hard to find a boy who could not tell of how he came into the sitting-room late at nights, and found that his mother, tired from the labors of the day, had kneeled down and finally fallen asleep upon her knees. God pity the Virginia boy who has never seen his mother thus asleep.

In the public worship of the church there was a simplicity that puzzled many who saw it for the first time. There was little need of symbol in worship for those who had about them the living examples of abiding loyalty to One they called their Blessed Master. Reverence was so filled with love that it drew near to the Saviour with a feeling more of affection than of awe.

The minister sustained as personal a relation to his people as did the family doctor, and an all-night vigil in the house of illness was as natural to one as to the other. There was seldom talk of ecclesiastical differences. To the native-born the Church represented his spiritual ancestry, and to him it would have been as unseemly to boast of the Church's high lineage as to parade in the conversational vestments of ancestor-worship. To the eye of the critic it might have seemed a narrow and a narrowing manner of Christian living, but out of such homes came the men who founded every mission of the Church in the dark and neglected spots of earth.

IMPRESSIONS OF MY RECENT TRIP TO THE NEAR EAST

By Dr. John R. Mott

EUROPE is at work. The spirit of the people has changed. There is renewed vitality and hope. Real leadership is being shown by rulers and governments. There are more signs of improvement than at any time since the war."

This is a summary of the statement issued to the religious press of the country by Dr. John R. Mott, who has just returned from an extended trip in Europe, Northern Africa and Western Asia. Dr. Mott made the trip as Chairman of the International Missionary Council. He is also General Secretary of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.'s of North America and Chairman of the World Student Federation, which includes student organizations of upwards of forty countries. He traveled widely in Europe each year during and also since the war. On his recent trip he crossed the Mediterranean six times. In his statement Dr. Mott said:

"First, it has been my lot to travel widely in Europe each year not only during, but also since the War. On my recent journey, which took me to all parts of Europe as well as to Northern Africa and Western Asia, I saw more signs of improvement than I have observed in any preceding year since the great upheaval.

"One sign is the marked economic and financial stabilization which is taking place in a number of countries within the past year.

"Another indication is the fact that the European peoples are so largely at work—in the fields, in the industries, and in the work of reconstruction.

"Still another proof is that of the greatly improved means of communication. In constant travel by rail in eighteen countries, and which also took me across the Mediterranean six times, I did not miss a single appointment, although I had scarcely an hour of margin at any point.

"The most impressive evidence, however, is the changed spirit of the people. On every hand we witnessed their renewed vitality and hope.

Second, real leadership is being exhibited by the rulers and governments of many of the lands of Eastern Europe and the Levant.

Although we may disagree with almost every plank of the policy of present-day Russia, we cannot but be impressed by the courage and aggressiveness with which her Government have charted and held to their totally new and alarming course.

"We may have regarded with questioning and consternation the radical measures of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, but we cannot but admire his initiative and steady will power in setting precedents rather than being content to follow century-long examples.

"Well may we praise the noble character and the progressive views of the young and able King Boris of Bulgaria.

"I received also a most favorable impression of King Fuad of Egypt and his grand old Premier, Zaghloul Pasha, who are surely leading that ancient land out into a new day.

"Czechoslovakia under her remarkable pair of old and young statesmen—(what country has two leaders who surpass President Masaryk and Foreign Minister Benes?)—is the beacon light in the midst of tempestuous parts of Central Europe.

"Reunited Poland, brilliant Poland—after centuries of cruelly enforced division and still grappling heroically with baffling difficulties—is surely coming into her own.

"Mussolini, defying with magnificent audacity all traditions and conventions, still appeals to the imagination and continues to command the sacrificial devotion of the new generation of Italy.

"After years of uncertainty, hesitation, and paralysis, it is indeed inspiring, whether we agree with them or not, to watch these rulers and leaders who have turned their backs on the past, fixed their eyes on new goals, and are forging ahead no matter how many oppose them or how few go with them.

"Third, among all the countries of Europe there is possibly none which just now is carrying such heavy burdens and which has a better claim on our generous support than Greece.

"The last twelve years with her have been one long agony. The Balkan Wars, the Great War, and the aftermath of the war have left her people exhausted, divided, and distracted. And yet this little land with only 5,000,000 people has, within recent months, taken in 1,000,000 refugees—an unprecedented achievement.

"They are straining themselves to the very limit as a Government and as a people. They must have our help to turn their difficult corner. They still have half a million men, women and children living in squalor, hunger and despair unknown elsewhere in the world today. I cannot speak too highly of the character of the cooperation being rendered by the League of Nations' Commission under the unselfish and efficient direction of Henry Morgenthau.

Fourth, it is gratifying, yet humbling, to see the remarkable hold which America has on all the peoples of Europe and the Near East.

Of course the word 'peoples' advisedly. 'What kind of hold,' you ask? A hold on their hearts, most manifestly. A hold also on their imagination. If I were to express in a word the conception of America which most widely obtains among them all, it would be that they picture us to themselves the land of hope. May we never disappoint their dreams and expectations.

"What are the causes of the large place which America occupies in the hearts and in the imagination of these peoples?

"One cause is the stories which come back to all these lands from the millions, the tens of millions, of their children and grand-children who have identified themselves with the great, friendly Republic beyond the sea.

"Another cause is the irresistible appeal made to the imagination by our land of large dimensions and of limitless opportunity for all—even for the poorest and the humblest.

"Possibly a more potent factor explaining the power of the cords binding America to the very heart life of all the peoples who in the recent tragic years have suffered and borne impossible burdens, has been the generous and practical ministry of unselfishness of such typically American societies as the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Jewish Welfare Board, the National Catholic Welfare Council, and just now, in a notable way, the Near East Relief.

"Little did the millions of Americans, when we but yesterday forgot or lost ourselves in these great unselfish causes, realize that we would find ourselves today in the larger confidence and affection of whole nations and peoples, and in the midst of immeasurably greater opportunities for constructive service. God grant that we may not through ill-considered action or neglect forfeit this confidence nor miss the day of our visitation."

THE HOME CHURCH

A Part of the Address to the Annual Convention of Western Massachusetts

By the Right Reverend Thomas F. Davies, D. D.

FIRST of all I want to speak to you of the contribution which every Parish Church and Mission of all Christian Bodies should make to the life of the Nation. For one of the greatest instrumentalities of Christianity today is the Parish Church, the spiritual home of a great part of the People. Other instrumentalities of civilization have their contributions to make, and are making them: the Home Church has, I believe, an indispensable contribution to make.

A perusal of the newspapers, which supplies almost all the information on the subject that I possess, leads me to believe that there has been a grave scandal at the seat of the national government. It is easy to say—as men have said to me, “O, things are not so bad as the papers represent them!” But, on the whole, the Public Press tries to be accurate and fair, and certainly its reports of recent happenings in Washington, have been distressing. The fact alone that thousands and thousands of dollars of the national funds apparently have to be expended in these frequent Congressional investigations, suggests that something is seriously amiss; and one cannot regard the revelations that have been made as anything less than significant. If the Press reports are trustworthy, as one cannot doubt that they are, one is led to the inevitable conclusion that there have been extravagance, inefficiency and corruption. I do not believe that the government itself is corrupt, but I am forced to believe that there has been serious corruption in it. Our form of government is worked by political parties, which indeed developed very soon after the formation of the national government. There is both good and evil in the party system. There is no good in the spoils system. As a people we are greatly given to organization. One has only to look at one's morning mail to find communications from organizations formed to promote or prevent almost everything under the sun. Many organizations, such as the Rotary Club, the Kiwanis, the Shriners, the Chambers of Commerce, not only help to maintain a high ideal of mercantile and professional life, but also do much positive, altruistic good. The word one most frequently hears in addresses before them is the word “service.” But there are other organizations that have a sinister side. A recent candidate for Congress told me that he received many communications from organizations, asking whether he would pledge his support to certain benefits to special classes, and threatening that if he did not, the whole voting strength of that and affiliated organizations would be cast against him. This is certainly not in accordance with a free and impartial government, and is not really American. Probably the party system is necessary in a government by the people. Under this system one very great word has undergone a deterioration in meaning, and this is evident in popular speech. I mean the word “Politics.” Politics meant primarily the science of government, the administration of national and public affairs, but in our everyday speech it has come to mean largely the art of winning elections or the obtaining of special benefits. I believe that we must continue the party system, but we must purge that system of one frightful present evil, namely, the acceptance of such huge gifts for campaign purposes as involve a future obligation to appoint unfit persons to office.

Back of the parties are the people. The American people, I am sure, are sound at heart. I firmly believe that! And yet I cannot be blind to a certain deterioration that has been insidiously going on in them. It is partly no doubt the result of long years of almost unrestricted immigration, from which the impurity has not yet been wholly purged nor the good entirely assimilated. In part it is an aftermath of the World War. In part, perhaps, it is caused by the tremendous accumulation of the world's gold in this country. And it is also a not unnatural result of our very rapid rise, our sudden jump in less than one hundred and fifty years from straggling, sparsely settled, poor colonies into the most powerful and richest of nations. My observation may very likely be challenged and disagreed with. Let me give you one or two illustrations of what I mean. That really great book, Lord Bryce's “American Commonwealth,” was first published in 1888. In it (Vol. II, p. 643) he says this: “Feeling the law to be their own work, the people are disposed to obey the law * * * It is the best result that can be ascribed to the direct participation of the people in their government that they have the love of the maker for his work, that every citizen looks upon a statute as a regulation made by himself for his own guidance no less than for that of others.”

If he were living and here, could Lord Bryce write that of us today? By the will of the people a constitutional law has been made, which they are not disposed to obey, but widely defy! Or let me take a homelier instance. In the country school-house our grandfathers and grandmothers had wooden pegs on which to hang their hats and coats and satchels. Lately I asked the Principal of one of our largest High Schools how his school would get on with pegs. He replied, “Not for one day! We must have lockers with strong locks!”

The greatest danger to American civilization and to the American Nation would be to have dishonesty penetrate generally into public and private life, tainting the obtaining and holding of public office, the administration of national trust, the conduct of business, and the life of school and home. It would be a betrayal of God—the sin of Judas, who, St. John tells us, was a thief. It would be also the betrayal of Democracy, because the foundations of Democracy are moral ones. It rests upon the character of the people. It is based upon the integrity of each citizen and voter. Where lies the real wealth and strength of our Nation? In the souls of the people. If those souls should become corrupt, then the worst conceivable form of government would be Democracy. Every people in the flush of its prosperity and pride of its strength thinks that it is going on forever. But where is the greatness of Babylon and Nineveh? “Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arpad, and the King of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?” “Where are the snows of yester year?”

“How the races troop o'er the stage in endless procession!
Persian, and Arab, and Greek, and Hun, and Roman, and Vandal,
Master the world in turn and then disappear in the darkness.”

And the reason of their fall was generally wide-spread corruption! Let us believe in the soul of the American people, but oh! let us not neglect that soul! I like those Georgian churches with their tall steeples pointing men to God. All over this land it must be the work of every parish church of whatever denomination to be emphasizing, teaching, preaching, impressing the majesty and supremacy of the moral law. Our Faith is the mainspring of our conduct, but we must not be so preoccupied with the intellectual side of Faith as to neglect conduct. We have a great national educational system, which is doing wonderful things for the mind. The Christian Church must care better than it is now doing for the moral life of the people. The standards of right and truth must be universally upheld. Every dweller in this land must be taught not to lie and not to steal. Without virtue there can be no true liberty.

What was so very striking about the primitive Church? Its moral power! In the “Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire” Gibbon says (Chap. XV.) that “the primitive Christian demonstrated his faith by his virtues.” It must be so still; and all the churches, scattered all over the land, must be producing Christians—men and women—who will live righteously, deal honestly, vote conscientiously, campaign irreproachably, and serve staintlessly. Patriotism alone calls upon the whole organized Christian forces of this nation to wage war upon dishonesty and corruption; to impress upon their people that dishonesty is not only the betrayal of God and man, but that it is treason against the Country. The corrupt man is a traitor to Democracy. The survival and prosperity of our Republic depend upon general righteousness. There is but one end to general corruption, a wrecked nation!

In so far as these words of mine shall gain attention, I make my solemn appeal to all the forces of Christ to restate His Holy Name in the Nation; to develop a moral life indwelt by the Spirit of God; to maintain the supremacy of enlightened conscience; to hold up Jesus Christ as the Word of the Father, the Word Who expresses His Will; and to repeat again and again with all possible emphasis that that Will is for righteousness. Thy Kingdom come! Thy Will be done on earth as it is in heaven! The opportunity and the obligation of the Christian Church is to take of the things of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the aid of the ever-living Spirit, and “to show them to each generation in their ever-fresh and ever-developing application.”

The Peace of the Church

From the Convention Address of

THE RT. REV. ETHELBERT TALBOT, D. D.

The peace of the Church this last year has been somewhat disturbed by an unfortunate publicity given through the public press to the utterances of a few brethren who have felt it to be their duty to tell their congregations what they did not believe rather than to edify them and strengthen their faith by preaching the positive Gospel for which the Church has borne her witness through the Christian centuries.

Our branch of the Church Catholic has been regarded as a haven of spiritual rest amidst the discordant and negative theories and opinions entertained by many outside of her fold. Through her historic creeds and formularies as contained in her Book of Common Prayer, she has claimed to interpret Holy Scripture and give expression to her faith in language clear and definite as to the historical facts on which belief in God as revealed in Christ is founded. For clergymen even to call in question statements of the Creed, regarding the person of Our Saviour and His Incarnation would naturally arouse the fears, if not the indignation, of many of the faithful. As a result of this tendency in certain quarters when the House of Bishops met in Dallas last November they found awaiting them an earnest petition signed by a great number of our laymen, and among them men of distinction and leadership in the Church, requesting the Bishop as their Fathers in God, and the appointed guardians of the faith, to issue some word of reassurance and let the people know just where the Church stood in matters to be believed among us. Therefore, in the Pastoral Letter which the Bishops set forth in response to this appeal, they felt it to be their duty simply to reaffirm in language that could not be misunderstood the clear statements of the Creed and their implications. The reaction to that Pastoral Letter gave abundant evidence that it was needed. We live in an age of broad and generous toleration. The Church has always allowed much liberty of interpretation, but, of course, there are limits beyond which speculation cannot go if the faith is to be held inviolate. Of course, a minister of the Christian religion who is led by his conscience to deny what he was ordained to preach and maintain must cease to hold office and surrender his commission. The Church's great object is to help and not to hurt; to get men into the Church and not put them out; she allows large room for differences of opinion and various schools of thought. But it should be repugnant to any well ordered conscience to remain in a Church should the time come when he can no longer believe what he promised to defend and was solemnly commissioned to preach.

Our Lord has said, "If any man will do God's will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." The law of Christian love and forbearance is the will of God. It has been said that Christianity reduced to its simplest and most intelligible form needs only two words to express it, namely, "Follow Me." If all Christian men would give up the attempt so utterly vain and futile to explain Christ and to understand how He came into the world and how He left it, and devote their attention to following Him, they would soon know more about the person of Christ than they had ever known before, and they would have put Christianity in a position to conquer the world. Let us hope and believe that this controversy will be overruled as so many similar controversies have been in the past for good, and will result in the stronger confirmation of the faith. Our Lord has promised that the gates of hell shall never prevail against His Church, and when we look back over the past and think of the storms His Church has weathered and the victories she has won, we may well feel assured that the eternal verities which cannot be shaken will remain.

There has always been in our Church a large liberty of thought, opinion and interpretation. As one of our own Bishops has wisely said, we do not wish to see the Church broken up into sects wherein each contains only those people who think and believe just alike. In such a historic Church as ours liberty should be allowed. The Church is larger than the point of view of any group, party or age. Our Church is not a sect. She cannot be complete without the inclusion of many phases of thought and spiritual life. Her dominant note is not exclusion, but inclusion. To make this possible, we must have mutual confidence, confidence in each other's soundness of faith as each interprets it in his integrity and loyalty. A family wherein the brothers and sisters call each other liars and hypocrites, is not longer a family though they live in the same house.

At present the matter of chief importance is that we have an atmosphere so full of mutual confidence, sympathy, patience and love and truth that we may all be led into a common spirit and through that into a full knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. There has always been and ought to be in the Church, whose aim is no less than that of bringing all people into her glad allegiance, a broad, generous and loving spirit of toleration of all legitimate truth. No one would wish to see the Church less broad and comprehensive and hospitable to all truth than she is. But we must learn to hold the truth in love that suffereth long and is kind; a love that is not easily provoked and thinketh no evil.

DR. JOHNSON'S PRAYER FOR GUIDANCE.

Mr. Editor:

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, in Companionable Books, has one chapter on Dr. Samuel Johnson, whom he calls "A Sturdy Believer." It contains a prayer written by the Doctor for his own private use, which I have thought it would be well to publish in the Churchman when there is so much controversy going on just now in the Church between Fundamentalists and Modernists about "unprofitable and dangerous inquiries, and difficulties vainly curious and doubts impossible to be solved." I am sure if this prayer were used daily by our Church people it would help both schools of thought, and lead them to "serve Thee with active zeal and humble confidence, and wait with patient expectation for the time in which the soul Thou receivest shall be satisfied with knowledge."

The prayer is as follows:

"Against inquisitive and perplexing thoughts: O Lord, my Maker and Protector, who has graciously sent me into this world to work out my salvation, enable me to drive from me all such unquiet and perplexing thoughts as may mislead or hinder me in the practice of those duties which Thou hast required. When I behold the works of Thy hands, and consider the course of Thy providence, give me grace always to remember that Thy thoughts are not my thoughts, nor Thy ways my ways. And while it shall please Thee to continue me in this world, where much is to be done and little to be known, teach me by Thy Holy Spirit to withdraw my mind from unprofitable and dangerous inquiries, from difficulties vainly curious, and doubts impossible to be solved. Let me rejoice in the light which Thou hast imparted: let me serve Thee with active zeal and humble confidence, and wait with patient expectation for the time in which the soul Thou receivest shall be satisfied with knowledge. Grant this, O Lord, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen."

CHANGES IN PRIORITY IN PANAMA.

Mr. Editor:

I ask the courtesy of your columns to tell the friends of the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone that by a recent resolution the National Council has designated Priority No. 233 for "Quarters for the Archdeacon of Panama."

Under Archdeacon Sykes' leadership the long-needed mission on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus for canal employees and members of the garrison has made excellent progress. It is impossible, however, to lease quarters for the Archdeacon and Mrs. Sykes, because of the increase of the navy personnel, and they are obliged to move from house to house every few weeks.

The government has kindly assigned us a fine lot in New Cristobal without charge, and I make this appeal for funds to take advantage of the government's offer and provide for the carrying forward of a work of real importance.

This is the only Priority of the Missionary District for the Triennium.

We need eight thousand dollars.

JAMES CRAIK MORRIS,

Bishop of the Panama Canal Zone.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE Y. P. S. L. AND A SOCIAL SERVICE PROGRAM.

LEAGUES clamoring for subjects for their devotional service and a program of work, practical and specific, can achieve both of these results by undertaking during the summer months a social service survey of their own community. An unquestionable amount of interest can be aroused by an effort to discover just how far modern life, as we see and know it, conforms to the Christian standards. The National Department will publish in these columns in the near future vital suggestions indicating the part that a League can play in the life of its community. There is a record of one experiment at least, which should encourage every group in the country. The members of this League, under the chaperonage of a counsellor, visited all of the public institutions, taking their notebooks, and, as a result of their own inquiries, brought back an abundance of material, no little indignation and a consuming desire to do something to assist in the solution of municipal problems which especially affected the physical and moral life of their community. At another time we shall have the record of their investigations and the results which flowed from them.

To the groups who are eager to undertake a similar effort, the following outline is offered. If these inquiries are earnestly and fearlessly pursued and the cooperation of the municipal officials won, the difficulty will be what the League will have to remember—to preserve balance in its educational program, as subjects will emerge sufficient in number to usurp all the time of the succeeding year. Those who believe that Social Service is a theoretical business, to be left to fadists and theorists, can learn a better mind in such a survey and investigation. So often our adolescent has the impulse to serve, and the vision of a Christian world, but he does not understand just how he functions as an individual in this new order.

Some of these questions seem a little mature, but we have been far too squeamish heretofore. The young people are much more advised in matters of sex, for instance, than the adult mind will believe, and a certain amount of vigorous frankness will accomplish infinite good. Let your Service Leagues divide themselves in groups and go with their notebooks to make personal investigations. There are a host of further inquiries that might be made. The institutions, Poor Farm, Detention Home, jail, etc., ought to have a rigid scrutiny, and the town will take notice if a group of alert and earnest young people, out of their own investigations, feel a sense of pardonable outrage at conditions in each community which can and ought to be amended. On the other hand, officials ought to have the approval of the community where work is faithfully being discharged, and the reactions of the young people can be brought to the Civic Clubs with peculiar emphasis.

We shall be grateful to hear the story of those Leagues to whom this plan appeals. Follow it out in detail and then send us the results. If the Leagues over the country should undertake this responsibility, the Episcopal Church can make a contribution to the moral and social life of our nation really worth while. These questions follow pretty closely a survey made in Fargo, North Dakota.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

GETTING TOGETHER.

The first Sunday in June was set apart for a special emphasis on Church unity, and gave an opportunity for calling the attention of congregations to the great World Conference to be held on this subject in Washington, D. C., in 1927.

Efforts in this direction were first made by our Church at the General Convention of 1910, when a Committee on Faith and Order was appointed for the promotion of unity and harmony among all Trinitarian branches of the Church. At the Washington Conference there will be representatives of the Anglican, Armenian, Baptist, Congregational, Czechoslovak, Disciples, Eastern Orthodox, Friends, German Evangelical, Lutheran, Methodists, Moravian, Old Catholic, Presbyterian, Reformed, South India, United, and many other Churches.

Preparations for this gathering can be made in many different ways. In Youngstown, Ohio, the Rev. Thom Williamson, rector of Ascension Church, used the occasion of this Special Sunday to bring this matter before the Ministerial Union, and to get the clergy of all denominations in the city to stress Christian Unity in their sermons on the first Sunday in June, and also to get this topic before the public through newspaper articles.

Another excellent way in which small towns can lay the foundations for Christian Cooperation is by means of open-air community services. A courthouse lawn or village park is readily adaptable for such purposes. A combination of the choirs of all the churches in town always arouses a widespread interest and such instruments as horns and cornets are excellent for use in the open air. Very often such services will attract people who rarely go to church. The fact that different ministers all participate in rendering some part of the service has an impressive effect upon the public who have no church affiliations, and the getting together of all kinds of Christians and paves the way to a more certain and beneficial unity than can be brought about by organic union planned and set forth in official documents.

In a larger city a similar plan for the Sunday nights during the hot weather has been adopted by the combination of two Episcopal and one Disciples' congregations. The plan being for these three congregations to worship together in their respective churches, with combined choirs, and so far as possible procuring prominent preachers, irrespective of church affiliations.

All these movements mark a most excellent tendency in the right direction, and will contribute to the bringing of genuine Christianity to the community.

COMMENDABLE ACTIVITY.

We have stolen from the news department the following item, which shows that at last Church people are beginning to take an active interest in their own penal institutions, and are not leaving such matters entirely in the hands of the secular social worker:

"Provision of a padded cell for proper care of violently insane persons was the practical request made by a social service committee visiting the county jail in Savannah, Georgia. The committee represented four parishes. Their action serves as a sample of concrete parish activity in social service, and also as one bit of evidence of the successful effort made by the Department of Social Service to develop interest in jail work. In a wholly friendly and helpful spirit the committee inspected the jail, finding first-rate conditions in lighting, plumbing, sanitation and personal treatment, but only an ordinary iron-barred cell for violent persons. The committee waited upon the county commissioners with their report and were assured of prompt action."

These Church workers are to be commended for their activity and practicality, and no doubt their suggestion to the authorities will have a greater weight by reason of the fact that they are backed by three congregations of Church people. They will find, however, that one suggestion to the civil authorities will not be sufficient to procure any extensive improvements in a jail, in spite of the fact that they "were assured of prompt action." In most cases officials give such assurance very readily because it costs nothing and makes a good impression on the committee.

In this connection, too, it should be noted that the general trend of modern progressive institutions is toward the abolition of the padded cell, it being considered far better to restrain the violently insane through keeping personal attendants with them instead of shutting them up alone within padded walls. It has also been found to be extremely difficult to keep these cells from becoming infested with vermin.

We do not mean, however, to criticize these energetic Church workers, on the other hand we heartily commend them, and we only make the above comments to urge them to follow up their recommendation so as to make it effective.

NORTHERN APPROVAL OF SOUTHERN METHODISTS.

For many years their respective attitudes was one of the chief matters of difference between the Northern and Southern branches of the Methodist Church. It is therefore all the more gratifying to note that the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in their recent address to the General Conference in session in Springfield, gave their warm endorsement to the movement recently developed in the South for the adjustment of race relations by the methods of conference and cooperation. This is significant as an indication of the growing understanding and sympathy which is binding the different sections of the country together. It is also a notable tribute to the effectiveness of the interracial plan which is now being widely worked out in the South. The Interracial Commission referred to was organized in Atlanta at the close of the war and now has state and local committees to the number of eight hundred in thirteen Southern States. The Bishops' statement referred to is as follows:

"One of the finest expressions of our Christianity of today is the effort of many groups and agencies in various sections of our country for the promotion of good will, mutual confidence, and brotherly cooperation between the races. These movements to bridge the chasm of interracial misunderstanding and hate meet our hearty approval and are worthy of our sympathy and cooperation. The work has not been carried forward without much prayer and the leadership of Him whose great commandment is to love thy neighbor as thyself. Among the agencies which we should heartily support are the University Race Commission, composed of Southern educators; the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, composed of both races, men and women; and the Commission on Interracial Relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ. We call our people to associate themselves actively with these agencies and other organizations for the promotion of peace and good will toward men everywhere, so that there shall be less friction and more cooperation, less suspicion and more confidence, less hatred and more Christian love."

Church Intelligence

Ins and Outs.

One million dollars loaned and one quarter of a million given to the Church for construction purposes is the record in the last ten years of the Church Building Fund. These are the "outs" of the three-quarters of one million dollar fund of which the Church has the sole use. Had the fund been larger more would have gone out. In the past sixty days the Church has asked for one hundred and fifty thousand dollars more than the available supply.

The "ins" of the fund are the gifts of individuals, legacies and parochial offerings. The gifts and legacies are very infrequent. In the same ten years the general offerings for the increase of the fund have averaged sixteen hundred dollars a year, of which feeble parishes and missions which have received gifts have returned eighty per cent.

This disparity looks like a failure in reciprocity, and a willingness to put in a minimum and to take out a maximum. Is the Church satisfied with this situation?

The Trustees of the Board, at their May meeting, expressed their belief that the congregations of the church, whose annual offerings for the fund have repeatedly been recommended by the General Convention, would be unwilling to permit this preponderance of "outs" over "ins" when once the facts were known.

Seabury Commencement.

A large number of Alumni were present at the annual banquet of the Alumni Association of Seabury Divinity School on Monday evening, May 19. The speakers were the Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, the Rt. Rev. Blair Roberts of South Dakota, the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, the Rev. Walter H. Stowe and Mr. Edward Blake of the graduating class.

The Bishop of Minnesota, acting for the Bishop of Erie, ordered Mr. Archie Ira Drake, Jr., of the graduation class Deacon. The warden, Dr. Kramer, preached the sermon and Professor Rolit presented the candidate.

The Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota, Dr. Roberts, preached the commencement sermon, which was a powerful plea for service in the mission fields of the Church.

Dr. McElwain, president of the board of trustees, conferred the following diplomas and degrees:

Graduating diploma to J. Edward Blake, Walter Gassaway Griggs, B. S., Archie Ira Drake, Jr., the Rev. Hubert J. Buckingham.

Bachelor of Divinity in course: the Rev. Paul S. Kramer, B. A., El Paso, Texas; the Rev. Herbert L. Miller, Lake City, Minn.; the Rev. Arthur H. Austin, Denver, Col.; the Rev. Alfred G. Denman Ellis, Bishop, California; the Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, Atlanta, Ga.

Doctor of Divinity (honoris causa): the Rev. Phillips Endicott Osgood, rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn.

The Bishop Whipple Missionary prize was won by Mr. Hubert Wrinch, of the Junior Class, and the Edward Clark Bill Oratorical prize by Walter G. Griggs.

The graduates have accepted work as follows: Mr. Blake will engage in missionary work in Minnesota, Mr. Griggs will take charge of the church in Crookston, Diocese of Duluth. Mr. Drake will join the New York City Mission staff and Mr. Buckingham is rector of Christ Church, Chicago.

The Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips Accepts Call to Epiphany Church, Washington.

The Rev. Dr. Z. Barney T. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Saviour, Philadelphia, announced to his congregation on Sunday, May 25, that he had accepted a call to the rectorship of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., and would assume charge early in July. Dr. Phillips went to the Church of the Saviour two years ago, succeeding the Rev. Dr. Robert Johnson, now rector of St. John's, Washington.

Commencement, St. Paul Normal and Industrial School.

The thirty-fifth annual commencement exercises of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va., came to a brilliant close Wednesday afternoon, May 28. Diplomas and certificates were awarded to one hundred and one young people, a very satisfactory number.

The exercises of commencement week began Sunday with the preaching of the baccalaureate sermon by the Rev. William Curtis White, rector of Christ Church, Washington, D. C. Tuesday was "Virginia Day." The special speaker for this occasion was the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., of Southern Virginia, who spoke on the general work of the school and the important contribution it was making to Negro education and uplift. Alumni speaker was Mrs. Mary Allison Ruffin, class 1916, who spoke on her work in the rural districts. The industrial speakers were William T. Parker, representing the printing division and Lillian Davis the sewing division. Wednesday was commencement day. The address to the class was made by the Rt. Rev. Walter Henry Overs, Ph. D., Bishop of Liberia, who delivered a message of hope and encouragement. John H. Graves was valedictorian; Theresa Oliver, salutatorian and George Coleman, Jr., honor speaker.

Announcement was made of the receipt of $10,000 for the "Louie Taylor Letcher Memorial Hospital," from Mr. John D. Letcher, Lexington, Virginia. The principal has just received the bequest of $1,000 left to St. Paul's in the will of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Northcott. He also announced that Mrs. J. M. Arrison, of Germantown, had recently remembered the school in her will, and that there were two other wills from which St. Paul's will be greatly benefited. The principal in his report stated that he had succeeded in raising nearly $10,000 for the girls' dormitory, thus bringing the amount up to nearly $25,000, the amount necessary to begin work on the girls' new dormitory, a $50,000 structure.

The Board of Trustees approved of the budget for 1924-1925, and other routine matters. The report of the principal showed that the school was in excellent condition, but that it was greatly in need of funds for current expenses. The exercises brought a large number of both white and colored visitors to the school, many of them from out of the state.

Conviction and Heresy Trial.

The evidence and arguments in the trial for heresy of the Rt. Rev. William Montgomery Brown were concluded at Cleveland, Ohio, Saturday, May 31. A decision of guilt was rendered almost immediately by the Ecclesiastical Court.

Under the Canons of the Church the sentence under this decision may be withheld until October, and it has been announced that this course will be adopted.

For Japan.

The first message to reach headquarters in regard to a congregational offering for Japan came from St. Paul's Mission, Lowndesboro, Alabama, the Rev. V. G. Lowery, of Troy, priest in charge. The little mission congregation has sent in pledges for Japan equivalent to their 1924 quota for budget and priorities.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Colored Council.

A three days' session of the nineteenth annual Council of Colored Churchmen of the Diocese, and the fifth annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, was held in St. John's Mission, Albany, May 20-22. The Bishop of the Diocese gave his annual address on the evening of the first day, and presided at the business sessions. Addresses were made on "The Ministry of the Church as Seen by a Layman", by Dr. Archer Tracy of Hawkinsville; "Christian Social Service," by one of the clergy of the Diocesan Department, the Rev. John Moore Walker of Albany; Religious Education by the vice-chairman of the department, the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, and a missionary sermon was preached by the Ven. J. B. Lawrence, Secretary of the Diocese. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, rector of St. Athanasius' Church, Brunswick, and the Archdeacon of the Colored Work, the Ven. J. Henry Brown, made his annual report. The total of the receipts for the year for the two parishes and thirteen missions amounted to $14,654.

The annual offering of the Woman's Auxiliary amounted to $206.55. A Supply Secretary was elected, and the Auxiliary will undertake to furnish a missionary box for the Deaconess Training Home, in Raleigh, N. C.

The Council has pledged itself to raise $250 of the $5,000 fund for the Deaconess Training Home "special."

Three Successful Missions.

A ten days' preaching mission was conducted in St. John's Church (the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector), Savannah, Ga., by the Rev. J. A. Schaad, from May 15-25. The Men's Club sponsored the mission, handling all details. Besides preaching every night and giving a meditation on "personal religion" every morning at eleven o'clock at a celebration of the Holy Communion, Mr. Schaad addressed the Gypsy Smith, Jr., Club, and spoke at the Kiwanis Club, the latter of which the rector of St. John's is president.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, of Philadelphia, held a week's mission at Christ Church (the Rev. D. Watson Winn, rector), St. Simon's Island, and during the services there was a large attendance.

At the mission of St. John's (the Rev. H. Scott-Smith, vicar), Bainbridge, out of a communicant list of forty members, thirty-eight communed on Easter Day. The offering was $167, and that of the Church School, $32.

News of St. John's, Savannah.

A committee has been formed in the Parish of St. John's, Church (the Rev. W. A. Jonnard rector), Savannah, to raise funds for a handsome memorial rededicated to the late rector, the Rev. William T. Dakin. The Rector's Aid Society of this parish gave a supper recently to the Church School officers and teachers, with the Bishop of the Diocese and the members of the vestry as special guests. The rector presided. Talks were made by Departmental Supervisors concerning the work of the departments and the needs, and these were followed by two inspirational talks on the "Devotional Life of the Church," and the "Teacher's Responsibility," by two of the teachers. The address of the evening was made by the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who is the leader of the Men's Bible Class who spoke on "Adult Education." After a talk by Bishop Reese on "The Teacher," the Superintendent closed the program by giving a summary of the school's work, making an appeal for larger quarters in its maintenance.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerrey, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Convention.

The Diocesan Convention was held on May 7 and 8, in the Church of the Redeemer, Orangeburg, the Rev. Herbert Brayshaw, rector. This was the first time the convention had ever met in this progressive town, about seventy miles west from the coast and in the midst of a thriving agricultural community. The church has never been strong there, but is now forging ahead. The Bishop took occasion to praise the work of Mr. Brayshaw, noting especially how he was identifying himself always with the larger life of the community.

The whole diocese was grateful to find that the Bishop was well enough to be present and also to perform all of his accustomed duties in connection with the convention. It is believed that a prolonged rest at his summer home at Sewanee—if he can be persuaded to take such—will see him restored to complete health again.

By invitation of the Bishop, the Rev. L. N. Taylor, of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., addressed the convention on the evening of May 7, on "Social Service," and a most inspiring and helpful address it was. The Rev. Mr. Way, rector of St. Mary's School at Raleigh, spoke in the interests of that fine school for young ladies, and also the Rev. Dr. Walter Mitchell, the retiring rector of the Porter Military Academy, presented for the last time, and with his usual zeal and force, the paramount claims of that valuable institution upon the Church in South Carolina. Bishop Guerrey, as well as the Convention, by resolution, paid a warm tribute of praise to the worth, and to the unstinted, unselfish services of Dr. Mitchell during the fifteen years he has spent in this diocese.

Possibly the most important single matter that came before the Convention was that of the Negro school at Denmark, known as the "Voorhees School."

This is an industrial school founded some twenty-five years ago by a young Negro woman graduate of Tuskegee. Its main support has come largely from generous souls in the North who have had the interests of the Negro at heart. It is non-denominational. The total present value of its buildings is estimated at some $250,000, and the institution owns four hundred acres of good farming lands, containing quite a lot of timber. In 1922 five hundred and ninety-four pupils registered. Like many other institutions this school has felt severely the difficult financial conditions of recent years and the general rise in the cost of everything. Some of its most generous contributors have not felt able to continue their giving on the same scale as heretofore. The outcome of this was that some time ago the suggestion came from Mr. Geo. Foster Peabody that the institution affiliate itself with the Episcopal Church. We understand that Dr. Robert Patton also favors such a step. The general plan of affiliation is to be the same that has worked so successfully at the Fort Valley School in the Diocese of Atlanta, and at the Okolona School in the Diocese of Mississippi. The favorable attitude of the two gentlemen named above justifies the hope that the American Church Institute for Negroes will give financial assistance as it has done in the case of other schools, as soon as this school has the church in this diocese behind it and controlling it as is proposed. Bishop Guerrey feels that in taking over the Voorhees School this Diocese will be acting in harmony with the whole policy of our National Church with respect to Negro education, and that the opportunity is too great and pregnant of splendid possibilities to be ignored or rejected save for the weightiest reasons. A special committee that had been appointed at the preceding convention, to go into this matter, made an adverse report at Orangeburg, but a majority of the convention, moved by the strong and stirring appeal of the Bishop, declined to adopt its recommendations, and referred the whole question back to the same committee for further consideration and with instructions to report to the next convention.

Consecration of New Church.

It was a red letter day on Waccamaw Neck on Sunday, May 25, when the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerrey, D. D., consecrated the new church edifice of Faith Memorial, Waverly Mills. The church was crowded with the members of the mission and other friends from all parts of the Island. Some of the well wishers of the white people attended the service.

The Bishop was assisted in the service by the Rev. C. W. Boyd, rector of All Saints' Church, Waverly Mills, and Archdeacon Baskerville.

The request of consecration was read by J. L. Moultrie, lay reader, and the sentence of consecration was read by the Archdeacon.

The Bishop preached a stirring and instructive sermon from St. Luke 17:5, "And the Apostles said unto the Lord, increase our faith," and he gave some striking examples of faith and showed the need of faith. In his sermon, he referred to the remarkable service rendered by the late Rev. Alexander Glenzie among the slaves prior to the War Between the States, and how the Episcopal Church has always realized its responsibility in the religious training and the elevation of the Negro race. The Bishop's reference to his father, the Rev. LaGrange Felder Guerrey, the first minister and founder of Faith Memorial Mission, was touching and was well received by the congregation. He also referred to the part which Archdeacon Joyner took in the erection of the old church building, which is now used for the School House.

The members of the mission placed a beautiful chancel window in the church as a memorial to the late Rev. Mr. Guerrey, as a token of their appreciation of his faithful and consecrated service among them.

During the service the Bishop confirmed a class of sixteen persons, one of which was for Holy Cross, Brook Green.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor
Rt. Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Remarkable Confirmation Classes have recently been presented by the Rev. Sidney S. Bost, rector of St. Philips, Durham. In two months classes numbering one hundred and thirty-five persons, mostly adults, have been confirmed by Bishop Joseph Blunt Cheshire in Durham, the largest number coming from the mission in West Durham. This is the largest number ever confirmed by Bishop Cheshire in one city in a like period of time, and probably establishes a record in the State.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Executive Council Adopts Policy on "Special Appeals."

A definite policy that will govern its future action on all special appeals that come to it was adopted at a meeting of the Executive Council of the diocese, at a meeting in Wilmington on May 22. This policy was imbedded in a resolution sent to the managers of the campaign to raise funds for the erection of the Cathedral at Washington. In effect it is that the Diocese of East Carolina recognizes that the first claim upon the loyalty and offerings of its people is the work to which it is committed by the General Church, and that it will continue to meet the obligations laid upon it in its support of the whole program of the Church as agreed upon by the General Convention.

This policy was adopted after a consideration of numerous appeals from many sources outside the diocese, which, if answered, would have seriously impaired East Carolina's ability to meet the full quota assigned it by the National Council. This diocese has made a serious effort to show its loyalty to the General Church, and does not propose to go back to the old methods, which one speaker has termed "guerilla warfare."

The Council at this meeting gave its approval of the campaign to raise $150,000 for the Thompson Orphanage, the institution supported by the three Dioceses of North Carolina. A call was issued for a general offering for this purpose on Sunday, October 19, and it was left to the parishes and missions to conduct such campaigns for subscriptions as will best suit local conditions. A committee was appointed to bring the matter before the people, and was instructed to complete its efforts before January 1, 1925.

A committee from the Colored Convocation of East Carolina came before the Council with a petition asking for the appointment of a field secretary for Colored work. The Council looked with favor on the request, and made an appropriation of $1,000 for this purpose, the balance to be raised by the Colored churches.

"Get-Together" Meetings.

The so-called "Get-Together" meetings of groups of the Woman's Auxiliary of East Carolina are becoming a regular feature of diocesan life. A recent meeting of the Pitt County group in St. Paul's, Greenville, over which Mrs. B. T. Cox presided, brought forth some splendid papers, on different phases of the Church's work, and led to most helpful discussion. A Washington-Tyrrel group was recently organized at a meeting in Christ Church, Creswell, with Mrs. R. P. Walker, of Plymouth, as president. A morning and afternoon session is held, with a picnic lunch at noon. All questions affecting the work of the women are discussed, and the meetings are thus a clearing house for problems and their solution.

A Preaching Mission recently conducted in St. Peter's Church, Washington, by Messrs. Mercer and Hadley, was featured by large congregations and an awakening of the spiritual life of the people. This parish, under the leadership of the Rev. Stephen Gardner, has made rapid strides in the past two years, leading the diocese in the number of confirmations.

Bishop Darst began a ten-day preaching mission in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Fla., on Sunday, May 25. The rector of the Good Shepherd, the Rev. C. A. Ashby, is an old friend of Bishop Darst.

An Auspicious Beginning.

The combination of the congregations of Grace and Holy Trinity Churches, Richmond, had a very auspicious beginning for future work together in their first service held in what was Holy Trinity Church, and is now "Grace and Holy Trinity," at eleven o'clock on the morning of June 1. A large congregation was present. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the associate rectors, the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., and the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., assisted by the Rev. S. E. Prentiss, the Rev. W. L. Kinsolving, and the Rev. E. L. Woodward, M. D. Dr. Gravatt preached.

At the night service, which was also largely attended, Dr. Burkhardt preached, laying special emphasis on the importance of maintaining the spirit of co-operation and cordiality, which has so far marked the coming together of these congregations. The Rev. Dr. Jas. W. Morris and the Rev. Francis Ball assisted at this service. No more services will be held in the old Grace Church building at the corner of Main and Foushee Streets, which is now on the market for sale.

Reopening of Piedmont Church.

Piedmont Church, Madison Courthouse, was opened for regular use the second Sunday after Easter. For several years it has been closed, and fallen out of repair. After some visits by the Rev. Frank Cox and the Rev. K. J. Hammond, of neighboring parishes in Rappahannock and Culpeper Counties, in the autumn of 1923, the little band of Churchwomen there took courage, and planned for the renovation of the building. During the winter a new ceiling was put in, the wall surface renewed, and, with paint, varnish, soap and water, and stoves, the interior was truly transformed into a comfortable and attractive place of worship.

By previous appointment these two clergymen and the choir of St. Stephen's, Culpeper, and some members of that congregation, visited the church and found it filled with a congregation of these church-folk, and their friends.

The Rev. Mr. Cox preached a forceful sermon on the influence and work of the Holy Spirit, and assisted the Rev. Dr. Hammond in a celebration of the Holy Communion, for which the choir sang the musical part.

Another service was held there the Sunday after Ascension Day, by the Rev. R. C. Hatch. Hereafter the monthly service will be in charge of the Rev. Dr. Hammond on the afternoon of the first Sunday in each month. This church was built substantially of brick in 1834, and at one time was used by a large congregation, and had a resident minister.

The Piedmont Convocation.

The one hundred and thirteenth semi-annual meeting of this convocation was held in Emmanuel Church, Middleburgh, May 13-15. Mountain Missions among white people was the subject of the address at the missionary service on Monday night, made by the Rev. Roy Mason, of Christ Church, Charlottesville.

The meditation of the "Quiet Hour" on Tuesday was given by the Rev. Dr. S. A. Wallis on "Christ Manifested in Us." The service of the Holy Communion followed immediately, administered by the Dean, assisted by the rector of the parish. The Rev. A. Stuart Gibson, rector of Trinity, Manassas, preached.

At the business session the Rev. R. Allen Castleman was elected Dean, the Rev. P. F. Hall Treasurer, and the Rev. A. S. Gibson secretary. An invitation to the Church in Rapidan was accepted for the next semi-annual meeting October 7, 1924.

At the devotional services the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, of St. Paul's, Baltimore, preached on Tuesday night, and the Rev. William Everett on Wednesday morning.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Open-Air Services at the Cathedral.

The afternoon services at the Washington Cathedral will be held out of doors, around the Peace Cross (weather permitting), every Sunday until autumn and the preachers at these services will be men from all parts of the country, distinguished for their power and force as preachers.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., was the preacher on May 25, and at this time, the accompaniment to the singing was played by a volunteer band, which has been organized especially for these services and is under the direction of a member of the Marine Band. Other preachers who will be heard in June are: the Rev. Bernard I. Bell, D. D., President of St. Stephen's College; the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. C. L., rector of St. John's Church, Washington; the Rev. H. P. Almon-Abbott, D. D., rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas Campbell Darst, Bishop of East Carolina. These services will be broadcasted by radio, every Sunday afternoon. The service on Sunday, May 25, was the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of St. Albans School for Boys, and immediately after the 1924 class window in the Lane-Johnston building was dedicated.

Contracts for further building of the Cathedral have been signed and work will progress rapidly this summer according to present plans. Crypts beneath the choir extending westward from Bethlehem Chapel will be built, and one of the features of interest will be a mortuary chapel called the Chapel of the Resurrection beneath the south transept. This will no doubt meet a great need in Washington and constitutes a departure from the usual chapel arrangements of other great world cathedrals. It will be built in a massive style of Norman architecture furnishing a marked contrast to the Gothic style of the Bethlehem Chapel.

The General Seminary.

Bishop Talbot of Bethlehem gave the baccalaureate sermon this year at the General Seminary.

At the meeting of the alumni the Rev. Thomas A. Sparks, rector of St. Clement's Church, New York, was elected president to succeed the Rev. Charles Malcolm Douglas, of Short Hills, N. J. The trustees elected the Rev. Thomas S. Cline, rector of Grace Church, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, to be professor of Pastoral Theology, and rector of St. Peter's Church in Twentieth Street, which is hereafter to have close relation as a parish to the Seminary.

The number of graduates this year is back to times before the World War. Of the thirty-two men only one, Samuel Whitney Hale, came from a diocese in the South. Twenty-five of the number were graduates of colleges, a very high proportion. Bishop Lines presided on commencement day. There was the usual reception by the Dean. One of the graduates, Thomas Eapen by name, came from Malabar, India.

Work of the Bronx Churchmen's League.

The Bronx Churchmen's League numbers two hundred and twenty-five earnest men, pledged to work in their own parishes, and also for the Church as a whole, as far as they can. Great credit for its building up, and its work, are due to the Rev. Albert E. Bentley, of Grace Church, and Mr. Robert H. Law, Jr., its president. Public meetings, usually addressed by one or more Bishops, have been held in many of the churches of the Bronx, and one has just been held in Trinity Church, with Bishop Manning and Judge Crain of the Supreme Court as speakers. Trinity Church is now the name of what for years was Holy Faith, the Rev. Clifford S. Gregg, rector. The League is endeavoring to show local men in each parish how best to serve parish effort.

On Ascension Day a formal service was held by Bishop Manning, at the laying of the foundations of the baptistry at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. This will be the finest of its kind in the New World, and is given by Mr. Stuyvesant and his sisters. Bishop Manning made a brief address.

C.

The Girls' Friendly Society.

Members from branches of the Girls' Friendly Society in the Diocese of New York came from all directions to the Cathedral for their annual service on Sunday, May 4. It is one time of the year when a special effort is made by girls outside New York to come in and by girls in New York to gather with those of other branches from the whole diocese for a service of worship and inspiration. They formed a procession of about eight hundred, and, carrying their banners, marched into the Cathedral. Bishop Manning preached the sermon and led the members in their pledge.

Many of them met again on May 17, when the new holiday house at Monroe was opened, with a short service of dedication, which was led by the Rev. Mr. Kroll of St. George's Church, Newburgh.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Laymen's Meeting.

For several years it has been the practice in Southwestern Virginia to have a laymen's mass meeting on the evening before the opening of Council. Following this custom there was a fine meeting in Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, on the evening of Monday, May 19. Colonel William King, Jr., of Lynchburg, offered the opening prayer. Mr. W. D. Tyler, of Dante, as chairman of the meeting, made a very fitting address and introduced the speakers of the evening.

The two features of the occasion were splendid talks by Colonel James A. Scott and Mr. W. Carey Barker, both of whom spoke on the functions of the layman, and appealed to the men to assume more personal responsibility in the advancement of the Church's work.

Mr. Mayo C. Brown read the proposed Constitution of the Laymen's League, and it was unanimously adopted. After election of officers Bishop Jett closed the meeting with the benediction.

The League will meet twice each year: on the third Thursday in September in Roanoke, and on the Monday preceding the Annual Council at whatever place the Council is scheduled to meet in any year.

Treasurers' Conference.

Another interesting meeting held in connection with the Council was a Conference of Parish Treasurers. This was called with a view to assembling such treasurers as might be elected delegates to the Council and any others who could attend; the object being a general discussion of problems and interchange of ideas.

The first matter taken up, and one which evoked a great deal of interest was the use of the Parish Cash Book, which is published by the Board of Church Finance in New York at the direction of the General Convention. There were perhaps a half dozen treasurers present who are already using the Cash Book, and so great was their enthusiasm in speaking of its simplicity, ease of operation and general effectiveness as an aid to the Parish Treasurer that all of the treasurers present adopted a resolution pledging themselves to use the Cash Book and urging all the other treasurers in the Diocese who haven't it already to obtain it and find out for themselves how much more easily they can keep their records with this book than with whatever other systems they may be using already.

Thus a movement is inaugurated looking to securing uniformity in book-keeping methods among all the Parish Treasurers in the Diocese. In the Conference the point was emphasized that all the treasurers have almost without exception the same problems in the way of bookkeeping and therefore it is most desirable that they use uniform methods of conducting their work.

Several other matters were briefly discussed, such as the treasurer's monthly report to his vestry; the problems of a treasurer of a country parish; methods of collecting pledges, etc.

Altogether it was felt that the Conference was well worth while, and it is probable that this occasion marks the inauguration of the policy of holding similar conferences of Parish Treasurers in connection with each session of the Council.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Interesting Meeting of Diocesan Convention.

Featured by a fine spirit of unanimity the ninety-first annual Convention of the Diocese closed at St. Paul's Cathedral Thursday afternoon, May 15.

Beginning Monday night, May 12, the pre-convention program was put into operation with a reception tendered to the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, and Mrs. Page, at which more than five hundred representatives from practically every parish in the diocese were present.

Tuesday morning, following a celebration of the Holy Communion and breakfast for the clergy, a joint conference on the Church's Mission for clergymen and laymen was held, the special address being made by the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Southern Ohio.

On Tuesday afternoon the women of the Diocese held conferences on methods of work for women and girls. These conferences were presided over by Mrs. James H. MacDonald, president of the Diocesan House of Churchwomen, and Mrs. A. J. Norman, of the Diocesan Girls' Friendly Society. Simultaneously, conference for clergymen and laymen on boys' work was held with the Rev. Bates G. Burt, of All Saints Church, Pontiac, and chairman of the Diocesan Mission on Boys' Work, presiding. At this conference the work of the Boy Scouts, the Order of Sir Galahad and the organized class was discussed.

Tuesday evening, simultaneous dinners were held for the clergy with Bishop Page as host; for the wives of the clergy, with Mrs. Page as hostess, and for the lay delegates, the Church Club of the Diocese of Michigan with the Minute Men of St. Paul's Cathedral acting as hosts for the latter group.

At the laymen's dinner on Tuesday night, Perry C. Hill, president of the Diocesan Church Club, spoke on "The Church in the Diocese," and the Rev. W. H. Reinheimer on the "Church in a Changing World."

The convention proper opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion Wednesday morning, May 13, following which Bishop Page made his first annual address to the two hundred and fifty delegates who had assembled, representing more than one hundred parishes and missions in the Diocese. The address was largely devoted to the subject of organization in the Church. He commended the proposed School of Religion soon to be established in connection with the University of Michigan as one of the most outstanding projects for the development of the spiritual life of this country that has been inaugurated in this generation.

The quota for the year 1925 was adopted amounting to $202,900, $126,980 of this being the quota for the work in the Diocese of Michigan and $75,900 being the quota for the general work of the Church.

In the course of its deliberations the convention passed the following resolution:

"That the Diocesan Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Michigan assembled in Detroit endorses the stand of President Coolidge in urging the postponement of the Japanese exclusion clause in the immigration bill now before congress."

Copies of the resolution signed by Bishop Page were telegraphed to President Coolidge and Secretary Hughes.

The elections resulted as follows:

For the Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. W. D. Maxon, Emil Montanus, S. S. Marquis, W. L. Rogers; Messrs. Dudley W. Smith, George W. Patterson, and Sidney T. Miller.

For Deputies to the Synod of the Mid-West: The Rev. Messrs. C. L. Ramsay, J. G. Widdifield, A. S. Gill, W. L. Torrance; Messrs. I. C. Johnson, William C. Conover, J. W. Inches, and George H. Luther.

William T. DeGraff, of St. John's Church, Detroit, was reelected treasurer of the convention; Lewis H. Padlock, Christ Church, Detroit, was reappointed Chancellor, and Chas. O. Ford, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, was reelected Secretary of the convention.

A motion to change the date of the convention from May to January failed of passage.

Meeting simultaneously with the Diocesan Convention was the fourth annual meeting of the Diocesan House of Churchwomen, the sessions of which were largely devoted to a consideration of woman's work in the diocese and plans for a closer coordination of such work.

The Annual Convention.

The fifty-third annual convention of the diocese met in Trinity Church, Carbondale, on Tuesday, May 20. The sessions were well attended by both the clergy and laity. The Bishops expressed themselves as well pleased with the business transacted.

In addition to the ordinary business were passed these two resolutions: One, strongly endorsing the Eighteenth Amendment and calling on all Christian people to obey it in letter and spirit; the other memorializing the House of Bishops at the next General Convention to give to the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, D. D., some jurisdiction in the Church by placing him in some missionary district, either at home or abroad. Bishop Jones is a son of this diocese, well known to the great majority of the clergy and laity and the resolution was passed with a will.

The clergy and laity of the diocese are beginning to look forward to the pre-convention program with almost as much pleasure as to the convention itself. On Monday evening the parish served a dinner for the clergy and laity, which was followed by a large mass meeting, held in the Church, Bishop Talbot presiding. The Rev. Francis T. Brown, of Yonkers, N. Y., made an address on Christian Social Service, which consisted mostly of a report of the Copee Conference lately held in England, and which Mr. Brown attended as one of the official delegates from the Episcopal Church in America. It was very interesting. Dean W. P. Ladd, of the Berkeley Divinity School, made an address on "The Vitality of the Christian Tradition." Dean Ladd endeavored to show that the Church was constantly facing new and puzzling conditions, but so far her Christian traditions have prevailed, found a solution. On Tuesday morning the departments of Missions, of Religious Education, of Service and Stewardship, each one, had hour-long conferences. Each subject was introduced by the different chairmen, followed in two instances by a further address by the Rev. Carol M. Davis, Domestic Secretary of the National Council. The Department of Religious Education discussed the coming summer school to be held at Bishopthorpe Manor from June 23 to 28, in Bethlehem, and also the need for putting a paid worker in the field who is to devote all his time to the Church Schools.

Both at this conference and later the convention recommended the proposal to the favorable consideration of the Bishop and Executive Council.

On Tuesday afternoon the Brotherhood of St. Andrew had a conference, and also the Commission on Increased Lay Activity held a well-attended mass meeting, which was addressed by Mr. G. Frank Shelby, General Secretary, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Rev. Dr. F. L. Flinchbaugh and the presiding Bishop.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Commencement of the Training School of the Saint Margaret Memorial Hospital, was held in the Chapel of the Hospital on Wednesday evening, May 21. There were five nurses graduated. The music for the occasion was particularly good, and was furnished by the vested choir of St. Stephen's Church, Sewickley. There were two addresses, the first by the Rev. Dr. Alleyne Carleton Howell, rector of St. Stephen's, Sewickley, and the other by Dr. Colwell, of the staff of St. Margaret's. The diplomas were presented by the President of the Board of Trustees, Mr. Charles L. Snowden, the class pins by Miss Adele Polk, Directress of Nurses, and the scholarships by Mrs. Harvey Childs, Jr., President of the Woman's Auxiliary Board. The chapel was handsomely decorated with spring flowers.

The Annual Reception and Donation Day in behalf of the Church Home, the Diocesan institution for orphans and old ladies, took place on May 22, at the Home, and a considerable sum was added to the treasury of the Women's Board. The occasion marked the fiftieth anniversary of the service of the matron, Miss Emma B. Loomis, who came to the home as a teacher in 1874. Miss Loomis having been seriously ill for several weeks, was unable to take part in the celebration.

Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan, made a visit to Pittsburgh in behalf of the Japan Reconstruction Fund, and, on May 22, spoke at a drawing-room gathering of women, given under the auspices of the Pittsburgh branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. On Friday evening he addressed a mass meeting at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew: On Saturday evening, May 24, at the Church of the Epiphany, Bellevue, the Rev. Dr. Hills, rector, the Pittsburgh Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held a quarterly meeting. Following a short service at six o'clock, supper was served in the parish house. The speakers were the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., who had for his subject, "The Layman and the Church," and Mr. W. P. Frazer, president of the Christian Laymen's Association of Pittsburgh, whose topic was, "A Business Man's View of Religion."

Bishop Ferris Elected Coadjutor.

At the recent Convention of the Diocese, held in St. Paul's Church, Rochester, the Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Suffragan Bishop, was elected Bishop-Coadjutor. The Rev. C. A. Jessup, D. D., who four years ago had nominated Bishop Ferris as Suffragan, nominated him as Coadjutor. There were no other nominations, and he was elected by the unanimous vote of both orders. It was a fitting tribute to a man who has made himself the servant of the whole Diocese whose respect and affection he has won.

FLORIDA.

A Successful Preaching Mission.

Bishop Thomas Campbell Darst, D. D., conducted a most successful preaching mission in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Sunday night, June 1. In spite of the heat wave, which spread over that part of the country during the stay of the Bishop in Florida, large crowds heard him every night. The last night of the mission, the service was held on the lawn, to accommodate the congregation. Bishop Darst proved that he is one of the great evangelical preachers of the Church, and that people will turn out to hear the Gospel. The rector, the Rev. C. A. Ashby, said that the motto of the mission was from Jeremiah, "I will melt them, and try them." The Good Shepherd congregation stood the test. This church will add this summer to its lay staff a director of religious education, and a graduate of Sewanee, Mr. George H. Harris, of Macon, Ga., making five lay workers with the church. It will make extensive additions to its big parish house this summer, and hopes for 1,500 in its Sunday School in the fall. The gymnasium and swimming pool are in great demand. A handsome Boys Scout hut has been begun at Orange Park in connection with the young people's work.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

The Philadelphia Divinity School.

The campaign to raise $1,000,000 for the Philadelphia Divinity School closed on Monday, May 26. At the victory dinner in the Ritz-Carlton it was announced that the total raised was $1,018,000. As soon as the results were made known Bishop Garland arose and outlined what is now possible for the school and stated that work on the new buildings would begin almost immediately. He thanked all for their activity, and generosity and proposed the singing of the Doxology.

The annual commencement of the Philadelphia Divinity School was held May 28 in St. Philip's Church, West Philadelphia, and the address to the graduating class was delivered by Bishop Cross, of Spokane. The graduates are George Steiner Aldridge, Percy George Hall, Abraham Sigezo Hoyo, Arthur Chester Moore, Thomas Parker, Warren Milton Smaltz, George Ewald Solberg, Walter Boardman Wright and Harry J. Wyatt.

Following his address Bishop Cross was granted the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology, and Bishop Motoda of Japan the degree of Doctor of Canon Law.

Missionary Nurses For Foreign Fields.

In connection with the commencement day exercises of the Church Training and Deaconess House held in Old St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, May 29, announcement was made by Bishop Garland of the appointment of four young women graduates of the school as missionary nurses in foreign countries.

Two of the appointees, Miss Florence Keefe and Miss Viola A. McGoldrick, are members of this year's graduating class. The other two are Miss Marie J. Ravenal and Miss Christine T. Barr, nurses in the Pennsylvania Hospital. Miss Barr, whose home is in Philadelphia, is to go to the Missionary District of Hankow, China, and Miss Ravenal, a native of Charleston, S. C., will also go to Hankow, China. Miss Keefe, whose home is Jamestown, N. Y., will go to Anvik, Alaska, and Miss McGoldrick, of Plainfield, N. J., will go to St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai. They will leave early in July.

New Parish Hall Dedicated.

The dedication of the new parish and community hall of Emmanuel Church, Holmesburg, took place Saturday afternoon, May 24.

The new parish house, known as Garrett Hall, is the gift of Mrs. Mary M. Garrett, who for a number of years has been a resident of Holmesburg. The Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Saviour, Philadelphia, officiated and Rev. Sydney Goodman, rector of Emmanuel, also delivered an address.

The structure is built on ground adjoining the church. It contains a spacious auditorium with a seating capacity of five hundred, and the banquet room in the lower hall accommodates two hundred and fifty. A rich stained glass window that adorns the building, also the gift of Mrs. Garrett, is a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The End of the Age.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The passage in Matthew 24, concerning the End of the Age, repeats the warning against false Christs at the end of the Times of the Gentiles, or at the destruction of Jerusalem, or at both, because one typifies the other. Therefore we know several principles concerning the End of the Age. The Government of Jerusalem was practically irreligious; so shall be that of Christendom at the end of the age. The religion was vast, splendidly organized true as to its sanctions, but false as to its spirit. So shall be Christendom at the end of the Age.

The carcass and the eagles is parallel with Luke 17:37, but in context so different that some hold the meaning reversed. In Luke 17 the eagles are Roman eagles, the carcass the Jewish nation. In Matt. 24, some hold that the Son of Man will draw believers as a carcass draws eagles. The interpretation is unsavory. Rather, as a dying animal draws eagles, as a dying nation draws avenging Romans, so a dying world draws great Powers which set right and destroy.

Our Lord knew Apocalyptic literature, for He quotes Daniel. Was He using its language here? Apocalyptic literature has certain symbolic sayings. The Sun means the king. The moon and stars mean his subordinates. The earth means the ordinary people, land-owners, farmers, the middle classes. The sea means the mob, the submerged. The powers of Heaven mean organized religion. There is a well-known carefully shaded and highly technical apocalyptic language from whose extensive vocabulary we cull only the necessary symbols. Did Our Lord use it here? The Apostles knew apocalyptic symbols. Such literature was exceedingly copious from the time of the Maccabees.

For seventeen centuries Christendom held He was speaking literally. A few dissented, but were shouted down. Fortunately, Our Lord gave a sign useless to preceding generations, conclusive to our own. We now know that stars cannot fall on the earth and leave a world in which are living men to be afraid. Therefore, using the ordinary apocalyptic symbols familiar to His hearers, He was speaking of social or spiritual convulsions. He was describing the fall of Jerusalem, or the fall of the Roman Empire, or something greater. The fall of Jerusalem can be eliminated, for He did not then appear unmistakably. Elliott, in his Hours with the Apocalypse, takes the fall of the heathen religions as meant, and interprets the Sign of the Son of Man as the Christianization of the Empire under Constantine. Edersheim dissents, referring the political upheaval to the Last Times and the Sign of the Son of Man to the conversion of Israel. It seems a change in world-religion, some great Christianizing. The mourning of the tribes of the earth seems like the mourning of the Inquisition that Protestant convents can exist next to Jesuit Cathedrals, or of the Mollahs that tourists can enter Mosques, or of Thibet that a missionary can reach Lhasa alive. The point seems a change in the politico-religious aspect of the world along the lines of toleration, with a world-wide preaching of Christ as a result.

The Sun, Moon and Stars are apocalyptic symbols. The Sign of the Son of Man in the Heavens is probably an apocalyptic symbol. Is the statement that the inhabitants of the earth shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of Heaven a symbol?

Even were there no other information we would incline to belief in the physical second coming, holding Our Lord's statements concerning Himself different to those concerning signs of His coming. Fortunately, other information is copious. Any good work on Eschatology assembles it. Christ will come with the saints, physically, in bodily presence; not in bodies like ours, but like that He had after the resurrection. His resurrection body combined the phenomena of body and spirit. This much-neglected fact explains those allusions which make many treat the second coming as spiritual. A body that eats and can be handled certainly is not a spirit; but a body that appears and disappears at will, passes through closed doors, endures without inconvenience mortal wounds and otherwise behaves in an immortal way, is basis for spiritualizing. Such bodies, at His second coming, Our Lord and His saints shall have.

"And when these things shall come to pass," He went on, then gave the Parable of the Fig Tree, ending: "This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."

Many claim that the prediction refers to the destruction of Jerusalem. We cannot so receive it. The prophecy, with its account of the gathering of the elect from the four winds, cannot refer to the destruction of Jerusalem only. Our Lord's word cannot be broken. Our Lord's generation did not see the end of the age, which is still future. The day and hour of the end was not known to Our Lord, for He says so. The year, or at least the approximate century, was known to Him, as His reference to the Times of the Gentiles shows. He therefore knew that the generation to which He spoke would see the destruction of Jerusalem, but not the Times of the End. Yet He promised survival of the generation of which He spoke through the Times of the End and the Second Coming. We submit that the generation to which He spoke and the generation of which He spoke cannot be the same generation. The theories seem to be: 1. That Our Lord was mistaken; 2. That the synoptic gospels misquote; 3. That some member of His generation, probably St. John, is still living; 4. That the reference is to life after death; 5. That the generation central about thirty A. D., will reincarnate at the Times of the End; 6. That the reference is to the destruction of Jerusalem. We submit a seventh, That the generation of which He spoke when He said, "When ye see these things begin to come to pass" is the generation which is not to pass away until they are fulfilled. This makes the saying a picturesque, but quite common-sense declaration that the Times of the End shall occupy less than one generation; a form of statement adopted to leave no hint of how many generations elapse before the Times begin. The explanation is derived from Elliott (Hours with the Apocalypse), and has the merit of simplicity, being usually overlooked because of its extreme obviousness.

Day and hour are not year and century. Our Lord knows the approximate, though not the exact, time, else why a parable of the fig-tree? Yet if His servants knew the time they would watch when it came, but sleep before it came; and He wishes us to watch always.

Spiritual Courage.

Take Heaven. No peace lies in the future, which is not hidden in this present instant. Take peace. The gloom of the world is but a shadow. Behind it, yet within our reach, is joy! There is radiance and glory in the darkness, could we but see, and to see we have only to look. I beseech you to look! Life is so generous a giver; but we, judging its gifts by their covering, cast them away, as ugly, or heavy, or hard. Remove the covering and you will find beneath it a living splendour woven of love, by wisdom. Welcome it, grasp it and you will touch the angel's hand that brings it to you. Everything that we call a trial, a sorrow or a duty, believe me that angel's hand is there, and the wonder of an overshadowing Presence. Our joys, too. Be not content with them as joys. They too conceal diviner gifts. Life is so full of meaning and of purpose, so full of beauty beneath its covering, that you will find earth but cloaks your heaven. Courage, then, to claim it.—Fra Giovanni.

The Whence and Whither.

W. B. Lydenberg.

I came and I shall go,—like as a star
That falls across the shaded hand of night
And leaves behind a fainting stream of gold;
Or like a bird that comes unheralded
Up to my door and wafts within one note
Of joy and then departs for evermore;
Or like a flower that springs up overnight
Within a sheltered corner of the grounds
And for a day is fair and sweet, then wilt
And lies upon the earth from which it sprang.
I came and I shall go, if but to leave
In Memory's hall one soft refrain of love;
But whence I came and whither I shall go,
The Spirit that sent me—only He—shall know.

Orphan Factories.

Of what possible importance in the world is a little girl or a little boy, compared with those profound adults who sign treaties nonchalantly and who arrange the destinies of nations with about the same seriousness of motive as they go through the moves of Mah Jong?

What particular pathos is there in the picture of thousands of little children, on mule and camel back, in springless carts and on foot, in exodus from the land of their fathers, destined for problematic existence in strange impoverished countries five hundred miles from their homes?

Is there anything queer for a little child about life in a refugee camp, where 11,000 human beings are huddled in an old stone barracks, twenty times the size of Madison Square Garden, into the cold marble halls of which the rain pours through its leaky roof—the same Seleimie Barracks in Constantinople in which Florence Nightingale nursed the wounded of the Crimean War?

Yes, there is something extremely queer about this life, for in Seleimie Barracks, as in the refugee camps of Athens, Salonika and Aleppo, the "orphan factories" of the Near East, is manufactured a product not so remarkable for its kind, perhaps, as its quantity.

In the wet and fetid atmosphere of Seleimie, for instance, according to C. C. Thurber—veteran relief worker of Sivas and Constantinople, just returned from three years' service to convalesce from the effects of typhus—children died at the rate of sixty and seventy a day, and hourly emerged into the world tiny scraps of new humanity. There, under shelter that was worse than no shelter, often there was not even human protection for them by the time they breathed their first breath in a strange world. For where people die of typhus, cholera and exhaustion at the rate of 6,000 in six months, is it not to be expected that prospective mothers, weakened by their terrific experiences, should be the first to go, leaving behind the newborn as well as their brothers and sisters?

Does it matter to you that this ghastly production of orphans goes forward, and are you concerned about the quality of the product?

Sometimes it is a little girl of seven who has struggled to the stature of a baby of two, who needs special care and nourishment to win for her anything like the gifts of normal childhood.

Sometimes it is a boy of twelve, who, through the early maturity native to the Near East, the rough man's life he has had to lead, and the deprivation and illness he has had to suffer, looks like a hard-living man of forty, who needs to be taught an occupation that will restore to him his lost self-respect and gain for him a place in the work-a-day world.

Sometimes it is a child, who, like the majority of the people of the Near East, has suffered trachoma, but who, because he had no one to care what became of him, is doomed to life-long blindness, and who needs to learn that there can be love in his darkened world, even profitable occupation for his hands.

These are the products of the "orphan factories."

Sixty thousand of them are under the wing of Near East Relief, and for the most part have been transformed into normal, happy children. Fifteen thousand of them during this last year have been ushered into the outside world, either into the homes of individuals or into jobs that make them independent of further philanthropy.

But for the current product of the "orphan factories" there is no place. They are "waste product," deteriorating within the factory walls, until they either die or become absorbed into the questionable street life of the cities, swelling the ranks of the undesirables and becoming a menace to civilization.

It is estimated that in the camps of Greece there are 10,000 children with neither father nor mother, and 40,000 whose only protection is a mother, who herself is homeless, penniless and often weak and ill from undernourishment and indescribable hardship,—she, as well as the children, an object of the world's pity and in dire need of its charity.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of Patience.

I sought to clothe myself in White Raiments, and I essayed to put on a Clean Shirt.

Now the manner of the coming of Laundry from the place where they wash and starch and ossify it is this, that the Shirts are fastened, each with many Pins, so that however industrious a man shall be, there yet is good hope that one Pin shall remain in and stick him; and the Button Holes are Cemented together so as nothing much more mild than Dynamite can open them. And as I wrought with one of the Button Holes, laying down a Barrage and seeking to carry it by storm, behold, the Collar Button slipped from my fingers, and I know not whither.

And I sought for it in every corner of the room, and I moved most of the articles of furniture, and I found it not.

And when I found it not, I improvised a few remarks which I thought suitable unto the Occasion.

And Keturah spake unto me, saying, My lord, thou hast some virtues and a few graces, but Patience is not among them.

And I said, Patience is the virtue of donkeys.

And Keturah said, It is also the virtue of wives whose husbands fret and storm when they lose their Collar Buttons.

And I said, Patience is a much over-rated quality. This world did never get very far along until some man arrived with the virtue of Impatience.

And Keturah said, I do not see anything arriving as a result of thy present Impatience; but if thou wilt make less virtuous thine own Impatience, thou mayest look exactly in the middle of the floor, and there shalt thou behold thy Collar Button, all this time in plain sight.

Now I might have been impatient with her for not telling me sooner, but I am too good a sport for that, and I said, Keturah, every impatient man should have a patient wife.

And she said, It is worse than that; she must be patient.

But, said I, it were a mistake if we were both patient. For there is no reason why one family should seek to monopolize the patience of the world.

And she said, It would be safe for thee to add a little to thine investment in Patience.

And I said, Keturah, thou art mistaken. The walls of Jericho had been standing until this day if Joshua had been a man of Patience. If George Washington had been a man of Patience, then had Warren Harding been a great-great-grandson of George III. The world doth never get far along until some man cometh impatient; then things begin to occur.

And she said, Where dost thou come into that list?

And I said, As soon as I knew thee, I was impatient till I got thee.

And she said, That being the case, I will forgive thee for thine Impatience. Almost thou persuadest me that Impatience is a virtue.

"The Wind Bloweth Where It Listeth."

("So is every one that is born of the Spirit."—St. John 3:8.)

Everywhere the June wind blows,
Lifts the lily, bends the rose;
Holding up the daisy's face,
To gaze a moment, in her eyes;
Making for the clouds a place
In the pathway of the skies.
Passing all things with a smile,
Yet searching keenly all the while.

Everywhere the tender breath
Of the Spirit lifts from death;
Sighs upon the drooping flower
Of the weary, troubled heart;
Freshens it with secret power,
Hides it from the world, apart.
And where budded souls are blown,
Keeps them ever, for His own!

When Jesus Stilled A Storm.

Eugenie du Maurier.

One day Jesus became very weary with the long time of laboring for others. He was fatigued, too, because of the sympathy He had given to those in pain and sorrow. Even up to the evening great numbers of sufferers were coming to be healed. So He came to the shores of the lake where lay the boats of the fishermen who were His followers. Stepping into one of the boats He was gladly welcomed. Seeing how tired Jesus was, did some kind fisherman fold a coat for a pillow and urge Him to lie down? The gentle motion of the boat was soothing; the glory of sunset faded, darkness came; the fishermen spoke in low tones; Jesus was asleep.

The sky became overcast. The air was strangely still; then a slight breeze came. The fishermen, always alert to danger, knew a storm was coming. Suddenly a fierce gale turned the little vessel from its course and dashed the waves over the watching sailors. BUT JESUS SLEPT. The storm grew worse. In agony of fear the fishermen called: "Lord, save us, lest we perish."

What harm could come to them when Jesus was near? It was not at the cruel waves and angry wind that Jesus first looked when He awoke, but into the frightened eyes and timid hearts of His followers, and He said sadly: "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

"Then rising up, He commanded the winds and the waves, and there was a great calm."

What were the words of command? To quell the storm, to quiet the wind and waves, to banish fear from sinking hearts only three words were needed: "PEACE BE STILL."

When our hearts are swept by indignation, when we are overwhelmed with suffering, when every one seems unkind and many things seem unjust, when we are in danger, in dread, in fear, then is the time to hold fast to the faith; for no harm can come when Jesus is near.

We may call out in our anguish as did the fishermen, "Lord, save us, we perish," and then know that the calm eyes of Jesus are ready as ever to look into our quivering hearts and say,

"Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

Faith, abiding faith, be ours. Faith, that will live through the storm of life, remembering that Jesus is ever near to those who call even though there are times when He seems to sleep, but that if faith is firm, we must soon hear the blessed "PEACE BE STILL," and into our troubled hearts must come a great calm.

Busy Betty.

There was once a little girl named Betty. One morning her mother said to her: "Betty, I am going to the grocery, and I'll be gone about an hour. Will you wash the dishes, sweep up the crumbs from the dining room and make the beds?"

Betty said, "Yes, mother." Then her mother went away and left her, and Betty went into the kitchen, where she found the sink full of dishes. "O dear," she said, "I don't like to wash dishes!"

On a small shelf just above the sink stood a little kitchen clock, and it had been ticking: "Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock!" All of a sudden however it began to say, "Lazy Betty, lazy Betty, lazy Betty!"

Betty didn't like to hear the clock say that, so she ran into the dining room, and there were all the crumbs to sweep up from the floor. "O dear," she said, "I don't like to sweep up crumbs, and I'm not going to."

Out in the hall stood a great, big grandfather clock, and it had been ticking, "Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock!" All of a sudden it began to say, "Lazy Betty, lazy Betty, lazy Betty, lazy Betty!" Betty didn't like to hear the big grandfather clock say that, so she ran upstairs, and there were all the beds to be made. "O dear," she said, "I don't like to make beds, and I'm not going to make beds!"

Up on top of mother's dresser stood a little alarm clock, and it had been ticking, "Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock!" All of a sudden it began to say, "Lazy Betty, lazy Betty, lazy Betty, lazy Betty!"

This was too much for Betty, so downstairs she ran and into the kitchen and washed and dried the dishes, oh! so carefully that the little kitchen clock on the shelf above the sink began to sing, "Busy Betty, busy Betty!"

Then she ran into the dining room and swept up all the crumbs from the floor, and the great, big grandfather clock in the hall began to sing, "Busy Betty, busy Betty, busy Betty, busy Betty!"

Betty laughed to herself and threw a kiss to the old grandfather clock as she ran up the stairs. She made all the beds and smoothed out every wrinkle until the beds looked as if they had been ironed, and the little alarm clock on mother's dresser fairly danced as it sang, "Busy Betty, busy Betty, busy Betty, busy Betty!"

Betty laughed right out loud and ran downstairs just in time to open the door for mother when she came back from the grocery store. The first words mother said were, "Betty, did you wash the dishes, and did you sweep up the crumbs, and did you make the beds?"

And Betty said, "Yes, mother." Then her mother gave her a big hug and kiss. —Woman's Forum.

THE LITTLE POETS' CORNER.

A Song of Liberty.

Alfred P. Thom, III, aged 12.

Wafted on the morning breeze
The robin singing in the trees
With beating heart and throbbing breast
Knows his freedom is the best.

And from the early break of day
Robin red-breast sings so gay,
Until at night, away flies he,
Singing his song of liberty.

And every morning to my ear
His thrilling song came full of cheer,
'Till winter, then away flew he,
I wonder does he think of me!

Elmer's Lesson.

Having five children and the house and garden and hens to look after, mother was busy from morning till night.

Of course the children helped and were as good as they knew how to be; that is, all of them except Elmer. Eleven-year-old Wesley and Ruth, who came next, worked or played happily all day long; so did the twins, Ardis and Alice, who were only six. Elmer worked or played too, but he didn't want to share things as children must do when there are many. He didn't want any one to pick a single flower in his little garden, no matter how many there were. With his playthings too he was selfish. None of the other children must touch his wagon or play with his toys, or read his books or hardly even look at his kite.

Sometimes mother coaxed, sometimes she scolded, and Elmer became sulky and stubborn, and then things were very disagreeable.

One day Cousin Albert and Helen came for a visit. The boys began a game of ball outdoors while the girls played in the house.

"Oh," said Cousin Helen, "there are some tenpins! Let's have a game! Albert and I have lots of fun at home playing with his tenpins."

"But," said Ardis, "the tenpins belong to Elmer."

"Why, he's not using them now, and we can't hurt them," said Cousin Helen.

"Maybe Elmer won't mind if Cousin Helen wants to play," said Alice.

So the tenpins were set up, and the little girls played happily until Elmer came in for a drink. How cross he was about it!

"They are my things, and I don't want any one to touch them," he shouted.

Cousin Helen was much astonished and a little frightened, and Ardis and Alice felt so bad that they cried.

Mother looked sorrowfully at her little boy. "Elmer," she said, "the tenpins are yours, and you may have them; hereafter none of us will touch one of your things."

Elmer, a little ashamed of himself, played with the tenpins, and the little girls went into the kitchen to help Ruth make candy.

By and by the other boys called Elmer out to finish the game of ball, and he went and stayed until mother called them in to supper.

Elmer was surprised to see his tenpins scattered round just as he had left them.

"Pick them up, Ruth," he said. "I'm too hungry."

"Ruth did want to pick them up," said mother, "but I told her that they were yours, and you didn't want any one to touch any of your things."

Elmer, without a word, crawled about under the table and chairs and picked up the tenpins.

That night, while he was undressing for bed, two buttons came off his trousers. He tossed the trousers down to mother.

"Two buttons came off, mother," he called.

"Here are needle and thread, Elmer," she said. "Of course you will want to sew on your own buttons."

Elmer had an uncomfortable feeling, but he didn't say anything. He sewed the buttons on as well as he could, but the needle pricked him and the thread became tangled; and the next morning the buttons came off again because he hadn't sewed them on firm enough. Then he put pins where the buttons should have been, and they pricked him.

He wasn't happy all that day, though not one of the other children touched any of his things.

A queer lump came into his throat when mother gathered flowers from every garden except his and took them to a friend who was sick. She made a wonderful salad for supper and never even looked at his lettuce, which was so crisp and tender.

At night he found his corner of the big room that he shared with his brothers just as untidy as he had left it in the morning; his cot bed had not been made up, though the others were as plump and smooth as ever.

All that week no one except himself touched any of his things. He watched Wesley try to fasten a wheel on an old wagon so that Ardis and Alice might take their dolls for a ride. He wished they would ask to use his wagon; he even pushed it toward them, but they did not seem to notice.

Mother answered pleasantly whenever he asked anything, but the house didn't seem like home. All day long those pins pricked him, and when he crept into his tumbled bed at night he was a most unhappy little fellow. He buried his face in his pillow and sobbed. Then a gentle voice asked, "What's the matter, Elmer?"

"O mother," he cried, "I don't want any of my things; please take them all and let me be your boy again."

So mother cuddled him and kissed him and then asked, "Don't you see, dear, that every one must give as well as take?"

"Oh, yes," he replied.

Then mother smoothed the tumbled bed and sewed the buttons on and made things beautiful and happy again.—Youth's Companion.

When Our Hats Are Too Small.

The letter brought a frown of annoyance to Janet's face. After a few minutes of troubled thinking she spoke frankly, "I don't see why they are coming right now, either. I've just gotten into the V. V. crowd. Gertrude and Ruby's coming will upset all my plans I've made for going with the V. V. girls and in every way undo all I've accomplished.

Mrs. Rhodes looked surprised. "But they want to see you, dear," she said. "You seemed to like them when you visited at their house last summer. You had quite a good time, too."

"I do like them, mother," Janet spoke almost impatiently. "They are good girls but they aren't accomplished and up to the standards of the V. V. girls. I know the girls won't want them along with our crowd while they're here."

Mrs. Rhodes said nothing more but went into the guest room to make it ready for the two, small-town cousins who had just written that they would arrive in a few days to make Janet a two-weeks' visit. But while she dusted she worried.

Janet had certainly changed a great deal during the last few months. She no longer went to the homes of any of the neighborhood girls with whom a few years before she had played "I Spy" and "Andy Over." She refused to accompany them on picnics and declined their invitations to homey little parties. She wanted no friends except the members of the V. V. Club—the girls she termed "the most exclusive ones in town."

Suddenly a voice floated up from the yard below. Nadine Grey, president of the V. V. Club and daughter of the town's mayor, had come after Janet to take a walk with her. Mrs. Rhodes nodded her permission the minute it was asked.

"Mother, I believe we'll take Betty Rose Ware with us," she was looking at a wee, three-year-old youngster in the next door yard. "She's so dear and sweet that I love to have her with me."

"She is a darling looking child," agreed Nadine. "Let's take her."

Mrs. Ware was glad for her wee daughter to accompany the two older girls. She brought out a beautiful, embroidered hat and tied it on the tiny mite's head. "I think she looks like a doll in this," she exclaimed.

How Betty Rose did dimple then!

An hour later Mrs. Rhodes was on the front porch when the three girls came back. Little Betty Rose watched the two older girls a few minutes and then slipped off the porch back into her own yard.

"Mother, while we were gone Betty Rose was the funniest little thing imaginable," Janet laughed. "Whenever we met any of the neighborhood children who play with Betty Rose all the time, and they yelled 'Hello!' at her she just raised her head high in the air and ignored them. But whenever Nadine or I spoke to any one she smiled so sweetly and spoke to them, too."

"That was because she had on her pretty hat," mother laughed heartily at Janet's story. "Betty Rose is always that way when she wears the embroidered hat."

"Just look at her now," Nadine pointed out into the street where Betty Rose, minus the embroidered hat, was playing happily with the neighborhood children, whom a little while before she had chosen to ignore.

Janet's mother laughed again. "She's just an example of a person whose hat is sometimes too small for their head," she ventured.

Instantly Nadine agreed with her. "I'd call it a very young case of swelled head," she talked earnestly. "If I were her mother I'd take that snobbery out of her before she gets older. If there is any one whom people detest it's a person who acts like Betty Rose did. They deserve to be just as unpopular as they soon become."

A roadster in which the mayor was accustomed to "jaunt about" town approached and Nadine ran out to wave at her father. Together they rode away and Mrs. Rhodes went into the house to begin supper. Janet left alone, sat on the front porch seemingly absorbed in watching the neighborhood children play. But her mother knew that in reality she was doing some serious thinking.

After a little time she came out into the kitchen. "Mother, I guess my hat was getting a little bit too small for my head," she admitted, a tremulous smile playing around the corners of her mouth. "But I believe that I've found it out in time to get the swelling out of my head so that it will fit more comfortably before any one except you has discovered it."

She reached for the paring knife and took up one of the potatoes from the pan her mother was holding. "I'll surely do my best to make Gertrude and Ruby have a good time," she continued. "Right after supper I'll tell the neighborhood girls they are coming and tomorrow the V. V. girls, so they all will be suggesting things to do while they are here."—Baptist Boys and Girls.

Life's Mirror.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,

And souls that are pure and true;
So give to the world the best that you have,

And best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your live will flow,
A strength in your utmost needs;
Have faith, and a score of other hearts
Will have faith in your works and deeds.

Give truth and your gift will be paid in kind,

And honor will honor meet,
And the smile which is sweet will surely meet

A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what we are and do,

So give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

The Little Pink Rose.

Once there was a little pink Rosebud, and she lived down in a little dark house under the ground. One day she was sitting there, all by herself, and it was very still. Suddenly, she heard a little tap, tap, tap, at the door.

"Who is that?" she said.

"It's the Rain, and I want to come in," said a soft, sad, little voice.

"No, you can't come in," the little Rosebud said.

Then it was very still for a long time. At last, there came a little rustling, whispering sound, all around the window; rustle, rustle.

"Who is there?" said the little Rosebud.

"It's the sunshine," said a little, soft, cheery voice, "and I want to come in!"

"N—no," said the little pink Rosebud, you cannot come in."

By and by, as she sat so still, she heard tap, tap, tap, and rustle, rustle, rustle, all up and down the window pane, and on the door, and at the keyhole.

"Who is there?" she said.

"It's the Rain and the Sunshine, said two little voices together, "the Rain and the sunshine, and we want to come in! We want to come in!"

"Dear, dear," said the little Rosebud, "if there are two of you, I s'pose I shall have to let you in."

So she opened the door a little wee crack, and they came in. One took one of her little hands, and the other took her other little hand, and they ran, ran, ran with her, right up to the top of the ground. Then they said:

"Poke your head through!"

So she poked her head through; and she was in the midst of a beautiful garden. It was spring time, and all the other flowers had their heads poked through; and she was the prettiest little pink rose in the whole garden!—Sara Cone Bryant, in Best Stories to Tell to Children.

For Love of Aunt Lou.

Betty ran to tell John the good news that mother had just told her. Aunt Lou was coming to make them a visit. One time, when mother was very sick and they were sad little children, Aunt Lou had come and taken good care of mother until she got well. The children began immediately to think what they could do for their dear aunt. She had been so good to them that they wanted to do something nice in return.

She would be coming in one week; what could they do to make her visit pleasant? John said: "Let's ask mother; she can think of things better than we can."

Betty agreed to this, so mother put on her thinking-cap. "I know what," she said. "Aunt Lou is fond of flowers, and I have some hyacinth bulbs planted in small pots. Two of them are almost ready to bloom. You may have them."

The children each took a dime of their own money and bought pretty green saucers to put the pots on, and then put them in the dining-room window, where they got sunshine all day.

The buds on the long stems soon began to open, and the very day that Aunt Lou came both plants were in full bloom.

Betty and John had watched those plants every day, and before Aunt Lou arrived they placed them on a table in the room she was to occupy, with a pretty card standing by them with this message: "For Aunt Lou, with much love, from Betty and John."

Aunt Lou was much pleased with the flowers, but, most of all, she liked the loving thought back of the gift.—Our Little Ones.

"The keynote of Christianity is sympathy with God, solicitude for God, anxiety for God. Why does the prayer which teaches to pray make me to begin with the divine wants? Why does it tell me, before asking for my daily bread, or even for my pardon, to say, 'Hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven'? It is because Christian sympathy is, before all things, sympathy with God, because the deepest shadow which presses upon the soul of a follower of Christ is a vision of the cloud which seeks to dim his glory."

Presentation of Children's Contributions.

Fifteen hundred children, representing more than one hundred parishes in Philadelphia and vicinity on Saturday afternoon, May 31, took part in a series of outdoor tableaux and a procession at the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Chestnut Hill, in connection with the annual spring meeting of the Church School Service League of the Diocese and the annual presentation of the Bishop's Bricks Fund.

Bishop Garland presided, delivered an address and received from the hands of the children their offering to the Bishop's Bricks Fund. The latter represents the contributions of children to the extension work of the Church in the diocese.

The Convocation of West Philadelphia, at its spring meeting, May 22, inaugurated an entirely new departure in connection with convocation meetings. The new feature was a choir festival, in which the vested choirs of West Philadelphia churches took part, and to which all Church people and the public generally had been invited. Upwards of two hundred voices sang selected numbers. The combined choirs were under the direction of W. G. Hancock, organist of the Church of the Saviour; J. A. Crabtree, organist of St. Andrew's Church, and the Rev. A. E. Clay, rector of the Church of the Redemption.

The festival was in the Church of the Saviour and the business session was held in the afternoon in the parish house. The Rev. Franklin J. Clark, Secretary of the National Council, delivered an address and Bishop Garland also spoke.

First Open-Air Service: The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., rector of the Church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia, was the preacher Sunday afternoon, June 1, at the first of the summer series of Sunday afternoon open-air services on the Parkway at Twenty-third Street, under the auspices of the Pro-Cathedral of St. Mary.

The open-air services will continue throughout June and July.

Annual Convention of the Diocese.

The twentieth annual Convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg, which met at St. John's Church, Lancaster, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13 and 14, was one of the largest and most successful Conventions in the history of the diocese.

The Convention opened with a service, at which the Rev. H. G. Hartman, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, the Rev. George D. Graeff, and the Rev. George M. McCormick, officiated. The Rev. H. G. Hartman welcomed the clergy and deputies on behalf of the rector, the Rev. Henry Lowndes Drew, who was confined to his bed by a sudden attack of illness.

Bishop Darlington's address emphasized the importance of Church attendance and incidentally contained a word of admonition to the clergy on the great need of care in both the preparation and delivery of the sermon.

At the conclusion of the service a business session was held, the convention proceeding to the nomination of officers and members of the various committees.

In the evening the annual banquet of the convention was held in the Odd Fellows' Hall. James H. Spotts, Secretary-Treasurer of the vestry of St. John's Parish, introduced the toastmaster of the evening, J. W. B. Bausman, Esq., of Lancaster. The first speaker was the Hon. George S. Zilzer, Governor of New Jersey, and a Churchman, whose subject was, "Common Sense as to the Book of Common Prayer and God's Common People."

"Impressions of My Journey in the Orient" was the subject of an address given by the Rev. Dr. George W. Richards, President of the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church, Lancaster, Pa.

The Bishop and General Chas. M. Clement, Chancellor of the Diocese, also made brief addresses.

The following officers were elected: Secretary of the Diocese, the Rev. Archibald M. Judd; Assistant Secretary, the Ven. William Dorwart, Archdeacon of Harrisburg.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. Rollin A. Sawyer, William Heakes, Floyd Appleton, Ph. D., Lewis Nichols, Leroy F. Baker; Messrs. T. S. Hamilton, F. K. Lukenbach, Thomas J. Brown, T. S. Hammond and Col. W. F. Reynolds.

Deputies to Provincial Synod: the Ven. H. A. Post and the Ven. F. T. Eastment, alternate.

A Canon was adopted by which the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese is entitled to elect five women as its representatives on the Executive Council of the Diocese.

A resolution was adopted urging the government of the United States to take immediate steps to enter the World Court of Justice.

Filled With the Spirit.

Do you want to be filled with the Spirit of God? Then you must be filled with the Word of God. Another thing: the Spirit of God is a consuming Spirit. Do you want to be filled with the Spirit? Then look out, because the Spirit will burn up everything that will burn, all the dross. If you are unwilling to have the dross burned up, then do not ask to be filled with the Spirit, which will consume all the sin and dross. But, beloved, it will be burned some day—why not now? Then you can go forward to the day of judgment fearlessly because you have received God's Spirit, and you have asked Him to cleanse you from all sin.

Motherhood.

Mother of Christ, long slain, forth glided she,
Following the children joyously astir
Under the cedrus and the olive-tree,
Pausing to let their laughter float to her,

Each voice an echo of a voice more dear;
She saw a little Christ in every face.
When lo! another woman pressing near,
Yearned o'er the tender life that filled the place;

And Mary sought the woman's hand and said,
"I know thee not; yet know thee, memory tossed;

And what hath led thee here as I am led—
These bring to thee a child beloved and lost?"

How radiant was my little one!
And He was fair,
Yea, fairer than the fairest sun,
And like its rays through amber spun
His sunbright hair.
Still I can see it shine and shine!"

"Even so," the woman said, "was mine."

"His ways were ever darling ways,"
And Mary smiled—
"So soft, so clinging! Glad relays
Of love were all His precious days.
My little child,
Was like an infinite light that gleamed."

"Even so was mine," the woman dreamed.

Then whispered Mary, "Tell me, thou,
Of thine." And she:
"O, mine was rosy as a bough
Blooming with roses, sent somehow
To bloom for me.
His balmy fingers left a thrill
Within my breast that warms me still."

Then gazed she down some darker, wilder hour,
And said, when Mary questioned, knowing not,
"Who art thou mother of so sweet a flower?"

"I am the mother of Iscariot."

Oh think! to step ashore, and that shore heaven!

To take hold of a hand, and that God's hand!

To breathe a new air, and that celestial air!

To feel invigorated and know its immortality!

Oh think! to pass from the stress and the tempest

To one unbroken smile: to wake and find it glory!

—The Christian.

It is a solemn truth, and one which we need to lay to heart, that it is possible to "hold the truth in unrighteousness." It is possible to know the Bible from cover to cover, and yet not to be sanctified. It is possible to hold the most orthodox doctrines with regard to justification and sanctification by faith, with regard to the present work of the Holy Spirit, with regard to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in glory, and yet not to have our lives changed one whit by the mere holding of these truths. Let us be very careful that we do not confuse mere seeing with being.

A Prayer.

By Frederick H. Adler.

Great God! I pray Thee now to grant to Man,
To humble Man, if so Thou deem it wise,
A heart and soul both conscious still of Thee,
Then nothing would remain here to despise.

I plead that all Mankind on earth might claim
The thrift of bee in filling full its hive;
The courage of the crocus, when in spring
To lifts its head through snow it still will strive.

Humility of sweet arbutus bloom,
While hiding beauty underneath the mould;
The sympathy of good Samaritan,
Whose heart was pure, untarnished by base gold.

The charity of Saint Bernard in Alps;
Broad mind of sage who seeks a poet's dreams;
The faith of horse toward master whom he loves;
True warmth of sun, as on the earth it beams.

Rare skill of spider, when it weaves a web
More strong than girders that, storm-tossed, will bend;
The love of mother for her vagrant son;
And nobleness of youth who dies for friend.

If traits like these, O Spirit, Great Unseen,
Thy children wore their Master's livery here,
This world, now harsh, a perfect place would be,
That soon would bid all Heaven to appear!

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

To be without faults is to be without friends.

"A weak faith may lay hold on a strong Christ."

The man who has not suffered is still uneducated.—Goethe.

The inventor of pins did more for the world than the builder of the pyramids.

Considering what God has done will soon lead us to rejoice in what He will do.

Many who are chronic misfits would find success at the end of the path of self-renunciation, where God waits to bless.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Today I have got out of all trouble, or rather I have cast out all trouble, for it was not outside, but within and in my opinion.—M. Antonius.

It is not the high summer alone that is God's. The winter also is His, . . . and all man's winters are His—the winter of our poverty, the winter of our sorrow, the winter of unhappiness, even the winter of our discontent.—George Macdonald.

"Eternal light! Eternal light!
How pure the soul must be,
When, placed within Thy searching sight,
It shrinks not, but with calm delight
Can live and look on Thee!"

O Lord, who bearest away the sin of the world, we bless Thee that Thou hast given us rest through Thy sorrow, and life through Thy death. Continue Thou with us in our temptations; and make us brave, we beseech Thee, to confess Thy name before men.—Exchange.

Abiding in the Vine has certain inevitable evidences. The chief of these is that we shall bear fruit, and the fruit is of the nature of the Vine. It is therefore self-evident of Christians, "By their fruit ye shall know them."

How far is love, even with many wrong opinions, to be preferred before truth itself without love! We may die without the knowledge of many truths, and yet be carried to Abraham's bosom. But if we die without love, what will knowledge avail? Just as much as it avails for the devil and his angels.—John Wesley.

A man who passed through long and bitter experience declared at the end of his trial, "I have learned two things in recent days—two things that are worth all I have had to wade through to lay hold upon them: one is the unsubstantiality of what seems most solid in earthly power; the other is the utter dependability, the absolute reality of God! He has never failed me."—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

We shall come so close up to all the world's wickedness that it cannot strike us. We shall be saved from it by our pity for it. We shall be far from its contagion the closer that we come to its needs. We shall be pure as the angels the more completely we give ourselves up to the ministering angel's work. This is the true positiveness of the Christian's purity, the real safety of the loving and laboring life.—Phillips Brooks.

WAR

One of the quests of the early chemists was to find a universal solvent. As in the search for the philosopher's stone, there were many claims set forth by men who thought themselves discoverers. The story is told that one of the students of Gilbert, the great physicist and chemist, came to him and exultantly declared: "I have found the universal solvent." Gilbert smiled and asked: "In what sort of container have you got this solvent?" The smile as much as the question showed the youth that the very fact that there was a container proved that the universal solvent had not been found.

To the question, "Is war ever justifiable?" there can, we believe, no answer be given. War is not an isolated act of aggression. War is the inevitable result of existing conditions. It would provoke a smile of derision should anybody solemnly ask: "Is it right that four and two should continue to make six?" or "Is it right that water should expand in freezing and burst its container?"

In one of the most vivid of Stevenson's short stories, Markheim, there is a statement, "Murder is no special category," which is no more than the answer to Shylock's question: "Hates any man the thing he would not kill?"

It may be perfectly true that "war is hell," but it is no less true that hell, like war, is the sum of certain sequences. The only alternative to hell, even in thought in a world where sin persists, is annihilation.

The insane propaganda of misnamed patriotism which makes every man or nation on the other side of the river a rival; the cheap sophistry of "my country, right or wrong," which can only mean, "If my country be wrong, I will make the wrong more strong": these constitute the material out of which war is made.

The problems of government today are wholly unlike those of the time when we became a nation. Then the problems were political and had to do with the organization of the body social so that it could function as an organism. The immediate need was to give to every individual his place in the organized political body. Today our problem is not one that concerns the individual primarily. The organization has long ago become an organism. We are dealing now, not with questions of representation in government, but with problems that relate to the maintenance and expansion of the whole organism. We are dealing no longer with form, but with substance. The orator who proclaimed today, "Give me liberty or give me death," would not be a fire-brand of revolution. He would be lighting a candle in the sunlight. There is liberty enough for all, in the sense that liberty was once defined. Patrick Henry warmed himself by his own log fire. So long as his arm was strong, there was no reason why he should go cold. Today a group of operators sitting around a table, or a crowd of miners, many of whom cannot speak the very language of Henry, can put out the fires in a million homes. Henry was shouted down by the conservatives.

Some day, when winter blasts are blowing, some prophet of the new day will cry out: "Give me coal or give me death." The conservatives will try to shout him down, but all in vain. The problems today are commercial. The vast organism of the national life has many organs, and the sum of these organs is called commerce. Commerce is the science of physical needs and the method of supplying these needs. Any government which tolerates the exploitation of the people by a few is like a glutton who stops his heart by stuffing his belly. Any government which protects those who exploit the undeveloped peoples of the earth is like the drug fiend whose moral fibre decays as the poison is sucked into the tiny filaments of brain tissue.

War is insanity, caused by the progress of disease in the organism; but men have become frenzied to madness by parasites that infest the hair and skin, and multiply on bedding and in clothes. The problems, large and small (and the parasite lives only on an unclean organism), are the parasites upon the organism we call a nation.

No international court, no league of nations, can function till there be incorporated into the basic law of all nations that still inappropriate statement which is today a part of our own organic law, "Labor shall not be considered an article of commerce," and the conscience of the world begin to accept the dictum that property is but the extension of personality, and responsibility to the whole organism accompanies pari passu every such extension.

FOOLS

There are ten different words in the Bible that are translated "fool." It is not too much to say that the Bible is the greatest authority in existence upon that species of the race commonly denominated fool. The Bible not only describes, but defines with narrowing nicety the characteristics of every type. It goes even further, for in some cases it traces the process of development and tells how and why the special type of fool comes into being.

Only one of these ten types is without moral significance—the moron type, the insipid, stupid fool whose mentality is so low as seemingly to be non-existent. Of this type are the virgins whose value in the scheme of things is typified by a row of empty lamps—and the man who built a house by the side of a mountain torrent and never dreamed it would rain again, and the moron who counted his gift of gold of more value than the consecrating power that alone could give it worth. It is not in tones of condemnation, but of infinite pity, that the Master speaks of such. Only the proof of utter incapacity to provide, or plan, or judge can justify the judgment that any man is a moron; hence the reckless use of this word is itself a perilous business. To deny to any man his place in the scheme of life is a grave matter, and the accuser, if he cannot make good his charge, is in danger of being himself condemned as a traitor to the common good. The hell-fire which threatened the reckless despoiler of his brother's right to be counted a man was the Gehenna into which the bodies of traitors were flung.

The other nine types of fool are all examples of the neglect or misuse of the intellectual powers. When Laban rebukes Jacob for stealing away in the night, he calls him a fool. "Your cunning," he says, "is born of cowardice, and cowardice is the child of dishonor." One who has never learned how to respect a father's love for his children is not merely ignorant; he is morally deficient. Achan is another type of fool. Joshua declares that it was Achan's ugly greed that made him such a fool as to think he could cheat the most high God. The fools in Israel in the time of Isaiah and Jeremiah were the purveyors and practisers of social immorality, fools that failed to see that they were undermining the foundations of the State and were the prophets of their own doom. There is the boasting fool, who forgets that there is a God in the universe, and thinks he can change the winds by twisting the weather-vane. Then there is the fool-complete, the self-confident fool, who deals in scorn and hates knowledge as a thing unclean.

Then there is the braying fool, the sort of a fool that fails to find God in a test-tube, and glibly declares, "There is no God." Then there is the thick-headed fool, the fool who will not learn—"who when he walketh by the way saith to every one that he is a fool." Then there is the thoughtless fool, the fool who sees only with his eyes, whose heart is blind and whose sympathies are atrophied. Last of all, there is the fool who has sense, but never puts it to the best uses. Such is the rich fool of the parable, who thinks of none other than himself, who lives and dies in a world of things, who never finds out what it is to be a man. In the dramatic form in which the Great Teacher portrays life, the tragic figure is this type of fool.

The teaching in the great Book is plain. The mind is as sacred as the body—and larger issues are involved in right thinking than even in the mastery of appetites, for "as a man thinketh, so he is."

"I GO A FISHING"

Deep down in the heart and mind of most men there is the slumbering doubt of God. They long like the Jews of old for some sign from heaven to assure them of God's presence and power. "If," they say to themselves, "I could only be sure of it all." It is the uncertainty that takes the eagerness out of endeavor, the haunting feeling that after all it may be a mistake. At the root of this doubt there is always an ignorance of Christ's teaching. With untiring reiteration Christ declares that men cannot be startled into the kingdom of heaven. The brothers of the rich man would not be converted, though one rose from the dead. Miracles could not change the heart. The disciples had witnessed Christ's healing of the blind, the sick and the maimed. It left them dazed and wondering. It was all outside of their experience. Now in the miraculous draft of fish something had come to them that fit into the habit of their life, and they had witnessed an act that dwarfed the highest exercise of their practiced skill. Their wonder was manifest. Astonishment gripped them. Superhuman knowledge and power left them afraid. They had been listening to Christ's teaching, much of which seemed the utter denial of the axioms of the human wisdom and experience. It was a beautiful system, no doubt, but hopelessly impractical. Much as they admired Him, they doubtless many times thought Him an impractical dreamer. Suddenly this dreamer gets into their own boat; takes a hand in their own business; and success comes to them so startling and supreme as to be in effect a miracle. They felt the presence of divine power close to them. Back of the beautiful dream-talk of the Christ was omnipotence. What they had half-pitied in Christ took on a new meaning. They were sailors and fishermen, but here was a hillsman whose words the waves obeyed and whose eye could pierce the depths of the sea.

This experience of the power and knowledge of Christ left them utterly afraid. Christ's goodness took on a new meaning. All goodness took on a new meaning. Goodness was not a negation; it was the supreme affirmation, the omnipotence that nothing could stand against. To defy goodness, to refuse to accept it as the law of life, was to array all the universe against you.

By a flash that scorched while it illumined, they saw the flimsiness of their self-excusing, the amazing impertinence of their criticisms of Christ, the utter paltriness of their own self-righteousness, and the hideous mockery of their own self-esteem. They grew suddenly afraid. This teacher, so gentle, so tender, to little children; so pitiful of harlot and thief; who laid His hand upon the loathsome flesh of the leper, who sat at table with publicans; this teacher of theirs whom they thought it necessary again and again to shield from the criticism of the crowd; this man who trampled again and again upon the conventions, and seemed oblivious of the shocked looks of pious respectability; this teacher of theirs was divine. In Him they saw God. If God was like that, what must God think of them? What was their attitude to little children? How did they act towards the poor derelicts of the city streets? How near had they ever come to the leper? How often had they ever dared to brave the conventions, and be seen in the company of or shared the family meal with those upon whom society frowned?

The very things upon which they had been priding themselves were the things that now they were afraid for Christ to see in their lives.

It is a wonderful scene when these men suddenly look into their own lives through the eyes of Christ.

Is there any need to make the application? If these men found that the things in their own lives upon which they prided themselves were the things that were damning them, what of us?

PEACE.

With eager heart, and will on fire,
I fought to win my great desire.
"Peace shall be mine," I cried, but life
Grew bitter in the endless strife.

My soul grew weary, and my pride
Was wounded deep, to heaven I cried:
"God grant me Peace, or I must die."
The dumb stars glittered no reply.

Broken at last, I bowed my head,
Forgetting all myself, and said:
"Whatever comes, His will be done."
And in that moment Peace was won.

—Van Dyke.

THE LAYMAN'S PART IN THE CHURCH

Report to the National Council of the Committee on "Increased Lay Activity"

THE adequate solution of the problem of maintaining and increasing the active and effective interest of the laity in the work of the Church is essential to the continuance of the life of the Church itself. No Church, not even though it were the admitted repository of the pure faith once delivered to the saints, can perpetuate itself beyond a single generation except by the accession of new members. No liturgy, no matter how satisfying its expression and no matter how compelling its appeal, can purify the minds and lift up the hearts of those who never hear its words. No discipline, no matter how sound it may be in psychology, nor how powerful it may be in practice, can mould the lives and strengthen the souls of those who do not come under its influence.

What are these bald truisms but to say that the Church, in all of its multiform contacts with human life, is itself limited in those contacts by the span of the human life? It is for this world a problem of the here and now. Doubtless, in the great Church Triumphant there remaineth a rest for the people of God, but for the Church Militant there is ever present the insistent call to be about the Father's business. This call is not for the clergy alone. Fundamentally, Christianity is a missionary adventure in which every believer becomes a witness unto the uttermost part of the earth. It is no disparagement, rather it is a fuller conception of the great office of the ministry, to say that without the enlistment of the active enthusiasm, without the release of the spiritual zeal, and without the employment of the missionary impulses of the laity, the Church must inexorably live a maimed and halting life. Your committee does not consider that it should enter into any historical explanation as to why the Episcopal Church, with the single brilliant example of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has so notably neglected the field of lay activity. But we take it there can be no denial, first, that the Episcopal Church has not actively and intensively gone about the task of organizing and inspiring and applying the energies of its laymen as a whole for the work of the Church as a whole; and second, that both by reason by history and by unanswerable examples of other communions, a vast source of beneficent energy has been neglected alike for the enrichment of the spiritual life of the individual layman that serves and of the corporate Church that is so supported. The layman who is deprived of such an opportunity of service is eternally poorer thereby, and the Church that does not develop such a source of power is temporally doomed to a narrowed and restricted existence. For the sake of the Church and for the sake of her children, an unbreakable alliance must be formed between the mother and the sons and daughters for the advancement of the kingdom. In the glad contagion of such service on the one hand and such direction on the other will be seen the outworking of Jeremy Taylor's saying:

"He that loves is happy, and she that is loved is safe."

Now, therefore, this committee begs leave to submit the following recommendations for increased lay activity and the ways by which it may be effected:

1. That the General Convention (or the National Council) earnestly direct the attention of the provinces, the dioceses and the individual parishes to the great and pressing need of greater activity on the part of the lay members of the Episcopal Church, and that it also urge the development of these latent powers on the part of the laity by offering to the laity organized opportunity in the parishes, dioceses and provinces for general work and for the work herein recommended:

Exhibit "A"—Report of the Committee on Increased Lay Activity to the Synod of Washington, November 20-22, 1923.

2. Personal Lay Evangelism—The telling of the story of Christ in such a way as to win men as disciples and for their salvation and to lead them to accept baptism and confirmation.

This is the goal of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and this organization should be strengthened and made more effective where it exists and should be established where it does not exist, or personal workers' groups should be formed in every such parish and mission, as suggested by the plan of personal lay work now actually in operation, given in Exhibit "B" herewith. This plan has been adopted by the National Council of the Daughters of the King.

It is not offered to supplant, but supplement the Brotherhood where the simpler form of organization and entire local control is acceptable. Under this general head of "Personal Lay Evangelism" we offer the following exhibits:

Exhibit "B"—Personal Lay Evangelism in the Episcopal Church as practiced by a group of personal lay workers for three years engaged in the work.

Exhibit "C"—Seven articles by Rev. Julius A. Schaad, General Missioner, published in the "Witness": (1) "Evangelism," (2) "Lay Evangelism," (3) "Evangelism in the Parish," (4) "Human Element in the Making of a Christian," (5) "How to Make America Christian," (6) "Our Lord's Example in Personal Evangelism," (7) "Christian Evangelism."

Exhibit "D"—"Evangelism in the Church." A book by the Rev. Julius A. Schaad, General Missioner, approved by the National Council and in process of publication by the Church, which will surely win the support of the layman to and clearly show him how to prosecute evangelism.

Exhibit "E"—An address on "Evangelism, the Church's Need," by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, General Missioner.

3. A reiteration and strong pronouncement by the General Convention emphasizing active evangelism on the part of both clergy and laity as a fixed program of the Church and invoking the power of the convention to the effect that the bishops and clergy throughout the Church accept this program of the National Church and put it into effect and, particularly, by enlisting the laymen in the work.

4. The inception of a week day evening prayer meeting in the parish house to be conducted by laymen and women and to consist of Scripture reading and comment, song and individual and corporate prayers, both precomposed and extempore.

This communion with God is needed not only for more loving devotion, deeper inspiration and more abiding faith in Him, but to give the layman an opportunity, which he is now without in the Church, of publicly and individually expressing himself about his religion and his Christian experience and of pouring out his soul's desires for his own sake and for the sake of others. These prayer meetings will serve to develop consecrated and spirit filled Christians who will feel impelled to make Christ, their Saviour, known to others.

5. Let every parish maintain in its Church school a large and strong senior Bible class of both men and women, either separate or combined, with the special objective of furnishing officers and teachers for the school, and in every possible way giving loyal support to it. This is peculiarly the work of laymen and is the most effective way of interesting parents, their children and others in the most important department of the Church's work.

6. There should be a stronger effort made on the part of our bishops and clergy to appoint and employ a larger number of laymen as lay readers in mission work, which of itself will be beneficent and also an inspiration and support of the home parish.

7. Where it does not exist, it should be an especial activity of the laymen to establish real Christian fellowship between the parishes of the same city or town, the stronger helping the weaker and all cooperating as a unit for the extension of the Kingdom of God.

8. That laymen urge the use and practice of daily prayers by the family in every home, not only for the members of that household, but for all members of Christ's dispersed flock, so that all of His servants everywhere may cease not in their efforts until there is one fold and one Shepherd.

9. We recommend that every Diocese be requested to appoint by its Bishop or Diocesan Convention a committee of two or more active laymen on Lay Activity with whom this General Committee or its successor may confer, for the purpose of creating a closer bond of unity and exchanging ideas that will promote a deeper feeling of responsibility for service and increased lay activity along all lines of Church work.

We respectfully request that this report be approved by the National Council for presentation to the next General Convention, and when approved, that it be put (excepting the exhibits) in printed form for distribution among the members of the convention.

If the National Council cannot approve this report or desires to make suggestions for its improvement, then we ask that it be returned to this committee with the Council's advice for amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

From the Address to the Council of the Diocese of Virginia.

By the Right Reverend William Cabell Brown, D. D.

I HAVE been so much impressed by the splendid work done among the students at the University by the Rev. Noble C. Powell, and this too despite the manifest handicap under which he has labored by reason of lack of suitable equipment, that I have felt it my duty to lay the whole situation before the Council for its consideration.

In the last week of February I received and had a long conference with a committee of the vestry of St. Paul's Memorial Church at the University. I was so much struck by their statement as to the range and possibilities of the chaplain's work that I requested the committee to send me a written memorandum of our conference which I might use in preparing my report to the Council.

While admitting frankly the great difficulty of giving exact figures, the members of the committee reported that in their judgment, some 500 students, probably mostly Episcopal students, attend with fair regularity the services at St. Paul's. Inside of the Church, and outside, through visits, the clubs and in various other ways it is fair to estimate that about 1,200 students are reached by the mission, more or less positively out of some 1,800 students in the University.

I was particularly pleased by their statement as to the effect of the mission on the student body, which after all is the one justification for the continuation of St. Paul's Memorial Church. They stated that figures do not give accurately the impression which we believe is the correct impression of the change which has been brought about in the students' outlook since this mission was started. Some fifteen years ago very few of the more popular and active students were affiliated with religious activities. In fact, it was rather looked down upon as a line of student activity. Today some thirty or more students are considering entering the ministry of the Episcopal Church, including some twelve or fifteen who have definitely decided to do so; of these at least a half dozen are among the students who are the leaders in the student world. It is no exaggeration to go even further and say that the influence of St. Paul's extends far beyond into the entire student body, and, we believe, into the faculty personnel as well.

The committee called attention to the valuable effect of this mission upon the status of the Church in Virginia from the fact that many of these men who are drawn to the Church will settle in Virginia. They did not forget to note also the intimate relationship which is bound to develop even beyond its present extent between the University and the Seminary in Alexandria.

In presenting their plea for larger interest in, and more substantial aid to, this highly important field on the part of the Diocese, they felt it very right to ask that a comparison should be made between what the Diocese received for similar expenditures in other mission fields and the result achieved by the expenditure of only $866.66 at the University, where the rector is ministering to more than 500 young men who are communicants or at least adherents of the Church, and exerting an influence on some 700 more. Besides this, Mr. Powell is directly charged with the duty of counselling and advising the postulants for Holy Orders who are being prepared to enter the Seminary, is chaplain to the Training School for Nurses with some sixty or eighty students, and has general supervision of half dozen missions in the adjacent mountains.

As the result of my conference with the committee from St. Paul's Memorial Church at the University, I am convinced that there are two problems which must be solved without delay, if the Church is to measure up at all adequately to its opportunities.

Immediate relief ought to be given to the rector, who is now attempting to do more than any one man can do, or ought to be allowed to attempt. I propose to solve this problem by assigning one of the deacons who is to be ordained in June to assist Mr. Powell, beginning his work there at the opening of the session next fall, and asking the D. M. S. to pay his salary from January 1, 1925. From September until the end of the year the congregation will take care of his salary.

The second problem is a more serious one. For the successful prosecution of the work there is urgent need of a parish house and a new church. The present wooden building is too small to accommodate the congregation, for it has frequently happened that students are turned away for lack of room, it is out of keeping with the architecture of the other buildings at the University, and is utterly unworthy of our Church. As an evidence of our appreciation of the great importance of this mission, and our desire to aid in its continuation and development, I hope that an item may be placed in the budget of the Diocese that may serve to aid materially in the erection of the church and parish house. And furthermore, I would commend this work to our Church people as, in my judgment, the one that at this time is most worthy of their prayers and generous financial aid.

THE CLERGY OF THE FUTURE.

We must look to the mothers for their help in providing the Church with its ministers. You all know how the work of the Church is hindered, because of the lack of a sufficient number of ordained men. The difficulty is in the home, where the old feeling of the blessedness of sending a son into the ministry has been lost, where the greatness of a life of unselfish service is obscured by the emphasis put upon material success. The course of a man's life is usually determined in boyhood and youth, in the home. If the influence there leads him to think that the main thing for him is to make a great place for himself in the world, to accumulate wealth, to get ahead of other boys and men, and exploit them for his own advantage, that is the kind of life which will attract him and very likely lead to disappointment and the feeling some day that he has not made the noblest use of himself. But if there be instilled into his mind the feeling that largeness in service, the consecration of his powers, his education, whatever means or influence may come to him, measure the worth of his life, and that the ministry of the Church gives place and opportunity to fill out this ideal as no other calling does, our homes will give to the Church the ministers it so greatly needs. No undue pressure ought to be put upon the boys, no decision made, until they have reached the age when they can think for themselves and reasonably act. It is fine to make the tone of the home favorable for high and fine choices in life, to bring up boys in unselfishness disposed to hear and heed that great call which comes out of the world distracted and depressed through hard conditions, and in want of a sympathetic leadership into the true inheritance of the children of God. There may be boys in other families than your own to whom you may open this vision of service to their fellow men, making them feel that the Saviour of the world is calling men to minister with Him and for Him, as truly as when He walked beside the Sea of Galilee in the old time. —The Bishop of Newark.

HOLY, HOLY, HOLY.

Holy, Holy, Holy,
Life of all things living,
Infinite, Eternal, past all praise;
Holy, Holy, Holy,
Source of all good-giving,
Give us sight that we may see Thy light's pure rays.

Holy, Holy, Holy,
Far beyond our knowing;
Can we deem Thee less than saints believe?
Holy, Holy, Holy,
In Thy grace still growing
May we more and more of Thy vast Truth perceive.

Holy, Holy, Holy,
We are naught before Thee,
From the dust we came, and dust shall be:
Holy, Holy, Holy,
Help us to adore Thee,
Lift us to Thy glory, Blessed Trinity!

FACING THE FACTS

From the Convention Address of
The Rt. Reverend Paul Matthews, D. D.

I WISH to call your attention to the situation as it exists. Most of us were brought up in the Christian faith; I am inclined to hope and believe that all of you do now believe the Christian religion in its entirety. But it is obvious that there are those in the Church, and they are influential if not numerous, who do not so believe.

But we are told, we mustn't do anything about it. If we do we are narrow-minded bigots and uncharitable reactionaries and would-be autocrats. We are told that those who deny the faith, or if they do not deny it themselves, those who wish to give others the privilege of denying it must not be disturbed in their propaganda. They must be allowed to remain as accredited teachers in the Church when they no longer believe her teaching and quite definitely refuse to teach it, and teach instead the direct opposite.

I feel, however, that we are at the beginning of a serious conflict. I want you to realize that. It may be perfectly possible for some men with no conscious sense of disloyalty to remain in the Church while they are all the time trying to undermine her teaching. You understand that they feel that they have a perfect right to do this, and that they are right in doing it. They would not call it undermining the Church's faith, of course; they would consider it, finding and following the truth wherever it led them.

This has been going on for some time; why should it not be permitted to continue? I presume that some of us have been dull and a bit slow to believe that conditions were really what they now so plainly appear to be.

I, for one, am convinced that we must take our stand firmly on the faith as delivered by the apostles and as this Church hath received the same. I do not want any formal heresy trials, but it must be made so plain that this Church does really stand uncompromisingly for the facts of the Christian faith that such trials are rendered unnecessary.

The House of Bishops has spoken very clearly, and I think wisely, and they will, I believe, take just as strong a stand again when the occasion comes. The General Convention in its House of Clerical and Lay Deputies must also declare itself, for the statement has been made that the bishops exceeded their authority in issuing this pastoral, and that it is the province of the whole General Convention to pronounce judgment in such matters. This is, of course, not the case.

The General Convention has no power over the Christian faith, either to alter it, or in the strict sense of the word, to define it. But the General Convention can bear witness to what this Church has received, and the real point of importance is that it is to the General Convention that the appeal has been made. Therefore, let the General Convention speak clearly. I wish to see the issue clearly drawn.

Trials for heresy, like surgical operations, are always to be deplored, and avoided, if possible, yet even so, amputation is better than gangrene. But when the General Convention speaks—and I cannot contemplate the disaster which would result in the remote contingency that the General Convention would refuse to speak, or the even remoter possibility that these departures from the faith would be upheld—when the General Convention thus appealed to clearly speaks, then I for one shall very confidently expect that those who have put forward these propositions to alter the teaching of the Church will either withdraw their proposals or else withdraw themselves.

Let us settle this question fairly and squarely, without rancor or recrimination, but without fear or favor. Do not let us imagine that it is a situation that will cure itself, a fire that will burn itself out for lack of fuel. It will consume us if we do not quench it.

Let it be decided whether this Church stands for something more than liberty and such an all-embracing inclusiveness as would make the Creeds of only permissive authority, and I can promise you, gentlemen, that just as soon as such a position were definitely taken, the matter would be settled by the voluntary and prompt withdrawal from their posts of most, if not all, of those to whom the received faith of the Church is still a matter of conscience.

I hope that all of us realize how vital it is that this Diocese should bear witness clearly at the next General Convention.

I believe that much of this trouble could have been avoided if we had taken counsel together. If a parish priest has doubts and difficulties, why should he not consult with his Bishop? If a Bishop has doubts, why doesn't he consult with his brethren instead of taking the world into his confidence?

Do you not think that if the matter were so approached in a brotherly spirit and in an effort at conciliation, very much that has hurt most in this matter might have been avoided and that a way out might even have been found?

As it is, I believe in open frankness, and that it is both foolish and wrong to proclaim "Peace, peace, when there is no peace."

A Modern Interpretation of the Ten Commandments

"I am the Lord thy God. I am the Truth that brought thee out of darkness, and out of the bondage of ignorance."

I.—Thou shalt have no other gods but me. I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

II.—Thou shalt not make to thyself false images of thyself, or thy family, or thy friends. Thou shalt not bow down or worship thyself or any creed, doctrine, faith or philosophy; for I am the Truth, and the loss of truth shall be visited upon the children, to the third and fourth generation, for hate shall be between them; but those that seek Me shall find Me, and I shall make them free. Love shall be among them; and I will show mercy to thousands that love Me and keep My commandments.

III.—Thou shalt not forsake Truth; I will not hold him guiltless that turneth Truth into a lie.

IV.—Remember to keep one day of rest for thy spirit. Six days shalt thou labour for the comfort of the body, but one day, the seventh, shalt thou nourish thy soul. In it thou shalt do nothing to take thee away from quiet, peaceful thoughts, thou, thy household, and thy friends shall seek the joys of the spirit; and the stranger will come within thy gates for peace and rest.

V.—Honour the Past, as well as thy father and mother; speak reverently of and to older persons that thou mayest enjoy the civilization that they have given thee.

VI.—Thou shalt not kill the faith, hope, love or aspiration of any one.

VII.—Thou shalt not foster or encourage in any way impure thoughts in thyself or in another.

VIII.—Thou shalt not take from the character of thy neighbour nor detract from his good intentions; thou shalt not in any way belittle the good deeds or motives of another.

IX.—Thou shalt not misinterpret the words of thy neighbour nor wilfully misconstrue the deeds or intentions of thy fellowman.

X.—Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, nor desire his possessions; thou shalt not begrudge him his prosperity, his home, or his happiness."—

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE CHURCH AND THE PROBLEMS OF YOUTH.

A Committee Report to the Church Service League Commission.

How can the Church best provide a solution for some of the present problems of youth?

Representatives of the three nationally constituted Church agencies dealing directly with young people—the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Girls' Friendly, and the Church Mission of Help—have, after extended and serious consideration of this question, brought in a report which, while it frankly offers no solution for present day problems, suggests that the task before us all is not so much to solve problems as to "come near to human lives." A practical program is submitted, which includes a discussion of moot questions and the adoption of certain simple ideals and activities of home life, based on an attitude of reciprocal giving. The committee bases its conclusions on the foundations indicated by the following postulates: "Without real home life a Christian society perishes. The pathway to this intimate human contact lies through the home. The home is the proving-ground of corporate life; within the home the individual may be prepared to realize the varied claims of social allegiance through the exercise of right relationship between the young and the old, the weak and the strong, the slow and the quick-witted, the practical and the temperamental, the stabilizers and the experimenters. Within the home, right attitudes toward essentials of family solidarity will ease the strain of changing methods of living. Again, within the home the mastery of self may most readily be acquired, and self-restraint be exercised. In the intimacy of family life lies a unique opportunity for the practice of tolerance. These are necessary antecedents of personal freedom."

The committee finally expresses its belief that out of the heart of youth may be won a "free allegiance" to the ideals of creative home life, an allegiance which, unencumbered by the timidities of middle age, will dare to stake personal satisfaction on the fight for attainment. Together, Christian youth and its elders, may on their knees within the home realize that they indeed touch the "world intangible," have come to know the "world unknowable" have clutched the "inapprehensible." The home in that moment of revelation becomes a door which opens into the kingdom of heaven.

Before offering concrete suggestions as to ways in which the home as the proving-ground of Christian life may be attained, the committee would make the following general statements:

1. Youth, confronted with shifting standards of conduct, is consciously or unconsciously searching for criterions, and finding no guidance but its own judgment, is forming opinions on a wide variety of subjects of life and conduct (including religion), with insufficient knowledge of cause and effect. Young people, along with their elders, hold no clear conception as to the distinction between extrinsic and intrinsic human values; both are more concerned with "getting on" than with developing personality.

2. Youth and age lack a common ground on which to meet and to consider differences in attitude toward custom and conduct, theory and practice, authority and institutions. A common ground is needed on which to meet and to drop the burden of suspicion as to each other's motives. The lack of understanding between young people and their elders too often makes seniors either fatuously certain of the sufficiency of youth or blindly convinced of this "depravity," so that young people, for fear they will be misjudged, refuse to talk frankly.

3. Youth's so-called rebellion against authority is at least in some measure the reflection of the attitude of its elders toward the self-constituted right of the individual to be released from compliance with governmental law.

4. Youth progressively tends to fraternize with youth to the exclusion of leisure-time contact with people of different ages. This phenomenon is one consequence of the withdrawal from the home itself, of the various functions, educative, productive, recreational, which formerly centered there. We all fail to understand that the home, released from the old type of functions, may be devoted to the creative association of member with member so as to form a bond of unity whose essential attribute shall be disciplined liberty.

The committee believes that the societies which its triple membership represents should endeavor to put into practice the simple program which follows, and that this statement, moreover, should be circulated in such form that its conclusions may be applicable to the program of the Young People's Movement, and to the programs of other organizations within the Church, diocesan and parochial:

- I. Make an unprejudiced effort through frank discussion of mooted social, economic, scientific or religious questions of the day, to get at the mind of youth.

- Preliminary discussion on the part of young people and of adults as separate groups, however, will often be necessary to assure a fair consideration of the point of view of each. The genius of both ages is needed "to study the practical while upholding the ideal."

- II. Think through, and encourage youth to think through, independently first and then collectively, from all angles of approach the probable results of contemporary social experiments and practices: for example, the individualistic attitude toward law enforcement, trial marriages and divorce, the married woman in business and industry.

- (a) Church summer conferences should be used as the occasion for conference, individual with individual, on moral questions such as those enumerated above, and to emphasize not only the Christian motives and ideals which should be the foundation of social practices, but the principles which should determine one's attitude toward sex, marriage, parenthood.

- (b) Each parish house should be a center for continuous, informal conference, and more particularly for the fostering of standards of recreation, which through application outside the parish may serve to help raise the standards of commercial recreation.

- III. Consider the ideals of the Christian home in preparation for young people's part in homes of their own, on the tacit assumption that within the home circle the normal life of the individual finds its starting point for community service. The key to the whole lies in the emphasis, not on comfort but on love, not on what each acquires but on what each sacrificially gives. Accordingly, the committee suggests a tentative outline for a normal Christian home (which is possible wherever the home is or whatever it is, whether in apartment house or on suburban estate), whose realization must yet wait on the participation of each member in:

Work. Through definite responsibilities assigned to each one which will give opportunity for creating something, for self-sacrifice, for the recognition of service, and for sharing in the family budget and in the responsibility for wise earning, saving and spending.

Pray. Through good times together, such as reading aloud, singing, picknicking, motoring, camping, worth-while table talk, birthday and holiday celebrations, and the cultivation by each member of the family of some talent that will give pleasure to the whole family.

Study. In which parents and children join and through which the family as a whole is continually broadening its horizon in varied fields.

Fellowship. Through cultivating and directing in the family relationships, the affections as one would any other talent, God-given for the service of the world.

Worship. Through grace at meals, which others than the father should say in turn, through some study, discussion, prayer or praise provided for regularly, if possible every day, and for church attendance for all the family together.

Young People's Fellowship Bulletin, Diocese of North Carolina.

Volume I of the Young People's Fellowship Bulletin of the Diocese of North Carolina has recently come to my desk. It is a magazine of sixteen pages, with reports of the leagues and an account of their conference at Burlington, a challenge from the Rev. R. B. Scovill, the Executive Secretary of the Diocese, and a brief message from the Bishop Coadjutor, Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick. The magazine is to be commended. First, because it is edited by one of the young people, Mr. Vann R. Lineback, Winston-Salem, N. C. Second, because it gives a comprehensive account of the activities of the leagues and fellowships in the Diocese; and third, because it begins its existence with almost 500 subscribers. It ought to be a helpful thing to have an Exchange between the diocesan and provincial organizations so that by comparison these young people's bulletins and magazines may conserve the best developed in the national field. One caution is profoundly needed. Let the young people remember that they are on trial. Some of the more mature claim that it will only be a short time before they themselves will lose their interest, their resiliency, their virility and their persistence. We know better. Keep up the good work!

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

SOCIAL SERVICE THAT IS DEFINITE.

We were impressed last week with Mr. Block's page suggesting social activities for the Young People's Leagues and commend most earnestly both his suggestions and his outline for making a survey.

His advice, too, that this interest should not be allowed to supercede other purposes of the League is very necessary, because once one ventures into the social service field there is danger of its becoming so fascinating that other lines will be neglected. On more than one occasion the writer has been cautioned, when addressing Woman's Auxiliaries upon this subject, to remember that the primary object of the Auxiliary is mission work.

The very fact that people become so intensely interested in institutions when once they have made the first step by visiting them adds to the shame of the clergy who, through their own indifference, have never awakened this source of power in their parishioners.

Many a jail and almshouse, to say nothing of juvenile detention homes, remain in disgraceful conditions through the lack of interest of Church people. As we have so often pointed out, the visits and interest of our best people have the double advantage of frightening the inefficient official, and encouraging the one who is performing his duty faithfully, and is interested in his work, and especially in the welfare of his wards.

The neglect of these matters is more frequently practiced in rural and small town communities than in our larger cities. The average county jail and county poorhouse is a disgrace to any community.

One other comment that we would make on Mr. Block's suggestion is that it applies more particularly to the urban conditions, although of course it can be modified to make it fit a rural church.

In many places it would be well for church groups considering these matters to get professionals to address them on subjects in their particular field.

The States' Boards of Health are always glad to send out speakers, as are also States' Boards of Public Welfare and Associated Charities.

Dr. Mary Brydon, of the State Board of Health of Virginia, has hit upon a most excellent plan for this kind of cooperation. She is head of the Child Welfare Bureau, and in this capacity travels all over the State. She is a devout Church worker, and it occurred to her that she might serve both her Church and her State more effectively by combining their efforts in health work. She submits her itinerary to the Executive Secretary for Social Service in the Diocese, who functions in all the Dioceses in the State. He in turn writes to the rectors of the diocese of her coming, suggesting that she be given an opportunity to speak before an Auxiliary, Guild or other group of Church women. Thus she spreads the gospel of good health through the churches.

In the course of these addresses she has evolved the following outline, in order to make her suggestions thoroughly definite and practical:

1. Take people to church.
2. Take invalids and old people to drive.
3. Play "Big Brother" and "Big Sister."
4. Teach illiterates.
5. Volunteer service to health agencies, Red Cross, Associated Charities, Juvenile Courts, etc.
6. Conduct Sunday morning "Day Nursery."
7. Help ex-prisoners.
8. Help the handicapped and the unemployed to find jobs.

9. Visit almshouses, orphanages, old people's homes, hospitals.
10. Establish a loan closet for welfare work.
11. Make some recreation possible for overworked mothers.
12. Organize community chorus.
13. Visit shut-in, lonely and sick people.
14. Serve on community committees as a Christian duty.
15. Give help in time of sickness.
16. Organize little mothers' leagues, mothers' classes, home nursing classes, etc.
17. Assist in night school, day nursery, playgrounds, etc.
18. Get treatment for crippled children and other invalids.
19. Teach Sunday school.
20. Sing in the choir.
21. Organize corrective clinics for Sunday school children.
22. Secure annual medical examination for every member of the household.

(These suggestions may be modified to suit the individual.)

Every Christian give at least one hour a week (fifty-two hours a year) to neighborly service.

AN IMPORTANT FIELD FOR COOPERATION.

"The Social Service Commission of the Diocese of New York has a fellowship of 350 members, made up of persons engaged in social service efforts, not all of them in the Church, and many of them salaried. At the last meeting for the season Mr. Homer Folks, well known in social work, spoke of better care for aged dependents. A new feature of the meeting was a discussion, or method exchange. The fellowship has with it some of the best known leaders in the field of social betterment."

This is a most helpful feature of social work, and can be made to render a valuable service by bringing the efficiency of secular activity in this field to the efforts of the churches, and by giving the professional workers the religious note, which sometimes gets drowned in a sea of technicalities. No greater service can be rendered than that of bringing the Church into closer and more harmonious relations with those persons and agency that are doing Christ's work in the world without His name.

THE CHURCH MISSION OF HELP AT SUMMER SCHOOLS

An addition to the curriculum of the Church Summer Schools that promises to be of great value this year is a course given under the auspices of Church Mission of Help, on the Family and Social Case Work. This is not a course on Church Mission of Help. It is informational, and has been planned to present fundamental principles of dealing with individuals, principles which are recognized and applied in Church Mission of Help work. This course is scheduled for Bethlehem, Princeton, Racine, Hillsdale and Sewanee.

At some of the schools there are also to be conferences definitely on Church Mission of Help. Wawasee, Racine, Princeton, Geneva and Sewanee are to have these Church Mission of Help conferences, while at Concord there is to be a course on "Building for Christian Womanhood."

MY RESOLVE.

To live as gently as I can;
To be, no matter where, a man,
To take what comes of good or ill
And cling to faith and honor still;
To do my best and let that stand,
The record of my brain and hand.
And then, should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for victory.

To have no secret place wherein
I stoop unseen to shame and sin;
To be the same when I'm alone,
As when my every deed is known;
To live undaunted, unafraid
Of any step that I have made;
To be without pretense or sham
Exactly what men think I am.

The Theological Seminary in Virginia

On June 4 a beautiful morning greeted the throngs of visitors on Seminary Hill, who had come to the Theological Seminary in Virginia to attend the first graduating exercises in its second century of existence.

The missionary address had been made the night before by the Rev. Hugh Birkhead, D. D., who had stressed the importance of greater personal consecration, urging that those entering the ministry should give their entire service to the work of the Church, maintaining a life of celibacy for at least the first three years of their ministry (advice which is seldom heeded).

The day began as usual, with the celebration of the Holy Communion for the students and visitors and alumni.

At 10 o'clock the graduating class in caps and gowns marched to the chapel, where the various diplomas and degrees were delivered. Bishop William Cabell Brown, of Virginia, and President of the Board of Trustees, presided and read the long list of names of the students who were being promoted from one class to another, and of those finishing their work at the Seminary.

Among the graduates were representatives of leading colleges, from Harvard in the North to the University of Texas in the South, and also men who had been to Oxford and Cambridge. For the first time in its history the Seminary conferred the degree of Bachelor of Divinity on men who have just finished their course, and eleven such degrees were granted to students leaving this year. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Rev. Wallace Ribble, of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

A very interesting feature of the exercises was the presentation of a portrait of Dean Berryman Green to the Seminary by the class of 1924. The presentation speech was made by Arthur B. Kinsolving, of this class, and the gift was accepted by Bishop Brown for the Board of Trustees.

The commencement address was delivered by the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., of Baltimore, who emphasized the importance of personal religion in the life of the minister, and of constant visiting in parochial work.

After an intermission of a few minutes at the close of the exercises, the Alumni Association met in its annual session with President Beverley D. Tucker, Bishop of Southern Virginia, presiding. After the usual reports from the Secretary and Treasurers, officers were elected for the coming year as follows: The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., President; the Rev. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Secretary, and the Rev. W. E. Rollins, D. D., Treasurer.

The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia, was then introduced as the essayist of the year. His subject was "The Open Mind." His discussion of this important topic was most excellent and timely. He emphasized the fact that we must recognize that there is no longer an antagonism between religion and science, but that both are continually searching after and discovering greater truths of God. His paper met with universal commendation, and there were many requests that it should be published for general distribution.

Before adjournment a report was made on the progress of the campaign for the raising of the half million dollar endowment fund, and it was stated that $365,000 of the amount desired was now in sight, either through cash contributions or pledges; and it was urged that the committee be continued for another year to complete its object. The alumni themselves have raised $35,000, and a resolution was adopted that every effort be put forth to bring this sum up to $50,000 before next commencement.

At the alumni dinner which followed, the usual number of after-dinner speeches were made and enjoyed. The Rt. Rev. George Herbert Kinsolving was particularly happy in his reminiscences on this the fiftieth anniversary of his own graduation. This distinguished family was represented by no less than six members in the ministry. Two in each of its branches—two bishops, two presbyters, and two deacons.

The ordinations which followed on Friday were more than usually impressive by reason of the great number of bishops and other clergy taking part in this solemn service. Six men were ordained to the priesthood, and eleven to the diaconate, as follows:

Deacons—Lescester Kent, of Leaksville, N. C., presented by Dean Green and ordained by Bishop Penick; James Allen, of Nashville, Tenn., presented by Professor Rollins and ordained by Bishop Brown for the Bishop of Tennessee; George A. Trowbridge, of Princeton, N. J., presented by the Rev. Robert Williams, of Princeton, N. J., and ordained by Bishop Paul Matthews, of New Jersey; Beverley M. Boyd, of Roanoke, Va., presented by the Rev. G. Otis Mead and ordained by Bishop Jett; Theodore H. Evans, of Amherst, Va., presented by Professor Rollins and ordained by Bishop Jett; William H. Gehri, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., presented by the Rev. Dr. Scollay Moore and ordained by Bishop Gravatt; and the following from the Diocese of Virginia, ordained by Bishop Brown: Hugo Blankenship, of Richmond, Va., presented by the Rev. Dr. Sublett; Carleton Fox, of Ashland, Va., presented by the Rev. Dr. Coleman, of White Post, Va.; Samuel Chilton, of Culpeper, Va., presented by the Rev. Dr. Hammond; Charles F. Penniman, of Richmond, presented by the Rev. Dr. W. R. Bowie; while Arthur B. Kinsolving II, of Brazil, was ordained by his father, the Rt. Rev. Lucien Lee Kinsolving, for Bishop Brown and presented by Dean Green.

Priests—Reginald F. Hall, presented by the Rev. P. F. Hall; Campbell Tucker, presented by the Rev. Samuel Wallis, D. D.; Stamo Spathey, presented by the Rev. Beverley Tucker, Jr., and the Rev. Phillimon Sevastides, of the Greek Church; Robert Hibbert, presented by Dr. Tucker; Francis Ball, presented by the Rev. John J. Gravatt, all of whom were ordained by Bishop Brown, and also Manly Cobb, presented by the Rev. K. M. Block and ordained by Bishop Jett. Bishop G. H. Kinsolving, of Texas, was also in the chapel.

George A. Trowbridge was selected by Bishop Brown to read the Gospel.

The Churches in Europe.

The twelfth Convocation of the American Churches in Europe met on April 23 at the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris. Hitherto meetings have been triennial, and convoked in the spring of the year of General Convention. But since matters of importance to the churches in Europe are to be laid before the next General Convention, it was felt by the Bishop in charge that Convocation should, on this occasion, meet a year earlier than has been customary.

The Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, Bishop in charge, presided at the meeting, which enjoyed the generous hospitality of the dean, wardens and vestry of the Pro-Cathedral Church. Clerical delegates present were: The rectors of our churches in Rome, Geneva, Dresden, Munich and Lucerne, the dean and canons of the Pro-Cathedral, and non-parochial clergy, who are members of the jurisdiction. Only Paris was represented by a lay delegation. The business meetings were preceded by Holy Communion, the Bishop being celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Walter Lowrie and Dean Beekman. Instead of the customary Convocation sermon, the Bishop delivered a short address in memory of the late Bishop in charge, the Rt. Rev. Gershom Mott Williams, D. D. "At this time," Bishop McCormick said, in particular, "and before this Altar of Remembrance, I wish only to speak of him as a Christian gentleman, a Christ scholar and a Christian Bishop, whom it was a joy to know and with whom it was a joy to work and to labor."

"His generosity and unselfishness, his sincere devotion, his indefatigable energy, his courageous conquest over the ills of the flesh, his unflinching humor and his optimism were an enrichment not only of the circle of his friends and fellow-workers, but of the whole community of the contemporary Church."

Before proceeding to the business meeting the Convocation received the fraternal solution of His Beatitude, the Archimandrite, Dr. Germanos Vassilikis, representing the Greek Orthodox Church. After re-election of the Rev. H. R. Wadleigh as Secretary, Mr. Herbert I. Keen, of Paris, was elected Treasurer, and the following members of the Council of Advice: Rev. Walter Lowrie, Dean Beekman, Rev. E. P. Smith and Rev. H. M. Kirby; Messrs. F. B. Keene, Herbert I. Keen, Lewis W. Haskell and Dr. Thomas Linn. Deputies to the General Convention of 1925 were then elected as follows: Clerical, Dean Beekman; lay, Mr. Herbert I. Keen. Alternates, the Rev. E. P. Smith and Mr. George F. Zabriskie.

The Bishop then delivered his address, in which he laid stress upon the importance of the appointment of a resident Bishop for the churches in Europe. He said in part: "We have both responsibility and opportunity in connection with the re-shaping of religious conditions and affiliations in Middle and Southeastern Europe, and an American Bishop resident in Europe would find himself called upon to act as guide, philosopher and friend in many conditions of absorbing interest and of immensely strategical importance."

The chief topic discussed by Convocation was the memorial, prepared by the Council of Advice and looking to the end indicated by the Bishop.

The unanimous approval of the memorial on the part of the Convocation was followed by the passing of the following resolution:

That the memorial drawn by the Council of Advice, under the instructions of the Convocation of 1922, which expressed its sense of the needs and the vision of the European field, and earnest desire of this Convocation for a permanent, resident Bishop of American churches in Europe, be re-adopted as expressing the mind of this Convocation, and that it be respectfully presented to both houses of the General Convention as its memorial to them, together with a petition to them for favorable action thereon, if possible.

The Convocation was addressed by Dr. William C. Emhardt, Field Secretary of the Foreign-Born Americans Division of the Department of Missions, who gave an interesting account of religious conditions in Central and Eastern Europe.

The discussion of the subject outlined in the Episcopal address, the memorial to the General Convention and Dr. Emhardt's appeal, was singularly unanimous. The delegates felt that a new interpretation of the life of our churches in Europe had been given them, and that, with the guidance of such a chief pastor as the memorial asked for, they might play a vital, if necessarily a minor part, in the religious community of Europe. They appreciated greatly—and before adjourning gave expression to their appreciation in a resolution—the sympathy and understanding with which Bishop McCormick had entered into their several problems; above all, his interpretation of their opportunity to serve their several communities in a larger and more living sense.

St. Augustine's School.

St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C., one of the oldest institutions for the training of the Negro, has recently completed a school year marked by real progress.

The total enrollment during the year has been five hundred and seventy-two, including forty-seven who were enrolled in the St. Agnes' Training School for Nurses and eight in the first-year junior college class.

The school is placing special emphasis on the training of those who will be the leaders of their people in making real progress. For this reason the teacher training work and the preparation of those who are to go into theological and medical schools is an important feature of the work. In this connection it is significant that the institution has been selected for the location of the Training School for Colored Women as Church workers, a project which will be supported by the National Woman's Auxiliary.

Work has begun on the much-needed class-room and administration building, to be called the Hunter Building in recognition of the many years of faithful service rendered to the school by the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Hunter. The General Education Board contributed $40,000 for this purpose, and another $40,000 has been raised among the friends of the school; somewhat over $10,000 of which has come from North Carolina. When this building, a Church priority, is completed early in the fall, it will add greatly to the facilities of the school. About $6,000 is still needed to equip and furnish it adequately.

The volume of work at St. Agnes' Hospital, which is connected with the school, has been very great. During the past year about 1,000 patients have been cared for. The men's ward in the new annex, which is being erected as a memorial to the late Dr. Mary V. Glenton, has been completed and is now occupied. The rest of the annex will be finished when sufficient funds are in hand.

The various events of the commencement season passed off very happily, and the program on commencement day itself was a very excellent one. The graduating class numbered forty-two. Bishop Finlay, of Upper South Carolina, delivered the commencement address. All three of the Bishops of the Diocese of North Carolina—Bishop Cheshire, Bishop Penick and Bishop Delany—were present. The program itself was varied, including, besides the addresses by the two honor students, demonstrations in agriculture, cooking and hospital work, and also the singing of several beautiful negro melodies, or spirituals.

After the exercises many of the large audience visited the school exhibits in the practice school building and were warm in their praise of the various specimens of class-room, manual training, sewing and domestic science work.

Death of the Bishop of California.

Just as we go to press news is received of the death of the Rt. Rev. William Ford Nichols, D. D., in San Francisco, on Thursday morning, June 5. The funeral was held on June 7.

Commencement Exercises, St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C.

The eighty-second commencement of St. Mary's School occurred May 24-27.

Bishop Penick was fortunate in his choice of subject for the baccalaureate sermon. Taking the text, "Ye are the salt of the earth," he dwelt on the fact that goodness consists in a positive contribution to life, and showed three ways by which the larger life of Jesus Christ may be accomplished—first, through a sense of responsibility; second, belief in self; and third, a willingness to pay the price.

The Hon. W. P. Stacy also made a distinct contribution in his commencement address on Citizenship. Good citizenship, he asserted, was based on the ability to recognize the rights of others, mental and spiritual development, and an unswerving faith in the law of the land. The two things most needed in the country today, he declared, are a genuine revival of old-time honesty and a rejuvenation of the people's faith in popular government—a task for the combined strength of the citizen, not for competition.

Bishop Cheshire, as President of the Board of Trustees, presented the twenty-two seniors with their diplomas. This part of the commencement exercises is always held in the chapel, with appropriate devotional exercises. Bishop Cheshire, after presenting the graduating class with their diplomas, spoke to them of the importance of putting first things first. They must put first the things of the spirit and subordinate material, ephemeral matters.

The Children's Part in the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Campaign.

A children's campaign for the Bishop Tuttle Memorial will be included in the general campaign, which begins its intensive movement next October. On the first Sunday in October a unique envelope with a booklet especially written for the children will be given every Church school child in the United States, with the request that during the month he or she earn or save one dollar which is to be turned in on Bishop Tuttle Memorial Sunday, October 26. Bishop Tuttle was so dear to the children and they played such a large part in his life that it was felt they would want to have their share in erecting the memorial to him. Every year through the Spirit of Missions he sent his Lenten message to them, asking their aid in his work, and signing himself "Your Commander-in-Chief."

The children's campaign has the hearty endorsement of Bishop Talbot, Presiding Bishop of the Church, and Bishop Gailor, President of the National Council. There are a number of regional directors for it, among whom are: Bishop Clinton S. Quin, Texas; Bishop William F. Faber, Montana; the Rev. Dr. Samuel S. Drury, of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H.; the Very Rev. H. L. Johnson, Phoenix, Ariz.; the Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, Kansas City; the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, Minneapolis; the Rev. Karl M. Block, Roanoke, Va., and the Rev. Ernest J. Dennen, Boston.

An Interesting Incident.

An incident of unusual interest, and one which almost seemed a part of the commencement exercises of the National Cathedral School for Girls, occurred in the Bethlehem Chapel on Wednesday, June 4, when Miss Taeko Miyazaki and Mr. Shinro Miyazaki were married at noon by the Dean of the Cathedral, Dr. G. C. F. Bratenahl. In accordance with the custom of the Church in Japan, the senior class of the Cathedral School, in cap and gown, formed a choir and sang a wedding hymn. The maid of honor was Miss Naide, a daughter of Bishop Naide, one of the two native bishops of Japan, recently consecrated. The blessing was given by Bishop Tucker, formerly Bishop in Japan and now a member of the faculty of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The Closing of the Sunday Schools.

The Sundays in June are marking the closing of a number of Sunday schools in the Diocese and commencement exercises are being held, when promotions are made and prizes and special honors are awarded.

Since the almost universal adoption of the use of the Christian Nurture Series in the Church schools, a more definite procedure may be found, a more definite goal and an importance is attached to the Sunday school work in the minds of the children akin to the attitude generally felt toward the day schools. It would seem as if "a little leaven had leavened the whole lump," for the influence of the Christian Nurture Series, approved and used by only a few at first, has so spread that better organization, greater devotion and more study on the part of the teachers and a more vital interest in the lesson by the children, has been the natural outcome.

Some of the Sunday schools keep open all summer, and when the attendance is small a song service and story for all is given in place of the regular lessons. Most of the schools will reopen on the Sunday nearest the opening of the day schools, and the teachers' coaching class under the supervision of the Rev. John S. Moses, will be resumed about the same time.

A Service of Mutual Benefit.

Christ Church choir of Georgetown visited the District jail again on June 8 and assisted with the music at the afternoon service, which was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Dow, City Missionary of the Diocese. Gospel hymns were used, in which the prisoners joined heartily, and several solos were given by prisoners.

Two anthems and a solo by Mr. Fred Schaefer, besides the regular music incidental to the service of Evening Prayer, were rendered by the choir. The prisoners seemed grateful for the help of the choir and the choir, all of whom entered heartily into the spirit of the hour, was equally benefitted by the service it rendered.

Raising a Parish Endowment Fund.

One hundred and twenty-five men of St. Paul's Parish, Buffalo, recently invited their rector, the Rev. Charles A. Jessup, D. D., to take dinner with them. It happened that the rector had stated in an anniversary sermon delivered several weeks before that the endowment fund of the parish, now amounting to a quarter of a million dollars, should be increased to at least half a million dollars, if the permanency of St. Paul's Cathedral in the downtown district of Buffalo among the skyscrapers and office buildings was to be assured for the future. At the dinner tendered Dr. Jessup the announcement was made by George T. Bellachey, a member of the vestry, that by gifts that had been promised, by life insurance drawn in favor of the parish and by legacies, the permanent endowment fund of St. Paul's Parish would positively be increased to an amount in excess of the half-million suggested. John K. Walker, another vestryman present, immediately proposed that three-quarters of a million be accepted as the goal for the future, and this proposal was received with enthusiasm by the men present.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Council at Point Pleasant.

The annual Council of the Diocese of West Virginia met at Christ Church, Point Pleasant, the Rev. W. Taylor Willis, rector, from Wednesday, May 28, to Sunday, June 1. There was an unusually good representation of delegates, both clerical and lay. Council began with the Holy Communion, celebrated by Bishops Gravatt and Strider; and the consecration of the new Christ Church, by Bishop Gravatt, Mr. Blackwood and the Rev. W. T. Willis reading the Instrument of Donation and the Sentence of Consecration. The Rev. Paca Kennedy, D. D., of the Virginia Theological Seminary, preached the sermon. Preachers of sermons at other services during the Council were Bishop Strider, Bishop Boyd Vincent, of Southern Ohio; the Rev. Messrs. Maurice Clarke, Secretary Religious Education, Southern Ohio; W. P. Chrisman, B. R. Roller, John Gass, E. B. Andrews and C. H. Goodwin.

Between conclusion of the first service and luncheon Council assembled for organization. At the beginning of the Wednesday afternoon session Bishop Gravatt read his annual address, notable points of which were an appreciative reference to the faithful service of the late Rev. James L. Fish, with prayer that we might walk in the steps of that Christian life, the excellent achievements of the Reynolds Memorial Hospital, the amount still lacking to the Centenary Seminary Fund, the meeting of the Provincial Synod in this Diocese in the fall and our need in holding to the creeds of the Church as meaning what they say. The Bishop read a summary from his diary. Bishop Coadjutor Strider then read a summary of his acts since his consecration.

Delegates elected to Synod are: The Rev. Messrs. John Gass, J. S. Alfriend, W. P. Chrisman, S. R. Tyler; Alternates, the Rev. Messrs. Pullan, J. T. Carter, J. L. Oldham, J. Brittingham, Messrs. Gwynne, Alexander, Boyd, Archer; alternates, Messrs. White, Hearn, Jeffreys and Halstead. Mr. S. G. Cargill was elected Executive Secretary of the Diocese for the year 1924.

The following Standing Committee was elected: The Rev. Messrs. J. L. Hady, A. B. Mitchell, C. H. Goodwin, Judge Frank Beckwith, Mr. Forrest Brown and Mr. C. A. Miller.

Reports were read; Board of Finance, by Mr. Archer; Treasurer of the Diocese, Mr. S. G. Cargill, Business Manager of the Church News; New Parishes, by the Rev. J. C. Ambler; Virginia Theological Seminary, by the Rev. Paca Kennedy; Standing Committee, Rev. C. H. Goodwin; Committee on Social Service, the Rev. E. N. MacConomy; Board of Religious Education, the Rev. John Gass, and Constitution and Canons, W. G. Peterkin.

An innovation for this Diocese was the carrying of a resolution to limit the sessions of Council from Wednesday to Friday, beginning with a religious service.

With the Bishop Coadjutor in the chair, the Council deliberated him to observe fittingly the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Gravatt in the autumn of this year. It was decided that such anniversary should be held in Clarksburg at a joint meeting of the three convocations with lay representation and a committee with power as to time and means was appointed by Bishop Strider. This committee consisted of the three deans of Convocation, the Executive Secretary, the Secretary of the Diocese, Rev. C. H. Goodwin, W. F. Alexander, R. L. Boyd and C. T. Hiteshaw.

An agreeable interlude was the presentation of a check of $1,000 by Mr. Edmund Sehon for the Boys Home, the final installment of $5,000 pledged by the Social Service Chapter of Trinity Church, Huntington.

Several things are worthy of notice in relation to the meeting of the Council in Point Pleasant. One the delightful hospitality of the people of Christ Church and of the town generally. Another the beautiful new church, in French gothic style, with new Austin pipe organ and a splendid chancel window of the Transfiguration. All this accomplished and paid for by a congregation not unusually large.

A third noteworthy point was mentioned in Bishop Gravatt's address, that of the delegates who had met in Council in the old Christ Church in 1882, there were only two present in the new Christ Church at this Council.

St. Hilda's Hall.

The commencement at St. Hilda's Hall, Charles Town, was a beautiful and inspiring sight to the many visitors.

It began with an interesting concert, followed by two plays, gymnastic exercises, Class Day, and many enjoyable occasions, all of which delighted the friends of the graduates, who were twelve in number, six from West Virginia and the others from adjoining States.

The exercises were all full of meaning, and Bishop Gravatt was at his best in the baccalaureate sermon, which was preached June 1 in Peterkin Hall to a large congregation.

At night the chevrons were given, and the Rev. Frank Cady, of Tyrone, Pa., was truly inspired to say the words of wisdom which each will cherish always. There was also a delicious humor in every word, so full of encouragement and yet so powerful in suggestion.

The following year will round out the first decade of St. Hilda's. Each year shows more plainly the necessity for such a school within the Diocese. Its work is excellent and its influence far-reaching.

Church Building Activities.

Westchester County, lying immediately north of Bronx borough of New York City, is growing rapidly, and the southern end of the county will be a part of New York City before many years. Christ Church, Rye (the Rev. R. T. Henshaw, rector), a very old parish, is just completing a handsome parish house of stone and finished in oak, situated on a spacious plot.

Christ Church, Bronxville (the Rev. C. W. Robinson, rector), a suburb north of Mount Vernon, announces a purpose to erect a new and larger church, with complete plant. Almost the last work of the late Bertram Goodhue was designing this plant. It is to be a close copy of an English country church, following Gothic lines, and having a tower one hundred and eighty-seven feet high. There are to be three altars, seating capacity seven hundred, and a Sunday school room for nine hundred. Work is to start at once.

St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck (the Rev. Frank D. Gifford, rector), already possessed of a beautiful church in ample grounds, will enlarge its present parish house by the erection of a hall, that is also to serve as a Sunday school room, and there will be other features to meet community needs. The work of the church has outgrown present quarters.

Many Attend Healing Mission.

The Rev. B. H. H. Bell, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Denver, has been engaged in a healing mission at St. Mark's Church, West Orange, and at St. Paul's Chapel, of Trinity Parish, New York. At both places large numbers of sick, blind and deformed flocked to the missions. At the historic St. Paul's the crowds were so great the police had to be called in. There was no disorder, but eagerness to get attention was very great. The method followed was that of prayer, and the only condition seemed to be that the person seeking cure really believe, first that Christ can cure, and that He will do so through the present agency.

People to the number of hundreds claimed to have been cured. Some threw away crutches, and later, after the Rev. Mr. Bell had departed, about one hundred persons returned to attend a service of thanksgiving to God for having cured them. Dr. Bell's estimate for one day at St. Paul's was that he treated 1,500 persons, and he claimed that 80 per cent of them were cured. He declared it to have been his greatest day, and said people of New York have great faith. Those who came were Catholics, Jews, Protestants, flocking to the altar rail, and friends with them watching the outcome. The blind said they saw; the deaf said they heard.

Spring Convocations.

Spring convocations in Maryland, in spite of weather conditions, were largely attended.

At the Convocation of Annapolis Tuesday, May 27, held at St. James' Parish, Tracey's Landing, the work of the women of the church received special attention. Mrs. Samuel Shoemaker, of the Woman's Auxiliary, contrasted the old haphazard method of preparing missionary boxes with the present system of allotting to parishes lists of articles specially asked for. Miss Julia Cunningham, Diocesan Secretary of the Girls' Friendly Society, gave her hearers a new picture of that organization.

The system of cooperation among the women's organizations was presented by Mrs. Roger A. Walke, chairman of the Church Service League. Mrs. Walke announced that successful beginnings had been made toward establishment of a Diocesan Branch of St. Barnabas' Guild.

The Rev. William A. McClenthen, D. D., rector of Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore, preached the sermon.

The Convocation of Towson assembled in All Saints' Church, Reisterstown, and listened with interest to accounts of the Priests' Convention by the Rev. Dr. McClenthen and the Rev. Roger A. Walke, and also reports of the Church Congress by the Rev. Canon Arrowsmith and the Rev. Douglass Hooff.

It was most unusual not to have the cheering presence of Bishop Murray at these convocations. The Bishop was presiding at a very different ecclesiastical function in Cleveland. However, he returned in time to preside in a down-pour of rain at the laying of the cornerstone of the new St. Thomas' Church, Baltimore. Clergy and choir officiated in limp and wet vestments, and the preacher, the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, D. D., Archdeacon of Baltimore, addressed a sea of umbrellas. Bishop Murray laid the cornerstone and the rector, the Rev. Charles E. Perkins, was assisted in the service by the Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Archdeacon of Maryland; the Rev. W. A. Crawford-Frost, the Rev. Robert Kell and the Rev. Clarence E. Wolfe.

Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, the Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., rector, which has been to the fore in all contributions to the Church's work, again carried off the banner for the largest Lenten offering of the Sunday schools, with $2,450. St. Michael and All Angels' followed with $1,700.

The day after the offering was taken for the Japan Reconstruction Fund, Grace and St. Peter's Church announced that $14,300 had been subscribed by the congregation. This amount includes only two gifts of over $400.

The Church Service League of the Diocese of Maryland.

The annual meeting of the Church Service League was held on Tuesday, May 20. Holy Communion was celebrated at Old St. Paul's Church in the morning by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D.

At this service the bi-yearly United Thank Offering was presented. Dr. John W. Wood spoke on "Blue Boxes and What They Do." A luncheon was served at the parish house of the Pro-Cathedral, and in Synod Hall the meeting was opened by the chairman, Mrs. Roger A. Walke. Reports were made by the federated societies and sub-committees. The Rev. A. R. McKinstry, Secretary of the National Council, made an address on the work of the Church Service League. Names of the officers elected for the following year were then read, and the meeting was brought to a close by Bishop Murray.

There were displayed to the visitors many complete and interesting exhibits, representing the work done by the various societies.

Church of the Ascension.

On the Feast of the Ascension, May 29, the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, the Rev. F. G. Budlong, rector, held its annual festival service. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., with sermon by the Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky. A large number of the clergy of the city and suburbs attended, as also laymen and laywomen from the various parishes. Luncheon was served later to all present. A new Skinner organ is to be installed in the church during the summer.

Closing Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its closing meeting for the season of 1923-24 on Thursday, June 5, at the country home of the President, Mrs. Charles Bailey, at Oakmont. The day was the most beautiful one that we have enjoyed this spring, so that the meeting could be held on the spacious lawn. There was an unusually large attendance, the Bishop of the Diocese, clergymen from several parishes, and about two hundred and twenty-five delegates from parishes in and around Pittsburgh. Interesting reports were presented by the chairman of the Prayer Partnership Plan which had been in use in the Diocese for a year; by the Treasurer, who reported the first gift to the Auxiliary toward an Endowment Fund, $500 from a late member of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh; and by the Treasurer of the United Thank Offering, who gave as the sum total of the third ingathering $2,576.18. Bishop Mann made a short address of congratulation to the Auxiliary, and appealed for a large attendance at the Summer Conference for Church Workers at Conneaut Lake from July 7 to 18. The speaker for the occasion was Mrs. Hibbard, from the mountains near Charlottesville, Va., who made a most interesting, amusing and yet pathetic appeal for the work in the five missions under her care. A gift of $200 was made for her work by the Diocesan branch for a roof on a church being erected at one of the mission points. Numerous personal gifts and donations from parish branches were made, and the meeting closed with great enthusiasm. All in all, it was one of the best attended and most enjoyable gatherings the branch has ever had.

New branches of the Young People's League have lately been organized in Trinity and St. John's Churches, Pittsburgh.

Good Work of One Club.

What a Men's Club can do in a parish is well exemplified in the parish of St. Paul, Chillicothe, a city which has behind it the fame of having once been the capital of the State and which more recently was the scene of great military activity when Camp Sherman was in its vicinity.

Through the efforts of the club fifty gift of $200 was made for her work in the last three years, being one-third of the total number, one hundred and fifty, presented for confirmation during that period by the rector, the Rev. Francis R. Lee.

As an Easter present the congregation gave Mr. Lee an automobile of the coupe type.

Cincinnati Clericus Entertained.

The members of the Cincinnati Clericus and their wives were delightfully entertained in June at Fort Mitchell, Ky., by the Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Gibson. Since Mr. Gibson has had charge of old Trinity Church, Covington, that historic Kentucky parish has shown remarkable growth and spiritual life.

William Harvey, Esq., attorney at law, a communicant of St. Stephen's Parish, Winton Place, has been accepted as a candidate for Holy Orders by the Bishop and Standing Committee of this Diocese. He was reared in the Church, confirmed at the Cathedral, and in 1923 transferred to his present parish. He has been very active in the work of the church, serving as lay reader, chorister and as teacher of a Bible class. He is a graduate of the University of Cincinnati.

It has paid off all indebtedness on its plant, including church, community house and rectory. On the Sunday after Easter there were two hundred and thirteen present in the Sunday school. It is located in a rapidly growing section of one of the progressive cities of the South, and offers a fine opportunity for its next rector.

Churchmen's Dinner: Inspiring Reports of Church Work Given.

Organized work among the laymen of the Missionary District of Oklahoma was very fittingly brought to a splendid close for the summer by the Churchmen's Dinner held in the Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, Wednesday, May 21. The dinner was given under the auspices of the Nine Men's Bible classes and the Chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew throughout the state.

Mr. Walter A. Lybrand, teacher of the Cathedral Bible Class, and the president of the State Bar Association, made a most acceptable toastmaster. Inspiring reports were made from the Bible classes and from the Brotherhood Chapters, by laymen in all but one instance, and showed how splendidly the laymen were taking hold of the Church's work.

The theme for the evening was The Layman's Place in the Church. This was very ably handled by the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, rector of St. Mark's Parish, San Antonio, Texas, who came especially for the occasion. Every man present was made to realize by Mr. Huston's words that there was a place for him in the carrying on of the Church's business.

The Bishop closed the meeting with an inspiring appeal to the laymen to continue the good work done the past winter and thanked the men for their interest and leadership.

Children's Lenten Offering.

Announcement is made that the Children's Lenten Offering from the Missionary District of Oklahoma for 1924, amounts to $1,939.29, and comes from forty-five parishes and missions of the district. The offering last year was something over $1,500.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop.

Enthusiastic Meeting of the Church Club of the Diocese.

The Easter-tide Dinner meeting of the Church Club of the diocese was held on Monday, May 24, in the palm room of the Hotel Saint Paul at St. Paul. More than one hundred and fifty members and their wives were present from all parts of the diocese.

Mr. Victor E. Lofstrom, of Litchfield, Minn., presided. Bishop McElwain pronounced the invocation, and addressed the club briefly on the subject of the Japan Reconstruction Fund. He also made mention of the fact that eleven of the members present were also present at the Easter-tide meeting in the West Hotel, Minneapolis, a quarter of a century ago.

The Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Duluth, was the guest of honor and the speaker of the evening. Bishop Bennett delivered an inspiring address on the spirit of missions and pleaded for a closer cooperation between the two dioceses in the State of Minnesota, in their common problems. He particularly emphasized the missionary work to be done among the 10,000 Indians in the northern part of the state, in his diocese. This work was instituted by the first Bishop of Minnesota, the Rt.

Rev. Henry B. Whipple, D. D., when the Diocese comprised the whole state.

Bishop Bennett made the statement that there are more "blanket" Indians in the Diocese of Duluth than in any other diocese or district in the United States, and the common responsibility of all Church people in Minnesota is to bring to them the principles of the Christian religion. There are many fine attributes of the Indian that Christian people might well emulate, especially his deep and abiding faith in the Great Manitou, Bishop Bennett said.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. H. L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Wm. Blair Roberts, Suffragan.

Bishop Burleson has made a complete recovery from his recent illness, which was an attack of acute tonsillitis that developed into erysipelas and interrupted for five weeks his work in the district; but rearrangement made it possible for the Suffragan Bishop to carry out most of the visitation program.

The Church School Missionary offering for Lent is certain to exceed the high mark made in 1923, which was the best ever recorded in South Dakota. The banner for the largest per capita offering was won by Christ Church School, Milbank, S. D., with a percentage of 88.69. The banner given for the largest per capita increase went to the school of St. Mary's Church, Webster. Both these schools are under the care of the Rev. Louis T. Gwynn.

St. Mark's Church, Aberdeen, has established a Men's Club with some sixty members. The men themselves prepared and served a dinner to the clergy and male delegates to the recent Convocation, at which time about one hundred and fifty were entertained. Fine reports come from the work in Rapid City, where the Rev. E. R. Todd took charge the first of January. Dean Todd has the oversight of the work in the Black Hills Deanery and has already demonstrated his efficiency therein.

The Convocation of Knoxville.

The spring meeting of the Convocation of Knoxville, which comprises all of East Tennessee, was held in St. John's Church, Knoxville, Tuesday, May 20, to Thursday, May 22, with the Rev. W. C. Whitaker, D. D., Dean, presiding. Only two of the clergy were absent. The Bishop Coadjutor and the Executive Secretary of the Bishop and Council were present throughout the session. The evening sermons were preached by the Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, and by the Bishop. The meditations were given by the Dean and the Rev. Alfred W. Treen. "Church Outlook in East Tennessee" was discussed Wednesday afternoon with the Bishop and the Dean leading. "Japanese Church Reconstruction" was the subject of discussion Thursday morning with the Rev. Leroy A. Jahn, leader. In connection with the visit Bishop Maxon confirmed six persons in St. John's and four in St. James, making a total of four hundred and ninety-eight confirmed in the diocese since January 1. The visiting clergy took breakfast and lunch each day in the parish house. The fall meeting will be held in St. Andrew's Church, Harriman.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. J. P. Tyler, D. D., Bishop.

For Japan.

The Japan Reconstruction Fund has been earnestly and thoroughly presented to the entire district. Mr. E. C. Brownell, the representative of the National Council for the Sixth Province, came to Fargo to assist the Bishop and the Chairman of the Department of Field Service, the Very Rev. H. Cowley-Carroll, in erecting an organization for a campaign for this Fund. All the clergy of the District were called together to meet Mr. Brownell for the conference. At this conference a roll call was taken of the needs of each of the clergy for publicity material for the campaign in his parish and mission stations. Each piece of publicity matter was exhibited and its purpose explained, so that the plan of the Field Department might be simultaneously and identically carried out in each congregation in the District. It is too soon to know the complete returns from all over the District, but from the reports so far received the response has been a generous one.

A Unique Record.

The Rev. Pomeroy H. Hartman, of St. Peter's Mission, Williston, has established a unique record for that Mission. During Lent, through the efforts of the Church School, subscriptions to The Spirit of Missions were obtained from every Church family in the congregation who were not already subscribers. Mr. Hartman received from the Editor of The Spirit of Missions a letter of congratulation, telling him that so far as he knew, St. Peter's Mission is the only one hundred per cent unit in the whole Church in this respect, and if such a standard could be reached throughout the whole Church, the problem of adequate mission interest and support would be solved.

Miss Frances H. Withers, the National Secretary of the Church School Service League, has just made a five days' itinerary of the District in the interests of this important branch of the Church's work, and we trust the formation of many Leagues throughout the District will result from her illuminating and interesting message. The Diocese of Duluth was represented at the conferences in Fargo by delegates from Duluth, St. Cloud, Fergus Falls and Detroit.

The Girls' Friendly Society is steadily gaining ground and putting down permanent roots in the District. A new branch has been organized at Oakes with twenty girls in the Probationers' Class and twelve in the candidates. At an admission service recently held at Rugby, thirty-six members and associates were admitted. The branch at the Cathedral recently admitted eight members and seven associates. At St. Paul's Grand Forks, twenty-two members and two associates were admitted in February and at Easby six members were admitted in March and five more in May.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who hast given unto us Thy servants grace, by the confession of a true faith, to acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity, and in the power of the Divine Majesty to worship The Unity; We beseech Thee that Thou wouldst keep us steadfast in this faith, and evermore defend us from all adversities, Who livest and reignest, one God, world without end. "When I Consider"—

The glory of the sunset; then the blue—
The pearl and blue—of skies when sun has set;

Pale toward the earth, blue at the zenith yet.

And 'gainst that paleness, clouds of sunset true,

And darkening trees, in outlines clear and true.

While these remain life holds no deep regret;

Their calmness soothes the day-time's care and fret;

When I consider, courage wells anew.

O, gracious Maker! With what quickening power,

As eve descends, and twilight shadows fall,

Thy Spirit to my earth-bound soul doth call!

The still, small Voice is in this quiet hour—

What matter though tomorrow's skies may lower

Blue skies or gray, My Father made them all.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Times of the End.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Why does He not know the exact time? He who can properly interpret will penetrate far into the mystery of the Godhead. The destruction of Jerusalem could be foreseen by any person of average intelligence from the time the nation rebelled against Rome. It was so foreseen by thousands. The exact day of the investment rested with Titus and was concealed by him as a matter of military precaution. Day and hour, even month and year, were known to none. That the city was doomed was known to all.

The day, hour, perhaps even year, of the second coming was unknown to our Lord. Yet the order of the main events was by Him transmitted to us; and as events unroll before us we can recognize them, else there were no meaning in the parable of the fig tree. All who have taken trans-continental trips note the weary drawing into a great city at the terminus. After days of travel they tell us we have reached the end. Shall we get off? By no means. We pass one suburb after another, and still we are not there. The fields change to villas, the villas to business streets, yet we are not there. We cross a bridge, perhaps go through a tunnel. Yet still we are not there. There is a great train-yard to pass and a slow progress under a great train-shed before we draw up at last at the platform. So, it seems, are the Times of the End. So, most certainly, were the days of the destruction of Jerusalem. After learning that the city is at hand, after rising half a dozen times only to find that the train has slowed for a crossing, one is apt to be caught napping at last.

The literary value of reference to the days of Noah seems noted by none: perhaps because it is casual. Our Lord refers to facts well known to Himself and not to the four, for He explains a bit. The critical mind slips over it, feeling that He refers to legend. The devout mind feels that He was an eye-witness. Legends should need no explanation to the four. The reference to those taken and left is not easily applicable to the flight of Christians at the siege of Jerusalem, for there adults went or remained at their own conscious choice. It is exactly applicable to the End of the Age; for there the elect are gathered by angels.

Clear statement as to time is withheld because, if known, the intervening generations would lose in watchfulness. This lifts the whole from the level of worldly preparation. Our Lord wished every generation to be watchful, though He knew all but one would be disappointed. There is thus something in watchfulness which He valued highly. The Christian prepared for the end of the age is evidently in the best spiritual condition for death. Our Lord made this preparation inevitable for all obedient Christians.

We are not to know the times and the seasons because, if we did, the generation when they were due would watch, but the other generations would dismiss watchfulness. The mind of Christ is, therefore, that watchfulness is more important, in this matter, than chronological knowledge.

Then comes the parable of the porter. Its inference would be that watchfulness was the duty only of the apostles and their successors, but for the last sentence. As it is, watchfulness is the duty of all. But if porter's duty be given to all Christians, why mention other servants with other duties? Here is some deeper thought than watchfulness in the Church Militant. Perhaps Christ meant the heathen, perhaps the Church Expectant. Perhaps the Angelic Host. All Christians are given porters' duty, to watch and open the door.

"Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you that He shall make him ruler over all his goods."

After this beatitude comes the terrible warning against the unfaithful upper servant who shall be cut asunder and given his portion with hypocrites. The passage has been dealt with in the Perean discourses. Gardiner disagrees with Williams as to where it belongs. We believe that our Lord repeated several warnings.

An educated man can read the four gospels in an afternoon. He can read them out loud in a day. He can read our Lord's words out loud in a forenoon. Yet our Lord taught some years, speaking copiously and daily. On a moderate estimate, the teaching actually given was an hundred fold more than that recorded. Our Lord set Himself to teach the same things to successive groups of people. When the same teaching is repeated in different contexts we hold it strained to derive either from the other or both from some common source now lost. Our Lord may have said the thing twice—or twenty times. Again, when we find a saying inserted by one harmonist in one context and in another context by another we are inclined to use it in both contexts. Our Lord made many speeches which are left out, the proportion of things left out being to those put in at least an hundred to one. No reasonable man can doubt that many thoughts were really used twice by our Lord. We submit, therefore, as an obvious and neglected principle of criticism that Jesus may quote Jesus.

The destruction of Jerusalem and the End of the Age are type and anti-type. The same forces which produced the destruction of Jerusalem will produce the End of the Age. The prophecies of causes and results refer to both. Our Lord cannot come until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The reference is to the Book of Daniel, and the meaning must be obtained by interpretation of that book. Our Lord authenticates the statement quoted. Even if the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, our Lord cannot come until the gospel be preached for a witness in every nation. The sign of the Son of man in heaven is probably the same as the preaching for a witness. Statement that day and hour are unknown, counterchecked by advice concerning the fig tree and reference to the generation which shall not pass, implies that our Lord is not pledged to return at the moment when the times are fulfilled and the gospel preached, but only that He will come some time during that generation.

The times of the Gentiles, according to the most nearly dependable calculation, expired 2,520 years from some date in the times of Daniel. The gospel is preached for a witness in most nations. Is not our Lord at hand?

The Children's Internationale.

Chester B. Emerson.

PART I.

The children sing in far Japan,
The children sing in Spain—

And they sing always and everywhere if they are given half a chance. A little food, a little clothing, a shelter, and a bit of kindness make them happy. It is amazing how much they can endure and smile. Experiences that turn older heads gray leave them only with a hunted look that runs to cover at a cheerful word. Tragic events that break men's hearts bend their minds and souls. But they rebound to joy as a beaten tulip bed lifts itself to sunshine after rain.

I think I shall never need to look again at a map of the Eastern Mediterranean. Its long indented coastline seems in my memory like a moving throng of children circling those sturdy shores with faces turned westward and their myriad hands outstretched. So great the sound of their voices it would seem their song might reach all America and they are singing

My country, 'tis of Thee,
Sweet land of liberty.

Liberty! Do they know what they sing? They have never had it, nor have their fathers. Being children, perhaps they can dream about it. And then there are so many young men and women from America to teach them, whose hands are full of healing, whose faces shine with the Light, whose hearts are aglow with a love that recalls the gospel.

I saw them first in Corfu, where so many have dreamed of empire since the legendary days of Ulysses, whose boat became that little islet off shore. There are hundreds of them up there in the outbuildings of Kaiser Wilhelm's palace. It's only a stone's throw to the very room where he set in a training saddle, ingeniously arranged at his writing desk. I heard them singing in the night as I stood beneath the huge bronze statue of Apollo in the garden and gazed at the near shores of Epirus and Albania faintly outlined in the light of that glorious sky. There are hundreds more in an old warehouse down by the docks. They sleep in blankets on their chicken wire bunks one above another. They cook and cobble, they make or mend whatever they all together may need for food and clothing and shelter. And they sing! I heard them after they had "orated" in English: Paul Revere's ride and Sheridan's ride and every other ride in American patriotic poetry that has cost more heartache and headache to small boys than ever they cost their heroes. There had been a tableau of George Washington blessing the children whom he had saved. The eight hundred boys stood up and sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee"—all four verses without a hymn book. That was hard enough to bear. But when they sang "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," and rose to its climax,

All the world is sad and dreary,
Everywhere I go—

O take me back to my kind old mother,
There let me live and die, it seemed that the hearts of their hearers would break. Where were their mothers? With the other martyrs—in the arms of God!

I heard them sing again in sight of the old temple at Corinth, before which St. Paul spoke for and in the name of Him who was a friend to little children. Twenty-five hundred of them, about equally divided between boys and girls, fled into an open air dining room improvised from the old horse sheds of the Greek army. And there, with bowed heads, they chanted an old medieval grace before they sat down to their dinner of chick pea soup and bread. How many children at home that very day, picking the bones of fried chicken, never thought to thank God! There on the sands outside, with only the sky for a covering, lay a thousand little pallets side by side, where night folded them in, while God hung out His stars for candlelight.

Does God Care for Me?

I am here in a great big world. It is like a great electrical power-house. Am I alone or am I guided and helped? Am I cared for? If so, how?

Some will say—"You are only a whim of fate." Are you? You know better! Your inner consciousness denies this statement when you are alone and in the silence. Turn within! Find out!

Some will say—"You will be cared for beyond the grave if you accept certain beliefs that man has worked out." Will intellectual acceptance stand the test? What does your inner reason say? No.

Some will say—"You will be cared for in time and eternity if you conform to the Church." Will you? Many have, yet has it stood the test?

Some will say—"You read the Holy Bible and accept it as an infallible rule of faith and practice, then you will receive your reward in heaven after death." What about this life in the flesh? What about all of my life problems now? Was the truth for the Jews thousands of years ago in the infancy of the race the same for me? Has not man progressed? Has he no greater capacity for truth and truth yet uncovered.

My care cannot come from without. Everything from without fails by the test of spirit and reason.

My care must come from within—my spirit, my sub-conscious self, my inner mind is my Supreme Caretaker.

My spirit and innermost self is ever present within me. I cannot get away! He knows everything about me, what I am, what I have been, and what I am to be. He knows my eternal path and my work. He knows when I am true to myself and true to my work. He is all-wise about me! He is love! He is truth! He is power! He is the spirit of wisdom, truth and love, wills me to be and do according to my inner and only real self. He is giving me infallible and never-failing care for my soul and my self-realization. My spirit, my inner self, is caring for my body and for me in all the conditions and circumstances of this world. Health! Grace! Strength! Joy!

The Supreme Caretaker for every man is the Spirit within. This stands the test of spirit and reason, of realization and experience. Every one knows who has loved and trusted that all things work together for good.

Have you met with failure? Are you unhappy, gloomy, enslaved, dissatisfied? What is the matter? You have trusted man—yourself or others—instead of the Spirit of God. You have trusted money and the things of this world. You have trusted the externals of religion. All have failed!

Beloved, man's extremity is God's beginning. You have failed! Try the Supreme Caretaker. "He careth for you" and every one who loves and trusts the spirit within. All things are yours! Give God a chance to give you your wants and needs. Love the Spirit! Trust! Ask! Receive from the Spirit everything for soul and body.—Trinity Chimes, Easton, Pa.

Hetty Ogle.

Perhaps not any of you ever heard the name of Hetty Ogle. Her name is not written among the great names of history, and she never dreamed of being accounted notable in any way, yet she was a heroine. Her life was a strong, unselfish, sunny life—not bright from outward circumstances, for those were often very hard, but bright from the brave spirit within.

A girlhood in a plain home that could offer only the commonest of educational advantages, a marriage that ended in early widowhood, and then this heroine found herself left to face the world unaided, and to provide for her three children as best she could. She went to work calmly and courageously. She studied telegraphy and mastered it, so that she was given charge of the business in her little home town in Pennsylvania—an office that was also used as a store.

She became so proficient that she soon was given an office of her own, and later was placed in charge of three telegraph lines in Johnstown. With the care of her home—which seldom had a maid—her children, and her business, one would have thought that Hetty Ogle's hands were too full to reach to anything outside, but her heart was too generous in its love and interests to stop with her own. She taught telegraphy, without charge, to more than a score of boys and girls and helped them to find positions. She shared her home and her sympathy with those who needed it, she was interested in her church and its work, and she was, as some one said of her, "an embodied Golden Rule." Her sons grew up fine and manly, her delicate daughter was kept alive and ministered to unceasingly by her tender care. And then, when life looked its fairest, when it seemed as if the days of hardship and struggle were past—when she had won friends and standing, an assured position and bright days of a happy autumn of life seemed to stretch before her—then came the terrible Johnstown flood! The dam which protected the lake in the hills gave way before the impact of the waters, and the torrent swept down upon the doomed valley carrying death and devastation in its course.

Hetty Ogle might have escaped. She had been warned in time and could have saved herself, but to one like her there were other lives to think of first. She remained at her post, sending swift messages of the coming danger to those who were in its track until the avalanche of waters struck the building where she worked, and carried it away in the whirling mass of wreckage. No trace of her ever was found, but she died as she had lived—giving herself for others. Faithful, brave and true, she was a heroine, though few have ever heard her name. Just an ordinary American girl and woman in a plain home, doing life's common work and bearing its burdens as best she could, and ready when need came to make the supreme sacrifice. If she were altogether unusual her story would not mean so much, but her spirit and character are those of a countless host, and that fact uplifts humanity.—Selected.

The Glorious Future.

L. C. Cummings.

Begin anticipation of tomorrow and of some great thing impending better than today's experience dulls the tools and disquiets and diverts the mind from doing its best with the problems immediately at hand.

If we cannot be happy and productive with even the drudgery right at hand and waiting accomplishment, we shall only find that what looks so much easier and finer ahead will, as we approach, also become dull and commonplace as we reach it.

We must put into our work of the moment, however distasteful it appears, a fine spirit of devotion that will develop victory out of seeming defeat.

In high resolve and patience the trivialities of what is, can be made resplendent by conquest, however seemingly higher the duties of what is to be, may appear in the magical horizon of the future.

The only practical hope of adequate preparation for the glorious future we picture, is gloriously to perform today's seemingly inglorious task.

Who Knows?

How many petals has a little red rose,
Who knows, who knows?
And what kind of foliage on the rose-

Who knows, who knows?

Why are the roots not killed by the snows,
Who knows, who knows?
From whence comes the green that the springtime shows,
Who knows, who knows?

Up from the roots the sap life flows,
It goes, it goes,
To the stem, to the bud, then the spring-

A rose! a rose!

The Wheat and the Tares.

Eugenie du Maurier.

The word Bethlehem means House of Bread. This name tells us that wheat grew abundantly in the region of Bethlehem. The followers of our Saviour could easily understand anything about wheat growing.

A young wheatfield looks much like a lawn when the grass is fresh and green. Weeds are very troublesome and injurious to wheatfields. The people of Palestine were very familiar with the danger to wheat when weeds found their way into the fields.

To keep a field free from weeds is no easy task. So farmers take great pains at planting time to see that all weeds and roots of weeds are plowed up and destroyed. Imagine how a farmer must feel after all his care to find, when his wheat had well started, that there was as much weed as wheat! Wheat makes flour. No flour can be made from weeds. But if even the least bit is mixed with grains of wheat the flour is injured. Once upon a time an enemy did this thing to a man, did it in the darkness of night, and then disappeared. When the news of this wicked deed was brought to the master of the field he knew that it was the work of an enemy. But he told the workers to wait until the harvest time, when the weeds could be more easily gathered, then to burn it, knowing if the seed were destroyed the harm that the weeds could do would be ended. Then the wheat could be safely gathered. Of course the harvest would be small. But some wheat would be saved.

Do you wonder what this parable means? The apostles wondered, too. And so, when Jesus had sent the others away and had gone into a house to rest, they asked Him what it meant. In a few words He told them: "He, Jesus, was the sower Who sowed good seed. His field was the world. The good seed, the wheat, were those who believed His word and followed it. The bad seed, the tares or weeds, were the wicked. The enemy who sows evil in the heart is Satan. 'The harvest is the end of the world and the reapers are the angels.'"

It was a glorious day long, long ago. The grain had grown and waved in the sunshine, a waving, billowy field of green. The full heads of grain were ripe, and brown, and ready for the harvest. Into the fields came the reapers. They carried sharp sickles to cut the grain, and then the sheaves were tied in bundles. It was hard work, the work of harvest time, but this was the crown of the year. Food depended upon the harvest, and the reapers had to be skilled. But with all their skill some stalks remained after the gathering and some had fallen from the gathered ones. So behind the reapers came the gleaners. They gathered what the reapers missed and often it was a goodly amount.

In one field there seemed to be more gleaners than reapers. The owner was a rich man and he had allowed the poor people to come and glean for themselves. They were told to carry home for their own use all that the reapers had left. It was in just such a harvest field, among the gleaners of the olden time, that we see the beautiful Ruth, whose story makes a whole book in the Old Testament; Ruth whose son was the father of David. And David was an ancestor of Jesus.

When this life of ours is ready for its harvest, and the angel of death cuts with his sickle the thread of life, then may our angels be the gleaners; may they find many good deeds to gather that will help to harvest an eternal harvest. "And the reapers are the angels."

Her Last Apple.

It was winter down on the Labrador coast, and the children of the Labrador Boarding School had to play indoors a great deal of the time. It stormed outside for days together. When it did not storm, there were days of clear, cold Northern sunshine, but even then small people could not stay out long. However, the children—most of whom were orphans, though there were a few children who lived at home and came in for the day—had learned to play together with very little quarreling because that made the best times for everybody. There was a great big room called the nursery for them to play in with plenty of "play toys," as they called them, for every one.

It was Saturday, and the big boys were out for a game of football on the level field of snow-covered ice that stretched for miles up and down the bay and across the bight, while the big girls were playing rounders in the lee of a cliff jutting out beyond the school. The small people were left to amuse themselves for an hour. There were not many of them, and they were very happy at it till Charlie, who lived next door, came in. Now, Charlie was a smarty who had great ideas of the wonderful things he could do. He went over to the window, where George, Billy and Ernest were blowing soap bubbles, and picked up Billy's pipe.

"Let me show you how to blow un," he boasted. "I can blow un bigger than anybody here."

He dipped the pipe in the bowl of suds, puffed his cheeks out, and blew. The bubble went out when it was only half formed—just winked and went out. "That un's no good," said Charlie. "Wait till I get used to it. Watch this!"

He blew again. The bubble rounded beautifully, but went out all at once like the other.

"Pooh! That's nuthin'. I ain't hardly got started yet. Wait a minute, and you'll see."

But George and Ernest had already gone quietly about blowing their own, and had each an immense one hanging from their pipes. They could swing the white clay pipes back and forth softly, and the lovely rainbow globes swung to and fro with them, glistening in the sun for a few moments before they sailed off into the air and burst above the boys' heads.

Charlie puffed quickly into his pipe. "Here's a big un! Look at he!" But it was not as big as those the other boys had made, and it went right out too.

"You blow them too fast," George told him.

"Charlie, please give me my pipe now," pleaded Billy.

"Wait a minute. This'll be a big un."

But it wasn't, and Charlie threw down the pipe in disgust and walked off.

"The suds is no good. If you had more soap in un, I'd show you," he said.

"You ought to go easy and then they wouldn't burst before you got them blowed," George answered.

Charlie walked down to the end of the room, where Arthur, the baby of the school, sat playing on the floor. He was only two and a half years old. He had his building blocks in front of him and was very carefully placing one on top of another to see how high he could get them without the pile falling over. If one tipped the least bit, Arthur took it off quickly and gently put it back again with both hands and straight in line so it balanced just right. He was very busy and altogether absorbed in this till Charlie came.

"Huh!" exclaimed Charlie, "I could build he taller than that."

He stooped over and gathered an armful of blocks from the floor. He began piling them end on end. In a moment they swayed, toppled, and over they went!

"I can build un. You just see!"

Three times he tried it, but the blocks went right over every time.

Some of the boys laughed. Baby Arthur's was such a tall pile that he was hitching himself around to stand up so as to reach the top with the next one.

Charlie lost his temper. Agnes was standing by the window watching them play. She saw in a moment what was going to happen. Charlie was going to kick Arthur's blocks over.

"Here, Charlie, catch!"

She deftly threw the apple she had in her hand, and Charlie caught it. His face flushed, but he stepped back and didn't touch the blocks.

Agnes watched to see him sink his teeth into the apple. Apples are not plentiful in Labrador. Agnes had earned ten cents as a prize for having her spelling right every day for two weeks and had sent her money to Cartwright with her uncle to buy two apples. Her uncle had carried them home in a sealskin bag slung over his shoulder in order to keep them from freezing. She had eaten the other yesterday. This was her last, and now Charlie had it. But never mind, it had saved baby brother's blocks.

But Charlie did not eat it. Instead, he looked ashamed and stepped over to Agnes.

"I don't want un, Agnes," said he, handing it back. "You keep it. I had an apple already today, that my dad gave me. You can let Arthur have my half. Look! He's got the highest pile of blocks I ever saw."—Presbyterian.

THE LITTLE POET'S CORNER.

Star Gazing.

Ruth Bell, Age 13.

When the sun has set and the earth
Is dark, and breezes go by,
I stand at the window every night
And gaze at the stars in the sky.

Like candles they pierce the dark of night,
Some are reddish, some are blue,
The reddish stars are the old stars
And the bluish are the new.

There's no water in the Dipper, I've heard,
And Sirius cannot bite,
Orion never shoots up there
And Taurus does not fight.

The Seven Sisters do not talk,
The Dragon should cause no fear,
The Two Bears will not hug you, for
They see you all the year.

A peaceful country is the sky,
A country of dark and light,
I like to think of legends old
When I star-gaze at night.

The Little Whirlwind.

One bright morning a little whirlwind ran away from old Father Northwind and started out to have some fun by himself. He broke away just as the children were starting to school. He dashed right in among them, twirled on one foot a few seconds and then whizzed away with a little girl's arithmetic lesson that she had carefully written on a fresh piece of paper. When he gave it back to her it was all muddled! He lifted a kind old gentleman's hat just high enough to make him drop a bundle of eggs in order to catch it. Then the little whirlwind put it right back on the old gentleman's head! He found a pile of leaves that a lady had raked up and drove them down the street like a herd of frightened sheep. He certainly was a bad little whirlwind!

After he had blown dust in a boy's eyes and flipped one of the housemaid's white, freshly-washed aprons from the line he danced down the street and out into the pretty country. There he saw a little squirrel sitting up pertly and minding his own affairs and made up his mind to tease him.

Just then old Father Northwind called to him to come home and help him blow up a rain cloud, for the fields and flowers needed a good drink. But the saucy little whirlwind said, "Go and blow it up yourself! I'm having my own fun."

Old Father Northwind said nothing, but he kept his wise old eye on his naughty son.

First the little whirlwind tried to annoy the squirrel by throwing leaves in his face. Then he tried his old scheme of blowing dust into the little fellow's eyes. Then he ruffed the squirrel's fur coat the wrong way. But the little squirrel paid no more heed to the wind than he would have paid to a grasshopper! The little whirlwind grew so angry that he whirled in a perfect rage!

"I'll get him somehow!" he hissed furiously.

Now the squirrel was thinking hard all this time. At last he said, "Humph! You make a lot of fuss! Why, you can't blow worth a cent! If you were really clever you would blow at least as high as this tree! I can run to the top in no time!"

"Well, I guess I can beat you to the top of the tree!" replied the whirlwind.

That is just what the squirrel wanted him to say. He told the little wind that he would run up the trunk while the whirlwind ran up through the branches. The squirrel said:

"One for the money, two for the show,
Three to make ready and four to go."

The little whirlwind gathered all of his strength, and when the "four to go" sounded, bzz—whir, up through the branches he whirled his little self with a great flourish. Of course he reached the top before the little squirrel reached it, and while he waited there to gloat over his rival the smart little squirrel was down on the ground gathering a lot of nuts that the whirlwind had blown off the tree.

"Why, you deceitful squirrel! You just raced with me so that I should blow off those nuts for you," whizzed the whirlwind.

"Of course I did. What are you going to do about it now?" said Mr. Squirrel, and began busily to collect his food.

The whirlwind was so angry that he ran and ran until he ran straight into a barnyard full of old hens. He blew their feathers the wrong way until the poor hens were nearly crazy.

Then one, who was very old and wise, decided that she would fool him. "I'll just run into the barn and hide until he goes off. It is time for me to lay an egg anyway." So into the barn she ran with an angry squawk.

The whirlwind heard the squawk, and without thinking ran straight into the barn after her. "I can run right out again," he said to himself, but old Father Northwind had been waiting for just such a chance. He blew with all his force, and, bang, he blew the barn door shut in a jiffy.

"Now, will you talk back to your father?" asked the old Northwind from a crack under the door.

How the little whirlwind puffed and pushed in his effort to find a way out of the barn! But he couldn't find one.

"Please, dear Mrs. Hen, tell me how to get out of this barn, and I will never bother you again!"

Just then Father Northwind called under the crack in the door, "If he will promise to turn the windmill hard for two hours, you may tell him how to get out. But he must promise me to stop being so bad and to do something useful in the world!"

"I'll promise!" said the little whirlwind. "Indeed I will be good! I'll help father to blow up a big rain!"

When the old hen was quite sure that he would keep his promise she told him that she had a little private doorway in the old horse's stall down in the corner, and the little whirlwind lost no time in getting outdoors again. He was as meek and well-behaved the rest of that day as any one could desire, and turned the old windmill until it creaked. Then he helped his father blow up a big rain to give the fields and flowers the drink that they needed. The next day he found the squirrel again, and he spoke politely to him.

"That was really clever of you, the trick you played on me yesterday. I'll blow down a few more nuts if you would like them." And he did. He blew every nut off that tree, for he just had to do something blustery.—

First Aid to a Butterfly.

Early one morning not long ago, on the way to my place of business, I glanced out of the window of my automobile and saw a very beautiful butterfly in a little pool of water in the middle of the roadway, its wings so heavy with moisture and dirt that it could not fly, although it was making an effort to do so. I stopped my car, and, stepping out, very carefully picked up the brilliantly colored insect, and putting it on a piece of soft paper, placed it on the cushion of the rear seat of the car, where the warm rays of the sun could fall directly upon it.

When I reached the place where I was to be employed during the day I closed the windows of the car so that the heat from the sun might dry off the wet, muddy wings of the captive butterfly. Several times during the morning I went out to see if it showed any signs of activity, and about noon-time I was made very happy on looking through the window, to see that it was flying around as lively as ever. I opened the door and windows of the car, and immediately the little beauty flew out into the fresh air and sunshine, once more to enjoy its life of freedom, among the sweet flowers and grasses of the nearby meadows.—Our Dumb Animals.

The Stupid Potato.

Potato with so many eyes,
What do you see down under ground?
Do you not miss the bright blue skies?
Do you not long to look around,
Potato with so many eyes?

Now if I had so many eyes,
I'd try to find out lots of things
About the birds and bugs and flies,
And why the bumblebees have stings—
If I but had so many eyes.

I'd find out what 'twas Katydid,
And why toads have so many stools,
And who it is the biddies bid,
And where the fishes teach their schools;
And in the ground I'd not stay hid.

Potato, you're not very wise
For one who has so many eyes.

Barbara's Gift.

"I am going to give her a pretty pongee handkerchief with blue threads around it and a little flower in the corner," said Maisie Lee.

"I am going to give her a little white handkerchief with pink threads around it," added Gertrude Barker.

"I am going to give her a little white and gold book," said Janie Carter, "and we can all meet at my house and fix up the things and then take them over to her."

So on through the list of girls in the Sunbeam Circle, they planned what they would give to Miss Merton on her birthday. Miss Merton was the teacher of the Sunbeam Circle, and every girl in the circle loved her and wanted to be counted in on that birthday surprise. Miss Merton had been sick and had just sent them word that she was now well enough to see them if they came to see her.

"It's so nice that it is her birthday, isn't it?" said Maisie, as they went on with their surprise plans.

But before the plans were over Barbara Brown had somehow disappeared. They had all been standing at Janie's gate planning for the afternoon visit to Miss Merton, and all were so busy talking that nobody noticed when Barbara slipped away.

"What's Barbara going to give? Where is Barbara? She was here just a minute ago," and other things like that the girls said, but no one seemed to know anything about it.

And down the shady path to her little gray home on the edge of town Barbara was hurrying as fast as she could. Barbara wanted to cry, and the faster she felt the tears coming the faster she ran to keep from crying.

"Nobody loves her more than I do," Barbara was saying to herself, "but this time I haven't a thing to give her. I can't buy anything now—I have had to take care of the babies so mother could wait on father, so I haven't had time to make anything nice for her, and I would not want to give it if it were not nice."

At home Barbara was always too busy to cry, even if she had wanted to do so. Her mother said there was never such a helper as Barbara.

"After school this afternoon you may have the whole afternoon, Barbara," her mother said; "father is so much better now and I heard Mrs. Lee say the girls were all going to see Miss Merton."

Barbara tried to smile, but no, her smile wouldn't come—of course she wanted to go and see, Miss Merton, but how could she go without a little gift when the rest were all taking one?

She didn't say a word that might worry her mother about it, though—she hurried on to school and somehow got through with her lessons and found herself walking toward home with the rest of the girls.

From their talk she learned that they were not planning to call at Miss Merton's until 5 o'clock. Some of them had to finish their little gifts yet.

Somehow Barbara managed to get away from the others without making her plans known, but as they had talked she had been making some plans.

She did not go home to change her dress; in fact, as soon as she turned the corner that put her out of sight of the others she ran with all her might toward the house where Miss Merton lived.

She was trembling with excitement and almost out of breath when she finally stood before Miss Merton.

"Miss Merton," she said eagerly, "can't I do some work for you?"

Miss Merton looked puzzled, "Why, Barbara?" she said.

"It's your birthday—an' you've been sick—an' I know about sickness; you can't work when you're sick, an' the other Sunbeams are coming at 5 o'clock—an'—"

But Miss Merton didn't let Barbara get any further with her sort of mixed up speech. She just reached out her arms, drew Barbara to her and kissed her lovingly.

"You blessed Sunbeam," Miss Merton said gently; "I was wishing and wishing that I could bring the table in here and set it daintily and have a little party for the girls—I could do it if you would give me your two feet and your two hands for about an hour—"

Barbara's face beamed like a real Sunbeam. "Could I give you my feet and hands for a birthday present for this afternoon?" she asked eagerly. "Would you call that a birthday present?"

"Would I?" laughed Miss Merton happily. "Why, it would be the very best present I could possibly wish for Barbara; the only thing I really and truly need for a present."

Barbara baked cookies, fixed some hot chocolate, moved the tea table, set it with the lace cloth and the best cups and saucers, dusted everything, and even swept the porches before the Sunbeams came. She was breathless and a little bit "floury" in the edges of her brown hair by the time the rest got there; but there was not a happier girl in Oak Lodge than Barbara was when she opened the door to let the other Sunbeams in.

Miss Merton seemed so surprised and pleased over the gifts the girls had brought to her. When she had thanked them all she drew Barbara close to her side and then said, "I must tell you about Barbara's gift, too. She gave me her hands and feet to work for me this afternoon. It was a lovely gift, and after you have tasted her cookies and her hot chocolate I think you girls will say that my Birthday Hands and Feet have been very clever about their work."

Then they drew Miss Merton's chair over by the table and the rest sat down while Barbara and Maisie poured the chocolate.—Frances McKinnin Morton.

Heels and Toes.

"Why, Tommy!" said his mother. "I thought I asked you to black your shoes."

Tommy turned toward her to show her the shiny toes of his shoes. "I did," he said. "Don't they look shiny?"

"Yes, they do now," his mother smiled. "I looked at you from the back, and from the looks of your heels one would never know that the toes had been touched. Did you think that the only ones who would see your shoes would be the people you were facing?"

Tommy laughed and twisted around to get a look at his heels. They were very muddy and dusty, for he had not touched them with the brush.

As he reached for the blacking box his mother made him laugh by saying, "If I thought you did all things that way I would be afraid when you go for a hair cut you would tell the barber to cut only the front of your hair, or that when you mowed the lawn you would not do the back yard, but let it grow up to tall grass."—The Mayflower.

Willie Discovers He Owes Mother A Staggering Bill.

A ten-year-old overheard a conversation about certain bills for service rendered which had to be paid, and conceived the idea of making out a bill of his own services. So the next morning he laid his statement of account on his mother's breakfast plate: "Mother owes Willie for carrying coal six times, 20 cents; for bringing water lots of times, 30 cents; for going ten errands, 15 cents, total 65 cents." His mother read the bill, but said nothing. That evening Willie found on his plate the 65 cents, and also another bill, which read as follows: "Willie owes mother—for this happy home of ten years, nothing; for his food and clothing, nothing; for nursing him through a long illness, nothing; total, nothing."

When Willie saw the 65 cents he was pleased, but when he read his mother's note his eyes became dim and his lips quivered. Then he took the money to his mother, threw his arms around her neck and begged that she would let him do lots of things for her. Mother's bill is rarely presented, but it will pay each child to think it over for himself and then pay it in love and service.—Selected.

RESOLUTIONS.

W. E. Wolfenden.

At the regular meeting of the vestry of St. Paul's Church, Salem, Virginia, held Tuesday, June 3, 1924, it was real grief to us to note the vacant seat of W. E. WOLFENDEN, who had died suddenly in his office in Roanoke, Monday evening, May 19th, thus removing from St. Paul's Church one of her most useful officers and faithful communicants.

Mr. Wolfenden had for years been Superintendent of the Sunday School. He always thought of the good of the children and was greatly loved by them.

He had for many years been Junior Warden, and as such he was ever looking after the welfare of the Church. To the vestry meeting he brought sound judgment and gave wise counsel. His example of the faithful and conscientious man of quiet piety was impressed upon all who were constantly associated with him.

Resolved, That this brief expression of appreciation of his life and worth to St. Paul's Church be spread upon the minutes of the vestry and a copy sent to his family.

GEORGE MILTON SYDNOR.

DR. MILTON SYDNOR died at Warsaw, Va., May 15th. He was engaged in the drug business there for the past thirty-five years. It is probable that no one who has lived in that community will be more sincerely missed or remembered with more affection. Especially is this true among the poor people of the county, who always found a friend at the drug store when one was needed to minister to their bodily welfare. Gifted by nature with a sympathetic and gentle disposition and a kindly, attractive face, he was beloved by all who knew his fine qualities of mind and heart, a love that stood the test of misfortune and the passing of many years.

Mr. Sydnor was, during almost his entire life, a member of St. John's Church. He was vestryman, warden, superintendent of the Sunday school and treasurer of the church, at various times, a very humble man of faith and a follower of his Master and Saviour.

MRS. MISSOURI TAYLOR WITHERS.

On the evening of May 26th the spirit of MRS. MISSOURI TAYLOR WITHERS passed from earth to Life Eternal.

For several years she had been an invalid, but in spite of her physical handicaps she took an active interest in all affairs of the church, and especially in the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Paul's, Suffolk, Virginia, of which she was a charter member, and at one time President.

She was a woman of sterling character, loyal and generous, and her place cannot easily be filled. Nowhere will she be more missed, outside of her own home, than in the church.

She leaves to mourn their loss the following children: J. Thornton Withers, Mrs. Arthur Woolford, Mrs. Herbert Darden, one sister, Miss Anna Mary Riddick, and twenty grandchildren.

Rector Honored.

The Rev. R. E. Boykin, rector of St. John's Church, Tallahassee, was the recipient on Sunday, June 1, of a beautiful silver pitcher presented to him by his vestry in commemoration of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

The token of love and esteem came as a complete surprise to Mr. Boykin, the presentation being made after morning service by Dr. H. E. Palmer, senior warden of the church, who had a place on the program presumably to report on the proceedings of the recent Council of the Diocese. Mr. Boykin, a Virginian, was graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1898 and ordained deacon June 19. He was ordained to the priesthood May 15, 1899, and has now completed twenty-five years of active service as priest. The memento presented to him on Sunday carries appropriate inscriptions, one commemorative of the fact of the anniversary, and the adverse side carrying the names of the vestrymen. It was presented to the rector in the name of the wardens, vestry and congregation of St. John's Church.

Memorial Window Dedicated.

Recently there was dedicated in St. John's Church, Montgomery, a very handsome three-arched memorial window, placed in the left wall of the chancel.

This memorial was the gift of Mr. Frank Stollenwerck, Jr., and his aunt, Mrs. Dora Calhoun Royall, and was presented by the junior warden in their behalf. These were the presentation words: "To the glory of God and in loving memory of Frank Stollenwerck, a vestryman, devout Churchman, and communicant of St. John's; whose interest was generous and abiding; and his wife, Emma Calhoun Stollenwerck, who was for eight years President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Alabama and many years President of the Neighborhood House Association of Montgomery, a consecrated Christian, who gave loyal allegiance to the Church with loving service of a whole lifetime; and Octavia Alice Mason Herbert, a devout and useful member of St. John's during the rectorship of the Rev. Horace Stringfellow. She was a teacher in the Sunday school and her life was spent in unselfish ministrations to others; and Willis Herbert Calhoun, in early years a member of the Sunday school and later a consistent communicant of St. John's."

The sermon, especially prepared for the occasion, with appropriate tributes, was delivered by the rector, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Church, Covington.

On the Sunday after Easter Bishop Burton visited Trinity Church, Covington, preached and administered the rite of confirmation to a class of nineteen presented by the rector, the Rev. James D. Gibson. This makes the third class presented to the Bishop in the past twelve months, forty having received the laying on of hands in that time.

On Ascension Day the evening service was a most impressive and inspiring one. The Covington, Newport and Cincinnati Commanderies of the Knights Templar attended in a body and took part in the service.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor

Church Consecrated.

The long delayed consecration of the Church of the Ascension in the northern part of Jersey City was held by Bishop Lines on Rogation Sunday. The Rev. Edward P. Hooper found some ten years ago a debt of $10,000, part of it a mortgage placed in 1875. Under his leadership all the debts of the parish have been paid and the property in every way renewed.

Other Notes of Interest.

A great enlargement of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, costing about $500,000, is projected, with three pledges of $50,000 each already made. Under the charge of the Rev. Thomas A. Hyde, the superintendent and chaplain, the hospital has greatly prospered and won a commanding place on the eastern side of the Diocese.

The Rev. Charles W. Popham has entered upon the rectorship of Grace Church, Rutherford, and the Rev. Henry M. Ladd, for thirty years rector, will, to the great satisfaction of all, continue to live in the parish, remaining Archdeacon and chairman of examining chaplains.

Two thousand two hundred persons were confirmed in the Diocese last year, 1,493 by Bishop Stearly and 707 by Bishop Lines.

The building of the new cottage for Bonnie Brae Farm for Homeless Boys, given by the Kiwanis Club, has been begun.

The new parish house at Ridgefield Park is completed and in use.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

St. John's Church, Wytheville.

The Rev. D. L. Gwathmey, rector of St. John's, celebrated the tenth anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood on Thursday, June 5. This was also a service of intercession for Christian unity, with the Holy Communion. In the evening a very delightful reception was given in the parish hall by the two circles of the Woman's Auxiliary.

On Memorial Day, May 30, the local chapter of the U. D. C. served a delightful luncheon to the Confederate veterans of Wythe County in the parish hall of St. John's Church, which was gladly lent them for this purpose. In the afternoon the rector of the parish made the Memorial Day address in the Opera House.

Christ Church, Pulaski.

On Memorial Day Christ Church invited the local American Legion post to a memorial service. The service men attended in a body, being summoned by the bugler sounding "church call." The colors were brought in and placed in the chancel by a soldier and sailor, with a guard of marine infantrymen. At the close of the memorial prayer "taps" were sounded by the bugler. The rector, the Rev. W. J. Alfriend, who was State chaplain last year, and who is the local chaplain, preached on a phrase from the Legion

Preamble to the Constitution: "To promote peace and good-will on earth." The legion members stood and repeated the whole preamble as the legion's "creed." The only special decoration in the church was the cross over the communion table covered with red poppies.

The rector is giving a series of "illustrated sermons" in the parish house each Sunday evening, showing pictures from colored slides upon a screen on the stage. The words of hymns, Scripture lessons, psalms and prayers are also shown on the screen. Attendance at these services has been steadily increasing. Children especially are attracted.

A parish house public library has been started by the St. Agnes' Guild, a young ladies' organization of the church.

Memorial Unveiled.

The beautiful memorial window, filling the entire west end of the new St. John's Church, Bedford City, was unveiled at the morning service June 8, with appropriate ceremonies, by Bishop Jett, the rector, the Rev. W. A. Pearman assisting.

The window is a memorial to the old residents of Bedford City, and the contributions for its erection came from all parts of the country in large and small amounts. The chairman of the committee who undertook the great task of raising the funds for this memorial is Mrs. S. G. Humphreys, a member of St. John's.

The young men will work in the Diocese of Newark.

Our sins bring their consequences relentlessly, and death cuts off our careers. Yet deep in our hearts we rebel against this. Love seems to have the right, but not the power, to conquer evil and command death. Here is the assurance that love has the power as well as the right, and that forever love is stronger than death and sin. This is the message which the Risen Christ brings to all who will receive it, and it is the greatest message in the world.—John Kelman, D. D.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

People who hope are generally people who help.

It is more needful to suffer long and be kind than to preach with the trumpet of an angel.

Only he has learned the real glory of life who gives strength to a human soul in a crisis of weakness.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee"—not who now and then turns to Thee.—John R. Mott.

Fence thou from off the dinning street
A little realm of pastoral air;
Keep but a green bough for his feet,
And God will send a blackbird there.

Since the Lord has appeared to me,
He has made me see His restraining hand where once I saw nothing but the cruel disappointment of my hopes.—Chas. H. Spurgeon.

God does not wish men to live apart, therefore He has not revealed to them what each needs for himself. He wishes them to live together, and therefore reveals to each the other's wants.—Tolstol.

I ask, what was Christ's errand into the world? For surely our errand into the world must be deeply connected with Him. The noblest thing a man can do is just humbly to receive, and then to go among others and give.—John Duncan.

The world is full of many ills and many blessings. You may dwell on its wrongs or its blessings, and you yourself will become darkness or light to those who look to you for blessing and find in you what you have found in the world.—Bishop Johnson.

Only thy restless heart keep still
And wait in cheerful hope; content
To take what'er His gracious will,
His all-discerning love hath sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To Him Who chose us for His own.
—G. Neumark.

Jesus fulfils our conception of God; but that is not all, nor is it enough. He is constantly enlarging our idea of God; revealing great tracts of God unsuspected by us. God as interpretable in and through Jesus is unexhausted.—T. R. Glover.

Ye that follow the vision

Of the world's weal afar,
Have you met with derision
And the red laugh of war?
Yet the thunder shall not hurt you
Nor the battle storms dismay;
Tho' the sun in heaven desert you Love will find out the way.
—Alfred Noyes.

The recovery of unity—a reunited Church—will need truly profound, almost miraculous, changes in the spirits of men in all parts of our divided Christendom. But the new sense, deep and wide as it is, of the necessity of a united Church if we are to be true in any measure to the purpose of Christ, gives us a great opportunity and a great responsibility.—Bishop Gore.

BY CANDLELIGHT.

Sometimes Christ pauses in His teaching and turning to His own followers quite takes their breath away by stating what He expects of them. One day He said to them: "Ye are the light of the world." There are heights to which even vanity and self-conceit cannot climb; and the disciples must have felt dazed by a statement which imposed a responsibility so utterly beyond their powers of performance. If Christ had said no more, the disciples could readily have thrown aside any sense of obligation, for no man can attempt to perform a task that he believes impossible.

Christ, however, did not stop with the statement: "Ye are the light of the world." He tells them that the people who live in the world, live in homes. The world that they were to light, was a world of homes. First of all they were to see to it that there was light in the place where they dwelt. No matter how humble the home, there was none deserving the name that did not have some means of lighting it.

The word translated candle really means a lamp, and in the crudest form the lamp consisted of a string of twisted wool burning in a vessel of oil. However humble might be the source of light, its presence meant the difference between light and darkness. The first duty of a Christian was to see that his home was lighted by a life after Christ's likeness.

During the first two centuries the Church was outlawed, ostracized and boycotted. It could not touch the life of the state nor of the community, nor of business; but it conquered first the imagination and then won the allegiance of a hostile world. It was not the fervor of eloquent plead-ers, but the presence in the community of Christian homes that worked this miracle of history. From such homes came first the little children, the King's own, born in the Kingdom of God, and dedicated to Christ in baptism. The consecration of childhood through baptism illumined the darkest spot in the ancient world. Throughout that world the male infant, if he were born blind or physically deformed, was cast out on the hillside to be eaten by the beasts. The infant girl, if she came to a home where there was no need for such an one, was flung out as a waste product of humanity. When the world saw Christian father and Christian mother carry a babe to the assembly of Christians, and heard the hymn of praise as a new citizen of Christ's Kingdom was received, a candle was lit, which has never gone out. The dedication of children to Christ cleansed the world of infanticide. In a very true sense this was the first great contribution of Christianity to the world outside its boundaries. The Christian home is still the foundation of the Kingdom of Christ. Every intimate revelation of God to man is in the typology and symbolism of the home. The Church itself is but the family of families, the household of God.

The tragedy in modern Church life is the absence of children in the worship of the Church. No efficiency in the Sunday School can offset the loss to childhood of that training in worship and sense of union to God as members of a family, that comes from worshipping God together.

No man has the right to think or call himself a Christian unless he "give light to all that are in the house."

SCRAMBLED EGGS.

The Irish cottager whose little plot of rented land can hardly produce more than enough potatoes and beets for his family and his horse is forced to raise a pig, which, when sold, brings in what is often the only money received. This pig shares the food and often the same quarters as the members of the household. One day a visitor to the home, finding the pig in the house, gave it a kick to drive it away. Pat cried out: "Dinna do that. You must not be disrespectful to him. He is the gentleman that pays the rint." With somewhat of Pat's feeling we claim a place of honor in our civilization for scrambled eggs. They have a high value, not merely as a dish delectable, but as a symbol of hospitality. When the son of the home brings in an old schoolmate to supper; when the daughter comes in and whispers, "There are three young men on the porch and it is raining so hard, I don't think they ought to go out in it"; when the husband who is talking to a friend at the gate links arms with him and they start together to the house just five minutes before supper is ready; there is nothing but scrambled eggs that can save the situation. In symbolic language they have always said to the unexpected guest: "I didn't know you were coming, but I'm mighty glad to see you, nevertheless."

The largest creative activity of a good heart is the sharing of the best that it has. The spiritual value of an unpremeditated invitation to supper in a home where Christ is Himself a welcome guest, far transcends that of the most eloquent sermon or most liberal gift of money. The largest reservoir of unused power in Christendom is the home. When will Christians accept the truth the Master taught: "He who gives is a candidate for man's blessing. He who shares is a candidate for the blessing of God Himself"?

LONG LIVE THE KING.

The collect for Peace in Morning Prayer as it appears in the Prayer Book contains the words, "whose service is perfect freedom." We have never heard these words since childhood without being thrilled by the spiritual audacity of their claim. The prayer itself is a translation of an ancient Latin prayer of the Fifth Century or earlier. In their original form the daring of this claim is even more marked, for the phrase reads, "cui servare, regnare est," whom to serve, is to be a King. We know no more striking description of the power of a Christian life. To serve God is to obey His commands. Every command of God is the revelation to man of the laws of man's own being. Obedience means the full functioning of the whole life. Such a life must be the strongest vital force possible. Such a life must perforce be the directing influence upon all within the reach of the play of its powers. Such a life confers a majesty of worth born of loyal allegiance, a worth whose meaning can be suggested but not measured by describing it as the royal life.

THE LABORERS IN THE VINEYARD

By the Rev. Elwood Worcester, D. D.

For the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man that is an householder which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard.—St. Matthew 20:1.

THIS splendid parable was spoken by Jesus shortly before the end of His life. He was passing swiftly through Galilee, with His Disciples, on the last journey to Jerusalem. At night they halted in Capernaum, and Jesus asked of the Twelve: "What disputed ye by the way?" But they were silent, for by the way they had disputed which of them should be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. They were the first to be called by Jesus, the first in privilege of intimate association with Him, and they desired to be the first in the Kingdom which they expected immediately to appear. They therefore looked with jealousy upon the new comers who late in the day, after the work of announcing the Kingdom had been performed, were attaching themselves to Jesus, and they feared that these late believers might supplant them who had been with Him from the beginning.

In reply Jesus related the parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard in which He declared that all who were called by Him and who came when they were called, whether early or late, should receive the same reward. This is the true and obvious meaning of the saying, and not, as Ruskin supposed, a grotesque overturning of the theory of wages.

Let us consider first what the call of Christ is. It is above all personal and individual. Hour after hour the Lord of the Vineyard goes out and calls the laborers in, one by one. So we are brought to Christ. Our relation to Him is a personal mystery between Him and our soul. I do not insist on this as a dogma, I state it as a fact. He stands at the door of our individual life and knocks. We may keep Him waiting there for a long time, but if He is to enter it is our hand which must open the door that admits Him. The ordinances of religion may inform us, a holy example may teach us the beauty of righteousness, but our relation to Christ is a mystical, personal relation, a secret between Him and us.

"Tho Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born,
Be He not born in me my heart is all forlorn."

But beware of thinking you can keep Christ in your heart starved and idle. If He has thought you worthy of His call, it is that you may share with Him in His work of salvation. Is this a grief to you, or is it an honor to your human nature? How many draw near to Him, study His life, appreciate His words, admit His moral and spiritual greatness, but when it comes either to the sacrifice of their passions or to the consecration of their money, their time, their strength, to His cause, they wish to hear no more of Him. But Jesus Himself in His great story of A Last Judgment, plainly tells us that in His eyes all this is nothing; that this moral, intellectual, aesthetical appreciation of His greatness, or these inward states of high exaltation and rapture are not what He is looking for in us, but for something much more prosaic and practical, like feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and visiting the sick.

It is because Christians take such a narrow, selfish view of what Christ demands of them, that Christianity has such a small place in the world today. Like everything else, Christianity is valued by the amount of sacrifice it elicits, and by the amount of good it accomplishes. The more good religion does in this world, the more men believe in it, and the less good it does, the less faith it is able to inspire. Christ did not call us to Him merely that we might admire and praise Him, and be happy in our quiet sheltered lives while others are deeply unhappy. And if we are true Christians, we cannot be happy under such circumstances, except in the presence and peace of Nature where no one is unhappy. Wherever there is sorrow to be assuaged, or poverty to be relieved, or ignorance to be taught, or sin and evil to be converted into goodness—there is our opportunity. There is an ill-omened word in the English language, the word idiot, a word which in Greek means simply a private person. Linguistically, an idiot is one concerned only with his own affairs. There is a short story of Balzac's of which I am very fond called "The Obverse Side of Contemporary Society." In it Balzac shows what a small group of devoted Christian persons, possessing diverse gifts and training and the financial means of carrying out their plans, could accomplish in a city like Paris. How often I have longed for such a little association as this. How many splendid opportunities I have had to let slip, how many families' problems I have been unable to solve, or have done a little where much was necessary, simply for lack of means. If well-to-do people knew the sheer happiness of consoling, rescuing, redeeming, re-establishing men and women they would do it for the pure pleasure of the thing.

The vineyard to which we are called is not one we have created or made at all. Man may plant and graft and prune and fertilize the vines, but that living vine is something beyond his power, and its every process, from the putting forth of the tender, breathing leaf, to the perfume and painting of the purple grapes, takes place in the realm of the Infinite Spirit of Life we cannot enter.

We are born into a world filled with divine presences and well supplied with unseen energies which as yet we have only touched, a world well capable, if it were not for our rapacity, our ferocity, and our stupidity, of feeding, sheltering and clothing all its inhabitants, a world, to all appearances, created by God for man's happiness and well-being, a world so rich in opportunities of service and happiness, of discovery and invention, that the greatest mind cannot grasp or describe the millionth part of it. Why should the past history of this world be so tragic? Why should the present be so full of ill humor and sorrow, of poverty and despair, of sickness and vice, of anger and discontent? Is it not on the whole, because our lives have not been lived, and the world has not been governed, in accordance with the principles of reason, love, liberty and justice laid down by Jesus Christ which He called the Kingdom of God and to bring which to earth He died? If the Spirit of Christ lived again in us and His principles were faithfully applied, can any one reasonably doubt that humanity through Him would rise to new heights of spiritual and real greatness, and that the sum of evil and sorrow inhering in this earth would at least be enormously diminished and the sum of happiness would be enormously increased?

If we think this, can we blame Christ for calling us into His Father's vineyard? If we think it worth while to call ourselves by His name shall we prefer to spend the years of our short life in idleness and what we ridiculously call pleasure, letting our powers atrophy, either living like parasites on the labors of others, or working for ourselves alone, knowing not the joy of working for God? Or shall we prefer and think it better to serve humanity both by undertaking particular tasks and by so ordering our life, our home and our business that we may be a positive quantity, a source of strength and inspiration to our family, our friends, our church, our community and the nation?

Jesus did not relate this parable to teach that an hour a day is to be the ultimate time-limit of labor, as people seem to think now. At present there is not enough work done in this country to feed and clothe and house our people, and as long as this condition lasts we shall be poor and the high cost of living will continue. We have wonderfully developed our system of production on its mechanical side, but the human side we have forgotten and neglected with the result that in America, the land of ambition and opportunity, our people are beginning to regard work—the one ever honorable and truly satisfying thing in the world—as an evil, and play and idleness as a luxury and a blessing. The Middle Ages understood this problem better and they produced works which for sheer nobility and permanence are beyond our power. Do you suppose that the Cathedrals and other divine buildings of the Middle Ages were made by men who hated and despised their work and who worked only from time to time between strikes? They were built by guilds of craftsmen who worked according to their own laws. The man of genius we are waiting for is he who will be able to make work and the conditions of work pleasant and attractive to men, and who will cause them once more to take pride in the product of their labor.

In the parable, the Lord of the Vineyard did not wait until the harvest was ended to pay the laborers their wages. Acting on a good old Jewish maxim: "Pay the workman his hire before the sweat is dried on his face," he paid them every night. And do you think your Lord will defer your reward until the last harvest is gathered in at the end of the world? I tell you no. He pays with equal promptness. This other-worldliness, this waiting for a future reward has often been cited as the weakness of Christian ethics. The giving up of certain things not because they are injurious or wrong, but that we may acquire merit from our self-denial, the service of Christ, not because it is a joy and privilege to serve Him, but that we may receive a reward in Heaven are rightly regarded as an inferior moral motive. This however is a mere travesty of Christ's teachings. It is a travesty not because it represents the reward as too great, but as too small. Have you ever really loved another without being rewarded by love in return? Have you ever done a good deed that did not bring its reward in happiness? We give up our own life to find it, and we lose it only to save it. When you lose your own individual life in another, you do not really lose it, you find it, new depths of it you never knew before, and when you sink your personality in some great thought or in some great cause, you only enlarge it. God rewards you once in the pleasure you feel in doing a good action. A second time when the result of your good act returns to you heavy with consequences. Again He rewards you with the light of His countenance. To find our happiness and satisfaction in pleasing God is the highest and most complete satisfaction.

And this law of cause and effect is not limited by death. Many a man sows so much and such good seed here that he cannot hope to reap his whole harvest in this life, but it will ripen in the next. Every one who works for the future, every one who serves a despised cause, who thinks thoughts in advance, of his contemporaries, appears to reap a harvest of shame and derision. But the angel reapers guard and garner His precious seed. These are the men who reap the eternal harvest and whose wages are paid to them from age to age. By the richest nation I understand the nation which nourishes the greatest number of noble, happy men and women, and by the richest man I mean him who is most free from evil, who has developed his talents, and capacities to their highest degree of perfection and who employs the fruit of what he has gained, whether it be spiritual truth or minted gold, for the benefit of others.

Yet Jesus closed this wonderful parable with His generous promise—"Unto This Last." He chose a man whom others had overlooked, a man called at the eleventh hour, who had waited all day before he found his opportunity, and whose actual achievement must have been slight. He is the real object and purport of the whole saying, and if we miss him, we miss all. This fact is very interesting: the Jews at the time of Christ had a parable very similar in scope to this parable of Jesus—though it teaches a wholly different lesson—from which the Lord is supposed to have taken His saying. It also is a story of laborers in the vineyard. In the Jewish parable the Lord of the vineyard goes out and hires laborers, from time to time, during the hours of the day. At last, at the eleventh hour, he goes out and finds an exceedingly clever and rapid workman who, in a single hour, accomplishes as much as those who had worked all day, and who, therefore, receives the same reward—a characteristic Jewish story with a truly Jewish moral. Jesus, however, makes no such statement. He does not pretend that His man, called at the eleventh hour, accomplished as much as those who had worked all day, but much less. And yet he received the same reward. This man stands for those whose opportunity comes late or departs early, and whose actual achievement is small, but who came when they were called and who did what they could. In other words, Jesus affirms that God judges human life and estimates its failure or success, its greatness or littleness, by a different standard from ours. In His immensity our greatness is swallowed up. To Him who lavishes as much creative genius on the wing of a butterfly as on the creation of a world, greatness and littleness do not exist. Edgar A. Poe's life was apparently a most complete failure and its end a hideous tragedy. How little he wrote and of that little, how little was good! But that small residuum of Poe's writings forms perhaps America's highest contribution to pure poetry, and the wonder today is how such a genius should have arisen from the America that then was. Keats was like a flower trodden under foot by a contemptuous generation, but a flower which crushed in death sheds an eternal perfume. The world has expressed its judgment of its greatest benefactors by ignoring, starving, imprisoning, persecuting them. But God and Time have compelled mankind to reverse its judgment and to bow down to those whom its fathers slew. If it were not for our faith in the future, in the ultimate triumph of truth and righteousness, how base a thing human life would be! Who would find courage to despise the present judgment of the world, to work for the future, to sacrifice himself to the ideal? "The victorious cause pleased the gods, the lost cause pleased Cato." That was the highest praise which the poet Lucan could bestow on the man who ended his life, rather than witness the extinction of his country's liberties. The Greeks idealized the normal man, the man of quick intelligence and ready wit and happy disposition and perfect body—by whom very little of the world's highest work has been done. Jesus drew unto Him the poor, the weary, the heavy laden, the handicapped, and among them He found His saints, His Apostles, His geniuses, His heroes of the cross, and He foretold that many of these last should be first.

And today, if Christ's cause, amid the turmoil of material things and the vast volumes of hate let loose upon the earth, seems to be suffering an eclipse, yet it will rise again and shine again, whereas the higher evil rises, the deeper it strikes its roots, the wider it extends—the more certain and imminent is its downfall. Meanwhile let us who have tasted of the sweetness of Jesus, and who are content with His wisdom, hold fast our faith and labor as never before for the Kingdom of God. The smaller the number of true believers, the greater their opportunity, the more valuable is each one. Wars may be won or lost. Kingdoms founded upon force or on material splendor may fall and leave not a wrack behind. But the Kingdom of God and the issue of Jesus Christ remain eternal in human life. "I will give unto this last even as unto thee." Oh! curb of human pride, Oh! hope of the weak, the handicapped and of every faithful servant of the ideal.

Wanderers.

Our feet have wandered from Thy path.
Thou lowly Christ of Galilee,
Sweet prophet of the helping hand,
Meek Lord of love and sympathy.

Thy faith was but to walk with God
With humble heart and open mind,
But we have builded shrines of stone
In which to worship—spirit-blind!

We lift our heads in loveless prayers,
We glory in our well-wrought creed,
Though righteousness alone avails,
Though mercy is the only need.

Break down, O Christ, our heartless faiths,
And give to us that spirit fine
Which feels in Thee a Comrade strong,
In every soul a friend of Thine.

—Thomas Curtis Clark, in the Christian Century.

Be strong! We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it, 'tis God's gift.
Be strong! Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold thy hands and acquiesce—Oh, shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely in God's Name.
Be strong! It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not, fight on! Tomorrow comes the song.

NARCOTICS---A JOB FOR AMERICA AND THE WORLD

By William K. McKibben

AMERICANS who first discerned the deadliness of narcotics, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Wright, Bishop Brent, Dr. Crafts, and sundry others, declared from the beginning that America would never be free until the rest of the world was free. No one nation can protect itself. Federal officers seize thousands of pounds of smuggled dope, but for every pound seized a hundred gets in. It forces its way throughout the world as by hydrostatic pressure, through as many channels as their are pores in a man's body. It sails the seas, rides the air, crosses borders in Pullmans and limousines, equally at home, in Alaska on dog-sleds or in the Sahara on camel back.

The pioneers got President Roosevelt to call a Convention at Shanghai in 1909 of nations concerned directly with narcotics in that part of the world. This was followed by larger conventions at The Hague. Measures formulated there proved of little effect, because they proposed merely regulation of the traffic without restriction of production, which is the source and root of the evil.

In 1923 Hon. Stephen G. Porter, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, presented a resolution which Congress unanimously adopted, calling on the nations to stop fooling and to pull up the opium poppy and the cocaine shrub wherever found, except as needed for medicine and science, as the one and only way to rid the world of the menace. President Harding at once sent Mr. Porter to Europe at the head of a strong commission to lay before the nations this somewhat drastic American proposition.

When Warren Hastings and his band of English adventurers made their way to the Orient one hundred and seventy-five years ago to carve out a new British empire, instead of turning the limitless man-power of India loose upon the inexhaustible fertility of the soil to produce measureless wheat and cotton wherewith to feed her famine, clothe her nakedness and lay a foundation for honest business at home, Hastings financed the new empire by raising opium and forcing it on the helpless population of China. China quickly recognized the pernicious character of the new drug and fought it tooth and nail, waging two desperate wars to keep it out. It was not until 1858 that she finally gave up the unequal struggle and legalized a traffic which her Emperor foresaw meant the destruction of his people.

About this time the Chinese farmers began to say—Since the foreign devils force their foreign dirt upon us let us at least raise our own poppy, make our own opium, make our own opium and save our money. Soon the poppy flaunted everywhere its shameless flag and China launched on a debauch that made her for fifty years the world's bad object lesson. About 1906 an approach to sanity returned when the American nurses, doctors and sanitary engineers went over to Manila and cleaned up that pestilential nest of plague, fever, smallpox, leprosy, and along with the rest, the plague of narcotics. The Chinese had never ceased protesting against opium, even while yielding to its seduction and overpowered by force, and witnessing this fine piece of house-cleaning, they said: "If these Americans can come across seven thousand miles of ocean and clean up such a country as the Philippines, we ought to be able to clean up our country." Great Britain agreed that if they would pull up their poppies Great Britain would cease importing opium. Then they went to it. Nobody believed it could be done, but it was done. The poppy on a million acres of land, the most lucrative crop in China, was uprooted or ploughed under. Five hundred thousand opium dens were cleaned up.

One incidental effect of this reform, has been to lay to rest the bugaboo of "Oriental revolt" against deprivation of opium," which for generations has been dangled, and still is dangled before terrified western eyes. We had been told that "universal revolt" would follow "any attempt to take opium away from the Chinese." "The peaceful streets of your Treaty Ports will run with blood." Just as Lord Hardinge now tells us in sepulchral tones that "any attempt to prohibit opium eating in India would be fraught with the most serious consequences to the people and the Government." None of these awesome things happened. On the contrary Chinese smokers by thousands brought out their pipes and burned them in the market places as a thank offering to Heaven. Music, banners and jubilant processions voiced the general joy. Women wept tears of joy that the curse was lifted. It will be remembered how the picture papers from 1906 on were full of these Chinese halocausts.

Rejoicings were short-lived. England did indeed stop sending them opium, but, like the speech in Shakespeare, the western world kept the word of promise to the car but broke it to the heart. The vacuum made by the destruction of opium was quickly filled by a deluge of morphine poured in from Europe and America in quantities almost unbelievable, thirty tons, forty tons a year—and morphine infinitely worse than opium. Like the man in the Bible out of whom the devil was cast, but he went out and brought back seven other devils worse than himself—the last state of that man was worse than the first.

The military Tuchuns started a recrudescence of poppy raising, justifying themselves with the fairly "legitimate" excuse (note the quotation marks), that native opium is a lesser evil than foreign morphine. While little or none of their opium is exported, yet it opens vistas of a flood of narcotics made from cheap Chinese opium which may easily at no distant day flood both China and the world. Our deliverance from such an inundation must be found in the fundamentally sound conscience of the Chinese people who will without doubt once again tackle the poppy curse, and again do their share toward the world's salvation, if only the western nations will do theirs.

Notwithstanding this unhappy issue, which was only partially her fault, China's extirpation of the poppy has pointed out to the world the one way in which the menace can be removed, and has demonstrated that it is practicable. Henceforth the slogan must be, "Pull up the poppy." If opium smokers in China are thrown into ecstasy when separated from their dope, opium eaters in India will not object and neither will morphine injectors in America. If the Chinese Government in its dire poverty can dispense with her opium revenue, the British Government in India can surely sacrifice her twenty millions. If these countries can give up opium, Persia, Turkey and the rest can. Thus China has taken the dream of poppy destruction out of the realm of the imaginary and has put it among things that have been done and can be done again.

Coming back to the mission of Mr. Porter and his associates. They were successful to a most gratifying degree. Representatives of all nations agreed to accept, at least in principle, the American proposition for extirpation. Certain nations, however, saw fit to insist on conditions and reservations, which, if allowed, would nullify and thwart the movement. Fortunately the representatives effected an agreement for calling an International Opium Conference to which the problem shall be committed, whose duty it shall be to surmount obstacles and formulate measures for making the proposition effective.

The Conference will assemble in November, 1924. It will have a mandate clothing it with authority whereby it may, if it will, adopt measures that will totally extirpate the menace. It will not, however, have explicit orders so to do. It will be confronted with forces entrenched behind age-long privilege and backed up by every evil influence that can be mustered from the four corners of the earth. All the powers of darkness will be there. Gentlemen representing the wretched street-corner dope peddlers will be there, possibly under the guise of philanthropy, representatives of the shadowy, but all powerful, narcotic rings will be there, representatives of Governments threatened with moral paralysis through fear of losing their revenues will be there. It is estimated that fifty to sixty millions of revenue is at stake. The Conference will be a veritable Armageddon. If we win it will be a victory from which the enemy will never recover. If we lose, the fetters will be double riveted for generations to come. Not only is it the whole world or none; it is now or never.

In this situation what is the duty of the hour? How can that November Conference be prevailed upon to give to the world the emancipation it is empowered to bestow? There is one agency at our command, one that is well nigh omnipotent, the power of public opinion. The good forces of the world must awaken from their lethargy. There must be poured forth such a flood of information and appeal as shall envelop, submerge and overwhelm opposition so that the Conference may realize what the people of America and what humanity throughout the world demand. By united action we can pile up volumes of appeal that the Conference can do no otherwise than give heed to.

To voice our conviction, the White Cross proposes mammoth petitions to go direct from the American people to the Conference. These should carry the signature, first, of our thousands of organizations, fraternal, social, civic, labor, and Church, both national organizations and local bodies, practically all of them already pledged to fight the narcotics, menace and which are our recognized representatives and spokesmen; and second, they should carry the personal signature of voters, or those of voting age, in millions. China likewise will come with her millions. The labor unions of Great Britain and the clear strong voice of British conscience have already spoken and will speak again. India will at last be heard.

Readers will ask us to suggest exact things that can be done. In a word this is it: Support our American representatives in the forthcoming Conference. One contention which they will encounter hinges on the little word "legitimate." The Opium Advisory Committee of the League of Nations originally urged, as we now urge, restriction of opium to "strictly medicinal and scientific purposes." One of the two representatives of the British Government in India, a Mr. Samuel Sastri, proposed to substitute for this the word "legitimate" thus throwing the door wide open and nullifying all attempts at effective control. The support of the British Government was eagerly given and the new word was adopted. Mr. Sastri subsequently acknowledged to Mr. C. F. Andrews of India that in proposing this avowedly innocent change he had been misinformed by the British Government in India. However, the new word is adopted. The British Government in India claims that it is "legitimate" to sell opium to her subjects, alleging that they do not smoke it but eat it. France rejoined that if the British Government sells it to be eaten she must sell it to her colonials to be smoked. If it is legitimate to eat opium in India it is equally legitimate to smoke it in China, or in the French colonies, or to jab it into the arm in the form of morphine, American fashion.

It is almost incredible that a great Government should stake its case on such quibbling. Possibly the reader revolts against it. If so, write and say so. Write to Honorable Stephen G. Porter, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. Write to the White Cross, Seattle, for literature and for copies of the petition. Organize a house to house canvass. Get clubs and societies of every name to sign. Don't wait to be organized. Do your own organizing. Make the voice of America heard. Focus public opinion on the November Conference. That assemblage will have it in its power to sweep away with a stroke of the pen these refuges of lies, to strip off this flimsy "legitimate" covering so that the world may see opium in its naked ugliness. When the right result is reached it will be thanks to the earnest people in every city and village who recognize in the opportunity that now knocks at their door, the opportunity for which the world has waited for a century.

BOOK REVIEWS

WHAT IS MODERNISM? By Leighton Parks, D. D., Charles Scribner's Son. Pp. XIX, 154.

This most timely book has been written by the rector of St. Bartholomew's Church in New York, as his response to the expression of desire on the part of many people who had written to him, for a book "not too long or technical or expensive," which may make plain the issues which have been so much to the front in religious discussion of late. What Dr. Parks set out to do could hardly have been better done. In five chapters entitled: "Modernism," "The Supernatural and Miraculous," "The Two Supreme Miracles," "Intellectual Integrity" and "The Purpose of the Modernist," he has explained the present-day liberal movement in Christianity, and has done so not only with great carefulness and soundness of statement, but in a Christian temper unmarred by the slightest suggestion of provocative controversy. His book will help to clear misunderstandings from the thought of many, and ought to lift the whole matter of religious discussion in our Church to a higher plane of mutual Christian confidence.

B.

AFRICAN LIFE. By the Rt. Rev. W. H. Overs. Edwin S. Gorham. Pp. 146. $1.00.

The purpose of this book, says Bishop Overs in his foreword, "is to make missionary work more attractive for boys and girls. In the work of the African frontier there is much of romance, adventure, and a great appeal to the heroic." The pages which follow abundantly bear out the Bishop's purpose, for, with exceeding vividness and with an abundance of graphic detail, he describes the meaning of missionary work in Africa in a way that will capture the fascinated attention, both of young and old.

B.

THE HYMN AS LITERATURE. By Jeremiah B. Reeves. The Century Company. Pp. 369. $2.00.

Where can I find a good book on the hymns? a minister often asks himself; for no element in worship makes a more rich contribution than that of the hymns, and often one would like to use the great hymns as subjects for sermons and addresses. This volume by Dr. Reeves does not give the history and intimate personal association of the hymns, as certain other books do; but it is a suggestive discussion of the poetic quality of the hymns as literature.

B.

MOBILIZING FOR PEACE. Edited by Frederick Lynch. Fleming H. Revell Company. Pp. 324. $2.

This volume contains the addresses delivered at the Congress called by the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches at Philadelphia last November. The addresses have to do with the responsibility of America for some larger policy of world cooperation.

For men who want at their hand authoritative expressions on the many special divisions of this great subject, this book will have high value. Among those whose addresses are represented are Will Irwin, author of "The Next War"; Oscar Straus, President Lowell and Professor Manley O. Hudson of Harvard University; Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, Raymond D. Fosdick and Archbishop Soderblom of Sweden.

B.

PROBLEMS THAT PERPLEX. By J. W. G. Ward. George H. Doran Company. Pp. 213.

This volume adds another one to the many good books happily available now for those who would think earnestly concerning the great problems of religious conviction with which so many minds are concerned. There are eleven chapters, and the problems which they discuss are these: Pain, Prayer, Providence, Divine Indifference, The Prosperity of the Wicked, Believing the Bible, Miracles, The Atonement, Personality and Immortality.

B.

THE PREACHER, HIS LIFE AND WORK. By J. H. Jowett. Hodder and Stoughton. Pp. 239.

Now that Dr. Jowett's earthly ministry is over and his voice will be heard no more, this volume, which originally was given as the Yale Lectures on Preaching, will have the power of a voice that being dead, yet speaketh. The style is marked by that limpid simplicity always so characteristic of Dr. Jowett, and the material exhibits again his extraordinary combination of human understanding and rich familiarity with the Bible. Among the modern books dealing with their work and opportunity, preachers could find few better ones than this to read.

WASHINGTON'S SOUTHERN TOUR. By Archibald Henderson. Houghton Mifflin Company. Pp. 340. $15.00.

In this exceedingly handsome volume, lavishly illustrated, the author has compiled from the diaries of Washington himself and from other contemporary material, the account of the tour that Washington made through the South Atlantic States in 1791. A good deal of material which he includes is of a formal kind, valuable rather for archives than for general narrative, such as the speeches and addresses which were delivered in the various towns to welcome the President. But the main thread of the account is highly interesting, weaving together as it does clear pictures of the life in a part of America when the nation was in its infancy. Here one may read with a freshness of apprehension of the way in which people traveled, and lived, and were entertained, in those days that seem in some respects so remote from our own era of steam and electricity. Trying to cross the Severn River, for example, on his way to Annapolis, the ferry boat which carried Washington was driven out of its way into the darkness of a storm, and he thus describes the experience in his journal:

"Friday, 25th.—Having lain all night in my Great Coat & Boots, in a birth not long enough for me by the head, & much cramped; we found ourselves in the morning within about one mile of Annapolis, & still fast aground.—Whilst we were preparing our small Boat in order to land in it, a sailing Boat came off to our assistance in which with the Baggage I had on Board I landed, & requested Mr. Mann at whose Inn I intended lodging, to send off a Boat to take off two of my Horses & Chariot which I had left on board and with it my Coachman to see that it was properly done—but by mistake the latter not having notice of this order & attempting to get on board afterwards in a small sailing Boat was upset and narrowly escaped drowning.

Was informed upon my arrival (when 15 Guns were fired) that all my other horses arrived safe that embarked at the same time I did, about 8 o'clock last night."

The extracts from Washington's journal are not voluminous, for he was evidently not given to elaborate writing, but from what he did say, and from what the narrative through other sources tells about him, one gains from this book a very human, and also a very impressive, picture of Washington, and of his immense hold upon the administration of the people.

RELIGIOUS CERTITUDE IN AN AGE OF SCIENCE. By Charles Allen Dinsmore. 102 pages. Lectures delivered at the University of North Carolina.

A notable and interesting book, well worth the attention of the general readers.

Dr. Dinsmore's contention is that knowledge is not limited to material science, but that we can use the word knowledge, in distinction to belief, on a much wider field. Perhaps the book can best be summed up by the following quotation from page 72: "One cannot imagine Jesus of Nazareth admitting: 'I know Jerusalem and the mountains round about, for my eyes see them, but God and the Eternal City of the Spirit are the object of faith. I know the things that are seen but the things that are unseen I believe.'"

Dr. Dinsmore is never dogmatic, but convincing from his restraint.

The Southern Churchman gladly recommends it to all thoughtful persons.

THE LIFE AND TEACHING OF JESUS. By Edward Increase Bosworth. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 406. Price $2.50.

Out of his scholarly studies as Professor of New Testament in the graduate School of Theology at Oberlin University, Dr. Bosworth gives us this book on that ever-interesting subject, the Life of Our Lord. He begins with two chapters on the sources of the Gospels and has two more on Religion in Palestine at the time of the coming of Christ. He deals with our Saviour's personality under two interesting heads of Jesus in Private Life, which leads to His introduction to His public teaching.

Although not startling in its handling of the material so often used by the authors, this book will be found very useful to Bible class and Sunday school teachers, and is well indexed for reference to special incidents in our Lord's life that might be under consideration for a lecture or sermon purposes by the reader.

Churches at World Gathering Will Discuss Secular Problems

The Universal Christian Conference to be held at Stockholm during August, 1925, now promises to be the most notable gathering of its kind in the history of the Church. The Conference will be attended by delegates representing every important Protestant communion throughout the world and also the Greek Catholic Church. It will not discuss matters of faith or doctrine but will devote itself to industrial, social and economic questions. The official announcement says that the purpose is "to concentrate the thought of Christendom upon those great social industrial and international questions which are so acutely urgent in our civilization." The latest plans for the conference have just been announced here by Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, General Secretary of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, who will act as General Executive Secretary of the Stockholm Conference. Dr. Atkinson has just returned from a tour of Europe undertaken for the purpose of organizing this conference and he will return to Europe in July to continue this organization work.

The official title of the conference is "The Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work." International offices have been established at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, at London, England, Geneva, Switzerland, and Stockholm, where the physical preparations for the gathering are already under way.

Between five and six hundred delegates will be present representing every Protestant denomination and the total attendance is expected to number about fifteen hundred. All the delegates and relatives accompanying them will be entertained during the ten days of the convention by the Swedish Government. The Swedish Crown Prince, Gustav Adolf, is Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, which contains representatives of every important activity in Swedish life. Delegates will be chosen by the chief governing boards of the denominations represented. There will be one hundred and seventy delegates representing the American Churches, the leading denominations, including Presbyterian, Methodist, Lutheran, Congregational, Baptist and Disciples of Christ, having ten delegates each.

The official invitation recently sent out to the heads of the various Protestant denominations gives the subjects to be discussed at the conference as follows: "The Church's Obligation in View of God's Purpose for the World," "The Church and Economic and Industrial Problems," "The Church and International Relations," "The Church and Christian Education" and "Methods of Cooperative and Federative Efforts by the Christian Communions."

The invitation is signed by the following international committee: The Rt. Rev. Nathan Soderbloom, Archbishop of Upsala, Sweden; the Rt. Rev. Theodore Winton, Bishop of Winchester, England; Dr. Arthur J. Brown, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; Konstantinople Gregorius, Patriarch of Constantinople; Dr. Moeller, President of the Protestant Churches of Germany; the Rev. J. A. McClymont, ex-moderator of the Church of Scotland; Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Archbishop Germanos, of Thyeira; Prof. J. E. Choisy, of Switzerland; the Rev. Thomas Nightingale, General Secretary of the Free Churches of England and Wales; Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, and Prof. Adolf Keller, of Switzerland.

The first proposal for this conference was made at the international meeting of the World Alliance for International Friendship held at The Hague in 1919. A committee was appointed and preliminary plans were presented at a meeting held at Geneva in the summer of 1920. This conference created a provisional organization and later the work of administration was divided into four sections, one for Europe, one for the British Empire, one for America and one for the Eastern Orthodox Church.

PROPAGANDISTS.

IT seems strange that we need to be reminded again and again of the method which the Lord Jesus chose for the extension of the visible Kingdom here on the earth—a method that might be most easily described as the transmission of Discipleship. In the last analysis, the most convincing, the most successful and pervasive manner of growth is that which is marked by the contagion of personality. As a people we have become hypnotized by the thought that conformity to type and installation of organization, as such, will spell success. In the early days of the Church, organization was more implicit than explicit, and the history of the Church's achievements is written in the lives of dynamic personalities who flash from place to place with the torch of a new and vital message which becomes luminous in the organization which we know as the Holy Catholic Church. No better method has ever been discovered to insure growth, virility and stability. Too frequently our clergy, and our young people following their lead, are concerned with types of organization, prepared programs, lists of activities, and the like. It is not to be marvelled at that where the emphasis is unduly placed on the external side of the life of the Young People's Society, the consequent organization becomes friable and breaks in the early days of strain. A healthier growth and a more enduring establishment can be achieved only by propagandists. One who has been converted to a sense of the possibilities of the young people for the Church can carry with him the convincing assurance of personal experience when, in the Providence of God, he moves from one locality to another. A strong argument for a National Organization is this need of Field Secretaries who have seen Service Leagues and Fellowships, alive with vitality, emphasizing the central motive of this new movement in the Church.

The "Fellowship Tidings" of the Diocese of California, in its last issue, contains a splendid case in point. It is the story of the work of the Rev. Elmer S. Freeman, the first Editor of that paper, in organizing the Missionary District of Honolulu. The following is quoted from a letter to the friends in his old Diocese:

"Perhaps you would be interested to know that we have just begun a District (corresponding to Diocesan, for this is a Missionary District) organization here in Honolulu. When I came here a little more than a year ago, I found a splendid opportunity for a chapter here in Epiphany Church, and we started an organization which now numbers about twenty-eight members, and is a great factor in the life of the parish. When the Bishop found out about it, he asked that we tell the rest of the District about it at the Convocation last April. So on a Sunday afternoon, in the presence of the clergy and lay delegates to Convocation, Epiphany Young People's Fellowship put on a demonstration meeting. It was led by a capable and lovely Chinese-Hawaiian girl; and so impressed the delegates that it was resolved to form chapters as rapidly as possible in other parishes and missions.

"Since that time three others have been put into operation—the Cathedral, St. Andrew's Hawaiian and St. Mary's—and one is planned in the near future for St. Clement's. At St. Mary's Mission, which in addition to Epiphany, is my charge, every member is either Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiian, Korean, ehu Hawaiian, or a mixture of these. That is to say, there is not one pure white boy or girl in the chapter, and I want to tell you that when I attended their first devotional meeting last evening I was simply amazed at the capable, reverent, devotional, orderly way in which they conducted it, quite without help or suggestion from me.

"About a month ago, the first union meeting of all the chapters was held on a Saturday afternoon and evening at the Cathedral parish house. The afternoon was devoted to a conference on method, and the evening to a dinner, with speeches and songs (I introduced the well-known California 'Here's to . . . to the tune of Augustine) and a dance. It was excellent. Now we have decided to form a District Organization, to meet each year at Convocation time at least. The general lines of the California Diocesan constitution were followed, as they have been in many other places. The Bishop appointed me clerical advisor, and a Mr. Henshaw lay advisor.

"Our work here is handicapped by the inadequacy and expense of inter-island transportation. There are only a few parishes and missions on this island of Oahu, and these all in Honolulu. They can be easily organized, but reaching the other islands is going to be difficult. On my vacation last year, on Kauai and Maui, I put in a good word where I could among the clergy but nothing has come of it definitely as yet.

"We feel that we are making real progress."

THE LIFE RECRUIT GROUP.

Some day the story will be told of the work of the Young People's Societies in laying upon the conscience of their members the question of the enlistment of their lives in support of the Spirit of Christ throughout the world. Clergymen, Deaconesses and Missionaries, engaged in various types of endeavor, will rise up to call the name of their Service Leagues and Fellowships blessed, and will ascribe to some devotional meeting the impulse which eventually flowered into the commitment of their lives to this definite, full-time Christian Service. For those who are eager to put themselves en rapport with the tides of the Spirit of God, such a Life Recruit Group may be established as obtains today in the Diocese of California.

We quote again from the "Fellowship Tidings" of May 1924:

"If some one were to ask, 'What great outstanding achievement has the Young People's Fellowship in the Diocese of California accomplished during these first four years of its existence?' I think most of us who have been in close touch with the Diocesan organization would reply without hesitation, 'The formation of the Life Recruit Group—the bringing together of young people from the various parishes who have expressed a desire to use their lives to help spread the spirit of Christ throughout the world.' This does not mean that they have pledged themselves to full-time Christian service, but that they are earnestly seeking to know God's will for their lives and to follow His guidance in carrying out that will.

"The group now consists of over forty members. Regular meetings are held the second Saturday of each month from four to eight P. M. at St. Margaret's House, our School for Christian Service in Berkeley. The first part of the meeting is devoted to business. At five-thirty supper is served, for which each member pays 35 cents. Then follows the enjoyable half-hour of hymn-singing, each person choosing a favorite.

"After the 'sing' comes the most important part of the meeting, the discussion in which all take part, led by a clergyman or other person interested in young people. For the past five meetings we have been discussing the Beatitudes, two at each meeting. * * * New recruits are warmly welcomed and we are always very happy indeed to have visitors."

Benediction.

Words to Song:

Out in the pearly East glows a star,
Morning lamp, gleaming far;

When Christ, Our Saviour, shall come again.
Lands in darkness dreaming,
As the dawn comes slowly steaming;
Waken, Christian, waken!
For Our Christ shall come again!

Chorus:

Oh, all the world is waiting for the sunrise,
Hope beats high in tired hearts anew,
For Christ will come and all the world be calling,
And Christian, He will be calling you!

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A COMPLETE PIECE OF CHRISTIAN SOCIAL SERVICE.

Many interesting things come to the attention of one working in the office of a Church paper of large and general circulation, especially if one is a probation officer, and a city missionary, besides being connected with the staff of the paper.

It is not often, however, that, even in such a fortunate position for observing the reactions of human intercourse, that one comes across a piece of really complete Christian Social Service, such as came under our attention recently:

A month or so ago, a subscriber from somewhere in Tennessee wrote, to ask us to republish a poem and article that had appeared, he thought, in one of our issues in 1907, 1908 or 1909. It is no small task to search through all the numbers of the Southern Churchman for three years, to find some special article, and the writer was about to send a letter, saying that he could not take this time, when a more unselfish member of the staff, suggested that she try to find what was wanted. As though the Lord helped those who try to help others, it was almost the first thing that fell under her eye in the big bound volume of 1909. It was, however, too long for republication at this time, and again we were about to write to say so, when the business manager suggested that an advertisement might bring forth the issue in which the article had appeared from some of our old subscribers.

"The Ad" was duly inserted, and within a couple of weeks, we received a copy of the Southern Churchman for September 18, 1909, mailed to us from Proffitt, Va.—so the post mark showed, for there was no return address on the wrapper.

It is really an inspiring thing to feel that one belongs to, and ministers to, a fellowship like that of the readers of the Southern Churchman, who not only read the paper as it comes to them, but also preserve it for as much as fifteen years.

We have called this little incident a piece of "Complete Social Service," because we feel that it complies with the requirements laid down by our Saviour in rendering service to others. He says that if we only help those who love us, we are no better than the heathen, who do as much as that for their own, and that the true following of Him is the helping of those who have no claim upon us.

The subscriber in Tennessee had no sort of claim upon our reader in Proffitt, Virginia, nevertheless that person saw a desire of another and was eager to gratify it, not because of any responsibility, but simply through the eagerness to render a kindness to some member of God's family. It was no small thing, either, because copies of the Southern Churchman of fifteen years ago, do not lie around upon the parlor table of today, even though that journal may be the only one entering the home.

Again Our Saviour tells us that when we render a kindness, we are not to blow a trumpet and proclaim it from the street corners. The injunction to "let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth" is seldom so strictly carried out, as in the present instance.

This may seem like a trivial incident about which to write an editorial, but it is this kind of loving thoughtful trivialities that make the difference between a Christian world of love and service, and a heathen world of indifference and neglect.

If we would all carry into our daily lives the considerate efficiency of our reader at Proffitt, who not only read for his own satisfaction, but carried into his perusal of the paper the thought of what he might do for others, and then put that thought into execution.

This last clause is by no means the least in importance in such things. Many of us think of the kindly thing to do, but how few of us really take the trouble to do it, especially for one whom we have never seen, and probably never shall see.

A FINE OPPORTUNITY.

The State Board of Public Welfare is planning an institute to be held at Charlottesville that is worthy of the attention of all social workers throughout the South.

We take pleasure in quoting their announcement as follows:

"We are planning to get the county superintendents of public welfare, probation officers, as many of the juvenile and domestic relations judges as possible, any officers of child-caring institutions and other welfare agents together for a short, intensive course in the practical problems of social work. With the state-wide organization of juvenile and domestic relations courts, county boards of public welfare and the increasing number of county superintendents, it becomes more and more necessary that the personnel become familiar with the best principles and practices of social work, with the laws of Virginia relating to welfare work, with the State Board of Public Welfare and its organization and function and with the work of each other. Much bad work is now being done that might be well done with less work if we just knew how, or if we were familiar with the law, State agencies and resources, practices of the State Board and with our own work.

"We have taken up the question of a week or ten day's institute at the University of Virginia this summer. We can secure the best accommodation and board on the campus at a very small cost. In addition those professors who teach subjects pertaining to social work have volunteered their aid to us. For these two reasons, principally, it would seem advisable to go to Charlottesville, not to mention the attractiveness of the place and the Summer School features.

"We plan to make the course absolutely practical and intensive, and shall secure the services of experts in the several phases of our work. Special attention will be given to children's problems—

"The prevention of delinquency,

"The child on probation,

"The dependent child,

"Methods of placing children in family homes,

"Institutional cases,

"Standards in methods of operating or maintaining different types of child-caring institutions.

"In addition to all this, we will have courses in poor relief, legal problems, community affairs, etc. These subjects will not be covered by a series of lectures but in correlating courses dealing in each subject in a complete manner. At the same time we shall offer some special lectures by people who are well known in their profession. There will, doubtless, be other lecturers in the Summer School in which you will be interested. Those attending the Institute the entire time will receive certificates of attendance.

"No fees will be charged. Board and room for the ten days will be approximately fifteen dollars.

"Let's get together, thresh out our problems, become trained and capable in our work; we will enjoy it more, and get more pay, too!"

Already enrollments are rapidly coming in for this Institute, and those desiring to attend should notify Miss Gay B. Shepperson, State Board of Public Welfare, Richmond, Va., as soon as possible.

The Church Pageantry School.

The Church Pageantry School, the first session of which will be held this summer, August 18 to 30, at St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wis., is the natural outgrowth of the popular pageantry classes of the various summer conferences. It is to supply more extended and adequate instruction than is possible in a single course that this school has been organized.

While held under the auspices of the Episcopal Church, it is open to all, and students may rest assured that they may here learn something eminently worth while under a faculty who are experts in their various fields.

The school has been officially endorsed by the National Commission on Church Drama and Pageantry, the Province of the Mid-West, the Diocese of Chicago, the Bishop of Milwaukee, and the Grace Hickox Studios of Chicago. Credits will be given for work done at the school leading to a School Certificate or Diploma, and it is planned to have the school accredited by the National Department of Religious Education so that credits may count toward the National Teacher Training Certificate. A three or four term curriculum will be developed after the first session.

The Departments and Faculty are as follows: (1) History of Drama, the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, Chicago; Author of "The Sangreal." (2) Composition of Plays and Pageants, the Rev. Frederick D. The headquarters of the Conference will be at the ideally-appointed Forest Inn, and every member of the Conference will have the opportunity of sharing in the recreation privileges of this widely known hostel. Those who wish to attend for only one or more days, will be permitted to enroll without obligating themselves to attend for the full week. Observing An Important Anniversary.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Newark Clericus at its meeting held at the Maplewood Country Club, Maplewood, New Jersey, May 26, 1924.

For as much as the sixteen hundredth anniversary of the formulation of the Nicene Creed will occur next year, the year of Our Lord, 1925:

Be it Resolved, That the Newark Clericus go on record as desiring a fitting recognition of the anniversary;

Further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the chairman of the Committee of Elections and Rules of Order of the Diocese of Newark, requesting that, if possible, place and time be given in the business program of the next Diocesan Convention to be held in May, 1925, for such emphasis upon this historic event as might lead the Convention to memorialize the General Convention of the Church for a conspicuous observation of the same when it meets in the city of New Orleans in the sixteen hundredth anniversary year;

Further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to The Churchman, The Living Church, The Southern Churchman, and The Witness.

(Signed)

The Newark Clericus,
James T. Lodge, Secretary.

A Suggestion From Mr. Franklin.

At this time of the year the Church is thankful for her children in the Church Schools. Due largely to the Lenten Offering, the receipts from the Dioceses for the month of May were for the first time this year in excess of the monthly proportion of the Budget. This has enabled the Treasurer to pay off some loans at the banks with a consequent saving of interest charges.

We are still running behind the receipts of last year and while the later date of Easter is still having its effect, it is now time to make up the lost ground.

Thirteen Dioceses and Missionary Districts have caught up during the past month with their minimum share of the amount due to the Budget, namely: Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee, Upper South Carolina, Western North Carolina, Nebraska, North Dakota, North Texas, Los Angeles, Honolulu, Idaho, Cuba, Liberia.

The banner District is Honolulu, which has now paid its share of the Budget for the entire year. Other Dioceses, notably New Jersey, Southern Virginia, Dallas, Texas and West Texas, have materially improved their positions. Three of the Dioceses and Districts, namely: East Carolina, Georgia and New Mexico, have during the month lost their positions in the honor column.

Would it not be wise for the Diocesan Treasurer to write to each parish treasurer this month, asking him to remit everything in hand before he goes away for a summer vacation, and suggesting that each parish ask all of the subscribers to pay in advance at least part of the subscriptions which will come

Death of Bishop Nichols.

The Rt. Rev. William Ford Nichols, D. D., second Bishop of the Diocese of California, died in St. Luke's Hospital, San Francisco, on Thursday, June 5, 1924. Bishop Nichols had an operation some two months ago and rallied from it splendidly, but a second operation was found necessary, and, after a short time, he succumbed from the shock.

The funeral was held in Grace Cathedral on June 7. Bishop Parsons read the service, assisted by Bishops Sanford and Moreland. Interment was in Cypress Lawn Cemetery.

The funeral was one of the largest ever held in the city. Many clergy from neighboring dioceses attended, in addition to the diocesan clergy, and there were many representatives from civic organizations in the city, as Bishop Nichols was a leading spirit in civic affairs.

The Rt. Rev. William Ford Nichols, D. D., was born in Lloyd, N. Y., June 9, 1849, and was the son of Charles Hubert Nichols and Margaret Amelia Grant Nichols. He graduated from Trinity College in 1870 and from the Berkeley Divinity School in 1873. In 1888 he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Trinity College and also from Kenyon College.

Bishop Nichols was ordained to the diaconate on June 4, 1873, and was ordained to the priesthood on June 4, 1874, in Holy Trinity Church, Middletown, Conn. He was married to Miss Clara Quintard in New York on May 18, 1876.

After holding rectorships in St. James' Church, New Hartford; Grace Church, Newington, Conn.; Christ Church, Hartford, Conn., and St. James' Church, Philadelphia, he was elected as Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of California in 1890, Bishop William I. Kip, then being Bishop of the Diocese, which included the whole State of California.

Bishop Nichols gained a national reputation as a distinguished ecclesiastical statesman and administrator. He planned with great wisdom the division of the State of California into its now four Dioceses, including Los Angeles, Sacramento and San Joaquin. With far-seeing originality he guided the establishment and development of the House of Churchwomen. He helped to shape the organization of the Province of the Pacific when the National Church adopted the Provincial system, and he acted as the President of the Province until failing health compelled him to resign. After the San Francisco Fire he planned the founding of Grace Cathedral upon its magnificent site in San Francisco.

Bishop Nichols was a noted scholar and educator. He held the Chair of Ecclesiastical History for many years in the Berkeley Divinity School and founded the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, of which he was Dean until the recent inauguration of Dr. H. H. Powell as Dean.

Bishop Nichols was the author of several books of sermons, addresses and Christian Faith. Last year the Bishop wrote an intimate account of his life in a book entitled, "Days of My Age."

Bishop Nichols is survived by his Death of the Rev. Dr. Griffith Thomas.

The Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D., a priest of the Church of England, died on Monday, June 2, in the Germantown Hospital, Philadelphia, following an operation. He was stricken in Duluth, Minn., May 16, and was brought to his home in Germantown. He was recovering, when taken ill a second time on May 31, when he was taken to the hospital.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon, from Holy Trinity Church, Bishop Garland, the Rev. Dr. Floyd Tomkins, and Dr. MacLennan, representing the Presbyterians, officiating.

Dr. Thomas was sixty-three years old. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1886 by the Bishop of London, after a distinguished career in Oxford University. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from that University in 1906. He was the author of a number of books, and was well known in this country and in England as a writer, a preacher, and a teacher.

Reports From Japan Exaggerated.

Bishop McKim cables from Tokyo the following message received June 11 by the Department of Missions:

"Newspaper report conveys an erroneous impression with regard to unpleasantness here. Has been greatly exaggerated. There is no cause whatever for fear."

St. Stephen's College.

The chief address at the sixty-fourth annual commencement of St. Stephen's College, held on June 10 at Annandale-on-Hudson, was made by Dr. Frank Pierrepont Graves, Commissioner of Education and President of the University of the State of New York. His subject was "The Place of the Small College in Contemporary Higher Education." After outlining, with commendation, the development in education breadth without sacrifice of liberal standards which has characterized St. Stephen's in the past few years, he went on to say that in his judgment, for the continuance of real culture as distinct from mere information, the small college was an absolute necessity as a corrective of many of the dangers which democracy has introduced into the educational world.

Fourteen men were awarded the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Rt. Rev. John Chandler White, Bishop of Springfield, of the class of 1888, and the degree of Doctor of Letters upon the Rev. Joseph G. H. Barry, of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York City.

Immediately preceding the exercises proper, the Bishop of Springfield laid the cornerstone of the John Rogers Hegeman Science Building, and the Edward F. Albee dormitory.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached on Sunday, June 8 by the Very Rev. Charles A. Jessup, D. D., of the class of 1883, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, New York. In it he pointed out that for sane thinking and rational development of the world, opposite ideas must be held in balance, e. g., liberty and authority, justice and mercy, etc. In applying this to education he said that knowledge and humility were commonly opposed to one another, but that only a man at once informed and humble was in any sense a builder; and that the great danger at present was that in a search for knowledge men should give away to the sin of intellectual pride, a far different thing from intellectual achievement.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. John Lloyd.

The Rev. John Lloyd, son of the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., and Elizabeth Blackford Lloyd, died at Colorado Springs, on Monday, June 9, in his thirty-fourth year. He was born in Norfolk, Va., where his father was rector of St. Luke's Church; was educated at the Norfolk Academy, the Episcopal High School, and at the University of Virginia, from which institution he graduated with the B. A. degree in 1912. At the University he was a leader in student life, being a member of the D. K. E. Fraternity, Lambda Pi, T. I. L. K. A. and "13 Club." He took an active part in the Church's life at the University, being a member of the St. Andrew's Brotherhood, of St. Paul's Memorial Church, and teaching Sunday School at Rio Chapel on Sunday afternoons.

Upon his graduation from the University, he went as a master to the Pomfret School, at Pomfret, Conn. He entered the Virginia Theological Seminary in the fall of 1914, and graduated in 1917. He was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Gibson, on June 6, 1917, and sent by the Bishop to Bromfield Parish, in Rappahannock County. He had served in this parish only a few months when he felt compelled to resign, and enlisted as a private in Ambulance Company 33. He was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Gibson on February 24, 1918, in St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, and went overseas shortly thereafter to serve with his unit, attached to the Fourth Division. He saw much active service, participating in the Marne-Aisne offensive, the Marne-Oise offensive, the Saint-Mihiel offensive and the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He was gassed on the Vesle, but continued to serve through the war, and was sent into Germany with the Army of Occupation. His health was much impaired by his army service, and, upon his return, he took temporary charge at St. John's, Wausau, Wisconsin. He was shortly thereafter called back to Virginia, taking charge of St. Paul's, Hamilton, Mt. Calvary, at Round Hill, and St. Peter's, Purcellville, in Loudoun County. He suffered greatly from chronic asthma, the result of his gas attack in the war, and was forced to give up the active ministry in the effort to recover his health. He made a brave fight, very hopeful of being able to take up his work again, and singularly uncomplaining of the obstacles which beset him. John Lloyd was altogether a lovable personality, with an engaging manner that drew to him at school, at college, and in the army, a host of friends. If his health had allowed there was every prospect that his gift of personal magnetism would have been used with great success in the ministry of Christ. The Church Militant can ill afford to lose such a representative, but the Captain of our salvation has, no doubt, a larger field of service in store for him.

Union Services.

The first of a series of services that has been entitled "An Experiment in Christian Unity," by the clergy planning, was held on the night of Trinity Sunday in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia.

The rectors of St. Paul's and Monumental, and the pastor of Seventh Street Christian Church, all situated in a down-town section have decided to combine their night services for the summer.

At this first service the church was filled to its capacity, and the Rev. Dr. H. H. Covington, of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, delivered an excellent sermon.

The combined choirs (without vestments) sat in the gallery, which position encouraged the congregation to join in the singing of the familiar hymns which were used. The next service will be held in the Seventh Street Christian Church.

Vacation Home for Girls Opened.

Summer Rest, the vacation home for self-supporting women and girls, has opened for the season. This home is owned by the Episcopal Church, but is open to women of all creeds. Situated on a slope of the Blue Ridge Mountains, it is an ideal place, with its beauty and quietness. A tired worker could no do better than to come here to rest. Several wicker chairs and a porch swing are needed, and if any reader could donate one or more they would be most gratefully appreciated.

Anniversary Observed.

Christ Church, Suffren, the Rev. Charles P. Bispham, rector, celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of its consecration and dedicated a window given by Mrs. Arthur F. Olsen. The anniversary address was given by Bishop Shipman. The church has received several memorials, has been redecorated, and has a number of active volunteer lay workers.

Gifts to the Cathedral.

By the will of Mrs. Sara Rives, the Cathedral gets an added $10,000 toward its building fund. Bishop Manning was presented recently with $100 given in nickels and dimes by men who had once been convicts, but who are now rescued wholly or in part by efforts of Church laymen.

Annual Choir Service at Trinity.

On Sunday afternoon, June 8, there was held the second annual service of the Trinity Choir Alumni Association. About one hundred and twenty-five old choir boys took part in this service, in addition to the regular choir of Trinity Church. All the hymns used at this service were composed by former organists of Trinity. The canticles were by Walmisley in D Minor. The offertory was a motet composed for the occasion by Channing Lefebvre, present organist of the church. The prelude was played by Mr. Warren R. Hedden, a choir boy in 1875; and the postlude by Mr. Robert J. Winterbottom, assistant organist in Trinity in 1901. There was a short address by the rector, the Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, D. D.

Eight altar candlesticks, which have been given by the alumni and others in memory of the Rev. Joseph Warren Hill, were dedicated.

The service was followed by a dinner, the speakers being the rector of Trinity Church; Mr. Eugene Noble, President of the Julliard Foundation; the organist of Trinity Church; and the Rev. Victor Mori.

Wheeling Clericus in Steubenville.

The Wheeling Clericus met Monday, June 9, at St. Paul's Church, Steubenville, Ohio, as the guests of the rector, the Rev. William Sidener.

After a celebration of the Holy Communion by the rector of St. Paul's Church, the members of the Clericus were taken by automobile to the beautiful Country Club of Steubenville, where a luncheon was served.

A thoughtful paper by the Rev. C. F. Stent on, "What and Where is God," provoked considerable discussion, but little light. The Wheeling Clericus is a venerable institution, meeting monthly, its outstanding feature being the amicable relationships of men of several dioceses and different phases of religious thought.

St. Luke's Wheeling: Several events worthy of notice recently occurred in this parish. One was a Children's Sunday-morning service in the Eastertide in which the parts of the service were read by the children, with talks by laymen of St. Luke's, Messrs. Bailey and Boyd. The other was a reception given by the members of St. Luke's to Bishop Coadjutor Strider and his wife. Dr. and Mrs. Brittingham performed the amenities of the occasion.

Worthy of Record: In a short time under the leadership of the Rev. J. L. Oldham, there have been encouraging results in Trinity Church, Martinsburg. On Easter Day the current debt was reduced from $3,600 to below $1,000, and there have been a number of memorial gifts.

Out of a communicant list of sixty in the church at Chester, fifty-five received communion in the church on Easter, and several sick at home. The Rev. P. C. Roberts has done a good work here.

A Personal Request: If the clergy of the diocese out of humanity would send in items to the correspondent he would be grateful.

Plan Memorial To Late Rector.

A committee has been formed in the parish of St. John's Church (the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector), Savannah, to raise funds for a handsome, carved oak reredos to be placed as a memorial to the late beloved rector, the Rev. William Taylor Dakin. As soon as the fund is raised, it is hoped to complete the memorial and have it placed in the chancel in four months' time.

A handsome processional cross has been presented to St. John's Church (the Rev. H. Scott-Smith, vicar), Bainbridge, Ga., by Mrs. D. C. Gurley and Mr. Ramsey, in memory of their mother, Mrs. Helen Tonge Ramsey, who was a devoted worker in the Mission and the Church School. The cross is of brass, mounted on an oak staff, and bears a suitable inscription.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Daily Vacation Bible School.

The Daily Vacation Bible School that was conducted last summer by the united parishes of Charleston, was appreciated to such an extent as to make its continuation seem most desirable, if not inevitable. The school opened again at the Porter Military Academy on June 16, and will run for four weeks, or through Friday, July 11. The Rev. Homer W. Starr, Ph. D., will be the supervisor, and Miss Meacher, the principal.

The instructions will be included in two departments. The first will be devoted to Bible Story Telling; the second to Music and Hand Work. In the hand work department the children will do sewing, the garments to be given to some needy institution, to be selected by themselves; and make toys for a like purpose.

Last summer the enrollment was two hundred and fifty. These were divided into eight groups, under as many leaders, and all attended chapel together each morning.

A Fine Field For Service.

The Rev. Randolph F. Blackford, rector of the Church at North Charleston, has been appointed one of the trustees of the public schools in the Goose Creek School District, Charleston County.

This is tangible evidence of the high and deserved regard in which Mr. Blackford is held by the people among whom he lives and labors.

Mr. Blackford is the first priest of the Church to live at North Charleston, which offers a fine field for service. All the work in connection with the United States Naval Station is in his charge. A recent visit discloses a constant state of activity. The Church School is flourishing, the church building at the Naval Station, called St. Peter's by the Sea, has recently been painted, and other improvements carried forward, the women in the guilds furnishing the materials, and the men doing the actual work.

Convocation of Nashville.

This Convocation assembled on Monday evening, June 2, in St. Andrew's, Tenn. At Evening Prayer the Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., of Chattanooga, spoke on "How the Clergy May Advance the Program in a Parish or Mission of Any Size."

The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. K. Douglass, Litt. B., at Morning Prayer, on some aspects of Church worship. The afternoon session was a discussion of Preparation for Confirmation, led by the Rev. F. M. Osborne. At the evening missionary meeting, three ways of spreading the Gospel were discussed: The Church Ministry, Of Preaching, by the Rev. P. O. Pugh; Of Teaching, by the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, D. D.; Of Healing, by the Rev. P. S.

Gilman, made up the evening's schedule.

On Wednesday an interesting Quiet Hour was held for the clergy by the Rev. Louis Lovey, O. H. C. The following period was devoted to a report of the Bishop. The diocese is showing large gains in numbers and interest. The Bishop and Mrs. Loaring Clark also spoke to the Woman's meeting, which was held in St. Augustine's Hall. Dr. Logan led the conference in the afternoon on some works of the Convocation, giving a splendid account of his own efforts at Monteagle. The Convocation closed with the Bishop's sermon on Missions. The collections were sent to the mission board and the Japanese Reconstruction Fund. The Convocation was beautifully entertained, and had a larger attendance of clergy than any in its history. The clergy returned much enthused over the progress reported.

The Conference of Methods.

Oklahoma's Summer School, officially known as the Conference of Methods, opened at Norman, June 9, under the leadership of Mrs. Templeton, educational leader of the district. St. John's Church and its rector, the Rev. B. N. Lovgren, were the hosts, assisted by the good people of the nearby Methodist Church, in which building the school sessions proper were held.

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., Secretary of the Church's Commission on Faith and Order; Miss Tillotson, of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. Robert B. H. Bell, of Denver, were among the leaders present. A number of the local clergy and women of the district were pressed into service and it is expected this year's gathering will prove most helpful.

Collect for First Sunday After Trinity.

O God, the strength of all those who put their trust in Thee; Mercifully accept our prayers; and because, through the weakness of our mortal nature, we can do no good thing without Thee, grant us the help of Thy grace, that in keeping Thy commandments we may please Thee both in will and deed; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for St. John Baptist's Day.

Almighty Good, by Whose providence Thy servant, John Baptist, was wonderfully born, and sent to prepare the way of Thy Son, our Saviour, by preaching repentance; make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life that we may truly repent according to his preaching; and after his example constantly speak the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

To a Young Preacher.

First, preach the Cross. But not before
You have shut fast your inner door,
And, on your knees, have tried to see
Its wonder and its mystery.
And as for yourself have claimed a part
Not with your head but with your heart
Then, when you boldly stand
Upon the covenanted land,
And in the three-fold Name
Seek to proclaim
To wistful wondering men
The ancient Hope again,
Oh! make the Cross so clear!
But do not fret nor fear
Because you cannot fit
A theory into it.
No vague swift glimmer from a distant star
Could meet our fireside need:
Christ crucified is something nearer far
Than any Creed.
Remember that you are not called to be
A wise exponent of philosophy.
The Cross is not discerned through commonsense,
But through a humbling real experience;
And you
Are just to witness that the truth is true.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Last Parables.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

There are several remarkable things about the Parable of the Ten Virgins. All the Virgins had lamps; all slumbered. Those with lighted lamps were received into the house, though they slept like the others. More oil can be had somewhere. If they had stayed awake the Virgins could have had it. Oil is elsewhere used as a symbol of the Grace of God conveyed by the Holy Spirit. Oil, burning in a lamp, is that Grace manifested. Did the foolish Virgins lack its manifestation through faith or its manifestation through works?

Evangelical and Sacramentalist divide. "Works are lacking," says one, "good deeds and the ordinances of the Church." "Faith is lacking," says the other, "the saving faith that vitalizes empty forms and makes them unnecessary." Holding, as we must, that Evangelical and Sacramentalist see different sides of one shield, that Works are Faith and Faith is Works, and that presence of the Holy Spirit produces both, we feel that the foolish five lacked His saving and sufficient presence. Yet all ten lamps were once full of oil.

Both sets of Virgins slept. Much comment takes the sleep to be death, since that is common to all. If they had been awake the lamps of the foolish would not have gone out. If they had slept long enough the lamps of the wise would have gone out. It is impossible that all of one group of lamps should have gone out and all the other group remained alight, unless the wise Virgins renewed the oil in their lamps before they went to sleep. The parable does not mention this; perhaps because it is so obvious. Neither does the Parable of the Wedding Garment mention the fact that the garment came from the king.

We deduce that none of them should have slept, that if the supply of oil be often renewed a short sleep is not fatal, and that the wise and kindly mind that made the parable remembereth that we are but dust and considereth that all flesh is grass. Therefore we are to keep awake if we can; and, at all events, every time we wake are to renew the oil in the lamps. What is that oil? The presence of the Holy Spirit, both by faith and good works.

When the door was shut were the foolish virgins cast into outer darkness; to put it brutally, were they damned? The parable does not say so. Modern comment seems to affirm it. Ancient comment does not. The Lamb does not know them and they are excluded from the marriage feast. The resources of language are elsewhere ransacked by Our Lord and the Apostles to express the sorrow of this and the loss. But, is it damnation? The Master does not say so. Must all those not present at the marriage supper of the Lamb be everlastingly condemned to the lake of fire and brimstone prepared for the devil and his angels? The whole question turns on the interpretation of that Kingdom of God or Kingdom of Heaven, which is the subject-matter of the parables. Our Lord took pains enough to tell about it. The Apostles had a definite idea of it and gave us many details. The early Church does not seem confused concerning it. It is a pity that more than one modern stream of interpretation has arisen.

Our Lord continued with the Parable of the Talents. This necessarily suggests that of the Pounds. Many have tried to derive both from the same discourse, but the inner structure differs. To study them in parallel is the surest way to grasp their independence. "Talents" and "Talented," as used in English to convey the idea of great natural ability, derive from this parable. The contrast with that of the Pounds is ably drawn, notably by Archbishop Trench.

The two servants make the same per cent profit, and the reward is the same for both. The punishment of the servant who hid his talent is like that of the one who hid his pound. It is taken away and he is cast out. No reader can doubt that in the Parable of the Talents Our Lord had the Parable of the Pounds in mind. The similarity is too great for accident. No critical reader can long doubt that the two were independent. The differences are too great for mistake. Jesus quotes Jesus.

This is the last parable. The evidence concerning the Kingdom is all in.

The Children's Internationale.

PART II.

Chester B. Emerson.

These children, rescued from overwhelming death, are taught self-respect, reverence for others, responsibility for property. This last was unforgettable. The floor of an old barrack was lined on one side with rows of broken boxes which had brought canned goods from home. I looked at them wonderingly. Here was a maimed doll, there a frayed ribbon, perhaps only a handful of smooth pebbles picked up on the shore, in some only the torn remains of a shredded wheat biscuit carton. To my puzzled question came the answer, "They are children's boxes. Every one, you see, wants something to which he can say 'my'. Yea! in those ancient countries where every one takes what he can without reason or right, there is a new generation arising who will respect property because they have some, who will recognize the rights of others because they cherish their own. Who knows. Perhaps these who have come out of the great tribulation are the saving remnant who shall build a better life in these old lands.

And to help them are those thousands more in Oropos, reaping the wheat fields by the sea; in the Island of Syra, making their truck farms even as they mix the mortar and carry the field rock to build their own asylum; in Thessaly, where they are organizing agricultural communities, five thousand strong. Through all the islands and on the mainland these children are gathered, going to school, as in Cephalonia under an occasional plane tree, or in some old palace, or on the sunburnt sands by the sea, learning the three R's and that greatest R of all—righteousness.

They are all ages—some so tiny one wonders how they survived the hardships of the Great Disaster. There on the hilltop looking down on the ruins of Richard Coeur de Lion's Crusader's Castle at Sidon is a pasha's palace with rough new outbuildings, filled with hundreds of little ones, all under four years old. I can see them now, playing all the old games of childhood, and the newer kindergarten ones, too, and singing as though there were no hatred and murder in the world.

I know what Christ meant when He answered the query: "Who is greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven?" I saw just such a child in Beyrout—a glorious fairy, all brown curls and brown eyes and a childish accent which taught me how beautiful the English language can be. A bundle of rags moved by the roadside on that long retreat before fire and sword. An American doctor's wife stopped and uncovered an unconscious baby. No protestations of its uselessness prevented that mother from carrying that child in her arms. After months of careful nursing the child recovered. Today her little soul looks up at you and you know why you will have to wait at the gate of Heaven till the children pass St. Peter. Her name is Azadhoui—"Child of Freedom." I cannot but think of it every time I sing, "Sweet Land of Liberty."

What more shall I say? For the time would fail me to tell of the boys at Jubail, who are breaking stone and mending roadways, or learning to be artificers of silver; of that group that have built a whole wooden village with their own hands at Ibrahim, of those sturdy youngsters who have excavated and rebuilt the old mill and outbuildings in another village, of the hundreds of girls in eighteen buildings high up in the Lebanons at Ghazir, learning to weave the finest Oriental rugs, even carding and dyeing and spinning the wool; of the lace-makers in Beyrout, etc. Where are they not? There are babies under the very eaves of the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem. In Nazareth, across the narrow streets from the church that keeps worship over the Cave of the Holy Family, boys of twelve are learning to be carpenters. They are even going to school by the hundreds in the courtyards of the great church and monastery that occupies the supposed site of the house of Our Lord's brother, James in Jerusalem.

And when they sing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," they look not so much up as out, as though they thought the divine providence were just now living in America. If "mercy and goodness is following all their days" as they recite the psalm so feelingly, they know quite well whose human hands are conveying it. All hail those wonderful men and women who are carrying this saving ministry to the old world! They give us a right to hope for our country.

Can you hear the children singing? It is the finest Internationale ever sung by mortal lips.

The Art of Resting.

To rest seems simple enough, doesn't it? There are plenty of people who do not have to learn how at all, to whom resting comes with a fine natural grace, as do the arts of eating and sleeping. These people are not all idlers, either. Perhaps the greatest workers of the world, at any rate those who accomplish most, are the men and women who can relax completely, even in the midst of vast affairs; who keep in their hearts an unwrinkled corner of serenity; who can snatch a moment's rest between two great decisions, come out of it refreshed, and make the decisions right.

But to many of us who are hurrying, hustling, and bustling day and night, resting is one of the lost arts. We rush from work to so-called recreations and from recreation back to work again. We say that mere change rests us. So it would if we took it in the right spirit; but there is no rest when the eye is on the clock, no rest when the hours and the days are too short for the things we undertake to do in them.

Then for some of us, comes the imperative order; you must rest—and to our horror, we find that—we do not know how. We try long hours of external quiet, long black nights when the quiet seems eternal. We try change of air and change of scene. But in spite of external variety and quiet, the thoughts keep tapping—patter, patter on the tired brain like rain-drops beating on a roof. It takes months and months, perhaps years of wasted life to teach us the lesson that at the proper time we might have learned so easily.

For rest is a spiritual grace an art that can be acquired in early years and practiced with untold benefit. Teach it to your children and begin to learn it yourself, even now the art of being absolutely quiet and relaxed, even if only for a very short period. No matter how work presses, no matter how life whirls about you, teach yourself to become for a few moments each day as passive as the white clouds or the green field or the tranquil stars. So will you put new strength into your work that will make every stroke more lasting and beautiful.—Julia M. Wolfe.

A Prayer for the Kitchen Wall.

May labor make me glad!

May I have eyes to see

Beauty in this plain room

Where I am called to be:

The scent of clean blue smoke,

The old pans polished bright,

The kettle's chuckling joke,

The red flames' lovely light!

May I have wit to take

The joy that round me lies!

Whether I brew or bake,

May labor make me wise!

May labor leave me sweet!

When twilight folds the earth,

May I have grace to smile

And count the day's good worth!

An old song in my soul

And quiet in my breast

To welcome tranquilly

The night's old gift of rest

And gather strength to face

Tomorrow's busy strife.

Here in this humble place

May labor bless my life!

—Nancy Byrd Turner, in the Baptist.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE

THE PARABLE OF GRANDPA AND THE BOW-WOW.

There is a land which is called Switzerland, and I and Keturah journeyed thither in the Long Ago. And in one of the cities is a Great Pit wherein are Bears. And the Tourists buy Carrots and feed unto the Bears. And around the place are Booths where they sell Picture Post Cards which thou mayest buy and send unto thy friends, showing that thou art in a country where there are bears, as there verily are in thine own. And over against the Pit are the shops of the Woodcarvers, who sell Wooden Bears. And I purchased one of these, being half as tall as I am, and holding in his Paws a Wooden Ring for the holding of Canes or Umbrellas. And the bear is in my Study, and holdeth Canes that I have carried in Many Lands.

And all Children love the Bear, for he is Friendly, and his Glass Eyes are Kindly, and no little boy or girl could well be afraid of him. And the Head and Back of the Bear are Smooth with the patting and stroking of Little Children.

Now the Daughter of the Daughter of Keturah hath a Little Sister, and she is Two Years old. And she is about the Brightest Little Bit of Color that shineth up this old world. And almost every day, when the Daughter of the Daughter of Keturah and my Little Grandson are in school, then doth the Daughter of Keturah come over to see Keturah, and they climb the stair to where I work.

And I hear the little feet climbing the Stair, and a little Voice saying, I want to see Grandpa. Is Grandpa in?

And all the way as she cometh up the Stair, her Single-Track mind is full of the idea of Seeing Grandpa.

But the minute she entereth the room, she taketh one good look at Grandpa, and runneth across the room and Huggeth the Bear, whom she calleth a Bow-wow.

And Grandpa is not in the running until she hath caressed the Bow-wow.

Now, if I were a silly old Grandpa, I should feel hurt at this. But I am neither old nor silly, and I do not intend ever to be, either. And I say Nothing but Saw Wood until she hath done with the Bow-wow. Then doth she run to me, and climb into my lap, and put her Chubby Little Arms around my neck, and say, I love Grandpa.

And I have considered these things and have remembered mine own conduct.

For verily, I have climbed slowly and with faltering feet up the Stairs of reverence and devotion, saying as I climbed on Stepping Stones of my Dead Self to Higher Things, I would see God. I would know more of mine Heavenly Father. And in this I have been sincere.

And then, as hath happened more than once or twice, I have seen some Trivial yet Pleasant Thing, and I have run unto it, and later have been sorry that I was so Fickle.

Now the Bible doth not say that Little Children are to enter into the kingdom like Grown Folk, which would be a Sad Misfortune, but that Grown Folk are to enter as a Little Child. And this doth Encourage Me.

Wherefore, I pray, saying, O my God, who knoweth our Frame and Rememberest that we are Dust, Thou art more Wise and Just than to judge me Wholly by the way I turn to the right hand or the left in pursuit of this or that Trivial Thing in Life. Thou knowest Mine Heart even as I know the heart of this Chubby, Snuggly little Lump of Caprice and Affection. Judge me, O my God, as I judge this Little Child, and love me as I love her, and even a Little More. And have Mirthful Mercy on the shortcomings of thy Fickle Children, for Lord, we love Thee more than these.—Selected.

Here-in Is Love.

Not by my hold on Thee,
But Thy firm grasp on me,
I walk from day to day
In humble hope, and pray
Thine everlasting arms
Keep me through life's alarms;
And thus, the truest peace I find
In serving Thee with quiet mind.

Not by my love for Thee,
But Thy pure love for me,
I learn how good Thou art,
How the Eternal Heart
Out-measures mind of man
In wondrous scope and plan,
Giving a foretaste here of love
Which is man's life in Home above.

For the Young Folks

The Friendly Stars.

I love to see the little stars
That twinkle in the night.
I like to call them angel lamps,
They are so clear and bright.
When I've been good, they seem to say,
"Well done, dear little child!"
'Tis then the pretty angel lamps
Shine with a radiance mild.

But when I've spoken thoughtless words,
Or done an unkind deed,
It seems as if those lights grow dim,
Oh, very dim, indeed.
So just before I say my prayer, I
I always look to see
If all the friendly angel lights
Are twinkling bright at me.

"Suffer the Little Children to Come to Me."

Eugenie du Maurier.

Once upon a time, long, long ago, in a place called Palestine, there lived a little girl named Rachel. She had long black hair, and big brown eyes, and a bright happy smile.

One day her mother said to her, "Rachel, would you like to go to market with me?"

"Oh, yes, mother," said Rachel. She liked to go to market because that was where they bought good things to eat, and saw interesting things like colored beads and pretty cloth and camels and donkeys. And there were many, many people there, too.

"Let us hurry then, and get our work all done," said her mother.

So Rachel took her broom and swept the floor—and I am sure she must have helped with the dishes. Then she put on her little shawl. Rachel's mother put a basket on her arm, and they started out together.

"Perhaps, we shall see the wonderful man, Jesus," she said. "They say
He is in our village."

They walked until they came to a big crowd of people standing near Someone who was talking. They could not see who it was. But Rachel was such a little girl that she slipped right through the crowd until she stood almost in front of the Man who was speaking.

It was Jesus!

He sat on a big stone under a tree.
And He was telling those people stories that would help them to be happy.

While Rachel stood and looked at Him, a wonderful thing happened. Jesus looked straight down into Rachel's eyes and smiled the most wonderful smile that said, "I love you."

When Rachel saw the smile she forgot all about everything else. She knew that Jesus loved her. She ran right into His arms and nestled her head up against Him, and He put His arm about her.

And what do you think happened then? When all the other mothers saw how much Jesus loved little Rachel they began to bring their little boys and girls to Him, too. The Disciples, the men who were Jesus' best friends, thought the children might make Him tired, and wanted them to go away. But Jesus said, "No." And

He took them each one in His arms.
And He put His hands on their heads and smiled that wonderful smile that told them He loved them. Then He said: "Suffer the little children to come unto Me."

Betty's Other Name.

"Betty S—! Betty S—!" Adele kept repeating as she looked at the big rag doll with her sun-bonnet and her gingham apron. "What do you suppose her other name is, mamma? Why do you think grandma wants me to guess?
I don't understand it."

"Neither do I, Adele," said Mrs.
Ford. "Grandma says you will get a prize when you guess Betty's other name, so if you want to earn the prize you will have to put on your thinking cap."

So the letter that Adele wrote to her grandma thanking her for the doll had a neat little list of names, beginning with the letter S, but none of them were right. Whenever Adele heard of a new name, she ran to put it down, but somehow she never could get just the right one. All this time poor Betty S— was tucked away in a box in the playroom, for her little owner did not like her at all. She did not tell her mamma that she was much disappointed to receive only a rag doll from grandma, who usually sent such lovely things, but Mrs. Ford did not need to be told.
The other dolls were carefully un-dressed every night and put into their beds, but Betty was never looked at at all.

"Grandma is coming to visit us tomorrow, Adele," said her mother. "She is to stay a week."

"I suppose I'll have to get out Betty S—, then," said Adele, discontentedly.
"It wouldn't do to let grandma know
I never played with her."

Mrs. Ford said nothing, but presently the play-room was set in order and Betty S— given a place in an armchair in the corner.

"Why, how nice and clean Betty S—looks, Adele," said her grandma when she went into the playroom. "Her clothes are not soiled a bit. You must be very careful with her."

"I—I don't play with her very much," said Adele.

Adele guessed all the time she was there, but could not get the right name, so she told her mamma she would never try again. "I don't like Betty at all," she said, shaking the poor doll.
"What is your name, you ugly thing?"
she said. "Grandma said she intended to buy me a nice little piano when I guessed what the 'S' stands for, but I'll never get it. Why, mamma, look here! This lovely silver thimble fell out of Betty's bonnet when I shook her."

In a hurry, the bonnet was pulled off, and there was a beautiful handkerchief, with lace around it, in the crown.
Her petticoats proved to be other handkerchiefs, and in her sleeves were the prettiest hair-ribbons Adele had ever seen. In her old-fashioned calico handbag were pretty bits of silk for doll dresses, and in the back of her frock Adele found a ring neatly hidden. The little girl had quite a heap of gifts in her lap when Betty was finally ready for her nightgown.

"I s'pose she meant it for a surprise, didn't she?" she asked, and then she caught a twinkle in her mamma's eye. "Betty Surprise! Betty Surprise!

If I had been nice, and played with her at first, I would have guessed her name long ago." And when the pretty toy piano was brought into the playroom it was Betty Surprise that was first seated with her clumsy hands on the white keys, and all the other dolls had to wait.—Selected.

A June Day.

Alice B. Joynes.

This gift of God, this perfect day,
This rare and lovely day of June!
All Nature seems in mood to pray,
Each feathered songster is in tune.

The rustling leaves, the blossoms fair,
The humming bees and singing birds,
All have a song of praise and prayer,
A melody without the words.

The blue sky bending over all,
Is mirrored in the lake's calm breast,
And from it benedictions fall
That whisper thoughts of peace and rest.

The Little Child Nextdoor.

My neighbor has a little boy;
He's over every day.
He thinks I've nothing else to do
But sit with him and play.

His buttons scratch my polished chairs,
He's torn my favorite dress,
He broke my prettiest salad dish;
He always leaves some mess!

He says: "What are you doing now?"
"Is all 'em berries bad?"
"I want some cake!" "I need a drink."
He nearly drives me mad.

He carts in "fowers"—just faded weeds—
And tracks in mud. Alas!
He's worn a little yellowish path
Across my cherished grass.

He's always leaving things behind:
A ball, a shoe, a top,
A grimy little handkerchief,
A sticky lollypop.

He's gone off somewhere with his aunt,
He said he'd be back soon,
But they're still gone—they left at eight—
And here it's nearly noon!

Some way I'm not myself today;
I guess I feel the heat.
I haven't done a single thing
But sit and watch the street.

I haven't baked, I haven't sewed,
Or even mopped the floor.
Things don't seem right—it cannot be
I miss that child nextdoor!

—L. J. Bridgart.

Mrs. Phoebe Bird.

"Tweet, tweet-tee!" came from the tall tree where Mrs. Phoebe Bird was looking out on the park. You must know that Mrs. Phoebe Bird goes away South in the cold winter and has just begun to clean house back here again.
The sun was shining brightly and Mrs.
Phoebe Bird knew it would soon be too warm to work hard, so she was busily flying around to get her work done in a hurry.

Of course, she could feel very aristocratic, spending her winters in the South, but she was a very demure little bird, and didn't feel proud at all.

She found a nice forked limb and set to work to make a cosy place for the little Phoebe Birds that would soon come out of the eggs.

She found plenty of mud and grass and went to work. But, do you know, the swaying of the tree made her seasick, so she had to begin all over again.

"Dear me, where was it I thought I could make a good nest," she asked of herself. She sat quite still for a minute; then all at once she began to flutter her little wings and look very happy. "Oh, yes, I know now! Over under that cupola on the gardener's house. How funny that I forgot! We will not get jostled around there, and it cannot rain on us, either. Well, well, how forgetful I am! But I must hurry."

So, patient little thing that she was, she began again. She plastered the bottom of the nest firmly with mud, then put in grass to make it soft and warm, then for a pretty trimming she scattered some moss around. My, it was a pretty little home when finished.

Mrs. Phoebe Bird is so little—just about the size of the sparrow—and she wears a dark crown. She doesn't sing very much—that is, she cannot do as well as a lot of other birds, but she has a sweet little voice. And you know she is so happy making a home for her babies that she sings just the same. I do really believe she could teach us a whole lot of things!—The Child's Gem.

A Boy Who Was Really Brave.

There is more than one way of being brave, as this little story shows. "Elton Tilton is just the bravest boy you ever saw, mother," said Winifrid. "One day a big dog came along with his tongue hanging out, and we thought it was mad, and scrambled over the fence; but Elton walked right along as calm as ever. He says he isn't afraid of bears, or tramps, or anything. I wish I was as brave as Elton, but I'm afraid I never will be."

"I heard a story about two boys the other day," said his mother, "and I thought one of them was very brave. They went to school together, and one day they thought it would be great fun to hide a frog in the teacher's desk. But the frog tipped over the ink bottle and spoiled a number of examination papers and other things, and the teacher was very angry. He asked the guilty boy to own his fault like a man and take the punishment he deserved. He put him upon his honor, you see. Well, the eldest boy, who found the frog and first thought of the joke, sat still in his seat without blush; but the little boy, though he trembled with fear went to the desk before the whole school and owned his fault. And he sat for an hour on the dunce's stool a target for fifty pairs of eyes."

"Oh, mother," cried Winifrid, "I was so ashamed! I'll never do anything so mean again as long as I live. How did you know?"

"I heard two little boys talking about it as I rode in the car. I was proud of my boy, Winifrid; and I pitied Elton Tilton's mother, for I said to myself, 'My boy was brave, but her boy was a coward.'"

"Why I never thought that was being brave!" said Winifrid.—Presbyterian Banner.

Nzadi and His Toot-Horn.

"I'm too little to take up much room, so please take me in."

That was the first answer that little

Nzadi made when they told him that the mission station at Luebo, Africa, was so chuck full of boys that they couldn't take in even one more.

But Nzadi wasn't to be discouraged. He was too enterprising for that. In his own village, perhaps a hundred miles away, he had heard about the school, and when a caravan passed through the town, he joined it, and walked all the way to Luebo. Yes, sir, he did! Only seven or eight years old, either. It's a pretty big story, but Mrs. Martin, one of the missionaries at Luebo, says that an African boy (or girl) seven or eight years old can walk as many as thirty-five miles in a single day, so there is nothing for us to do but to believe it. And it is easy to believe that a boy like that wouldn't give up at the first rebuff.

"The other boys can squeeze up close together and make room for me on their beds," he said to Mama Mutoto, as the natives called Mrs. Morrison, who had charge of the boys. "Mutoto," means "Star." Don't you think that was a nice name to call her?

"I didn't come to live in your fence to make you work more, Mama Mutoto," he said. "I came to run errands, and work for you and help you."

"You'll be homesick," they said.

"You just try me," declared Nzadi. "Besides, I should be ashamed to go home and tell them you wouldn't let me live in your fence."

So Mama Mutoto didn't have the heart to refuse him, and my! how fast Nzadi did learn. He was very proud, too, of being able to run errands and do chores for Mama Mutoto.

By and by vacation came, and Nzadi went back to his own village, and what do you s'pose that little fellow did there? There was no teacher of God in the village; so Nzadi began preaching to them himself. Some way or other he got hold of an old horn, and he would toot-toot-toot-toot on it to call the people together, and then he would tell them the Bible stories that he had learned from Mama Mutoto, and how the "Mvidi Mukulu" (Great Creator) was not angry with His children, but loved them. Then little Nzadi prayed, right before them all, and sang hymns and began to teach the people to sing, too. Twice every day, when he thought the sun showed it was time for the regular church service at Luebo, little Nzadi tooted his horn and called the people together and taught them some of the wonderful things he had learned. Pretty fine for a black boy, seven or eight years old, don't you think?—Everyland.

Character consists not so much in what we are as in what we are becoming. As the days pass, are we becoming more or less selfish? Are we becoming more or less kind and sympathetic in our relations with our fellow-men? Are we becoming more or less interested in the great work of the Kingdom of God? In other words, are we growing in grace and in the knowledge of Our Lord Jesus Christ?—Selected.

That prayer is from the heart which moves us to pray with our hands.

No matter how heavily handicapped we may be, there is always something to be done for His glory.

Life and love so close are interweaving
That none can live and yet be portionless,

And days must come with hours all retrieving

The dreary years of unfound happiness.

Conference on Personal Religion.

A conference on personal religion for boarding school girls at Holiday House, the Girls' Friendly Vacation Home near Mt. Vernon, is being conducted by Miss Mabel E. Stone, Executive Secretary of the Girls' Friendly Society, and in this connection a religious pageant was presented by the girls on Sunday afternoon, June 15, at Holiday House.

This conference is the first of its kind to be held and is planned especially to meet the needs of students from Church boarding schools as the summer schools for religious education are planned for older girls.

The Annual Conference of the Society of the Nazarene of the Episcopal Church in America will be held in Washington on September 14. The conference will be held in Trinity Church, Third and C Streets, N. W., and will last four days, some of the services being healing services. Several of the Washington clergy will cooperate actively with the Society.

The Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. D., who has filled the pulpit at the Church of the Epiphany since the consecration of Bishop Freeman, pending the appointment of a new rector, preached there for the last time on Sunday, June 15, leaving shortly thereafter for his summer home in New York State. Dr. Lubeck has won a number of friends during his short stay in Epiphany parish and is recognized as a preacher of power and particularly a preacher of the gospel. M. M. W.

St. Barnabas' Free Home.

On St. Barnabas' Day, June 11, St. Barnabas' Free Home, Gibsonia, celebrated its twenty-fourth anniversary. On the eve of the Feast seven of the inmates were confirmed, and there was a celebration of the Holy Communion for the Brothers and patients at an early hour on the Feast itself. Morning Prayer and sermon by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D. Several of the clergy of the city and vicinity were present and took part in the service. Luncheon was served, and in the afternoon there was a gathering of the friends of the institution that completely filled the chapel. The speakers were introduced by Bishop Mann and were the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of Erie; Mr. Harry Dunlap, a very successful teacher of a large Bible class; and Brother Gouverneur P. Hance, head of the Order of St. Barnabas. Offerings were received for the current expenses of the Home during the summer months, and a gift of $500 toward the purchase of a new organ for the chapel. Plans are already being considered for a suitable observance of the Silver Anniversary of the work in June, 1925. At present the institution is filled almost to capacity, there being ninety-eight men and boys in residence, with several on the waiting list. It is hoped in the not far distant future to add a new wing to the house. J. C.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The New Church at Bedford.

The congregation of St. John's Church, Bedford, is feeling justly proud of its handsome new church building, which has recently been completed and was formally opened on Sunday, June 8. The service was a most interesting one, in which the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, the Rev. William A. Pearman, rector of St. John's, and the Rev. Thomas Carter Page, now of Altavista, but formerly rector of St. John's, all took part.

The new building, which is of red brick, is of semi-Gothic architecture, the interior woodwork being of dark oak. Among its furnishings are a number of handsome new memorials. Mrs. Arthur Kelley Evans gave the East window, in memory of her father, Cornelius Pate. The companion window at the west was given by the congregation and friends of St. John's as a memorial to all of those former members of this parish who have passed to their reward.

Mrs. Stuart Buford gave a splendid electric pipe organ as a memorial to her uncle and aunt, the late Julius Blackburn Buford, Sr., and his wife, Lettie Terry Campbell. Two hymn boards are memorials to the late Mrs. B. W. H. Bolling, for thirty years a member of St. John's, and were given by her husband and daughters. Two brass alms basins were given by Mrs. P. B. Tanner in memory of her mother, Charlotte Campbell Butts. The cornerstone of the new church was given by Mr. Harry M. Carder. The altar which was in the old church, was beautifully remodeled and enlarged by Mr. Sylvester Jones, who is a member of the Elks' National Home at Bedford. The chancel rail, which will be installed in the near future, is the gift of Mr. J. A. Clark and Mrs. U. S. Atkinson, in memory of the late Stephen W. Clark.

So enthusiastic is the congregation over its splendid achievement in the erection of this beautiful church that a movement is already on foot looking to the provision of another building, to be used as a Sunday School and Parish House, and as the result of a recent meeting of the congregation the sum of $4,000 has already been contributed for this purpose.

The old church building has been sold to the congregation of the Christian Church in Bedford.

The Rev. Karl Morgan Block, rector of St. John's Church, Roanoke, Virginia, was recently honored by Roanoke College, Salem, Virginia, which conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. "This is a bestowal that is well deserved and is a source of much gratification to Mr. Block's large circle of friends and admirers, both within and outside of his own diocese.

Five athletic prizes, ten form prizes and four alumni prizes were awarded. The class of '77 prize, the principal prize of the school, given to that member of the graduating class who has shown the greatest proficiency in scholarship, combined with a proper interest in athletics, true manliness of character and popularity among his classmates, was awarded to Edward Blanchard Hodge, Jr.

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

The Convention.

The Convention of the Diocese, which met in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, June 10 and 11, was marked by unusual good feeling. Bishop McCormick received a warm welcome after his long absence from the diocese as Bishop in charge of the European Churches.

Tuesday evening the members of the Convention were the guests of the Men's Club of the Pro-Cathedral at a delightful supper. In connection with this, addresses were made by various speakers, the principal one being by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, who was the guest of the Convention.

In his very able and interesting convention address, Bishop McCormick stressed the subjects of Christian Unity and World Conditions. He also spoke at some length on the proposed school amendment to the state constitution, and its effects on private schools, making specific mention of Akeley Hall, the Diocesan School for Girls. (By subsequent action the Convention supported the position of the Bishop.)

By unanimous vote of both Orders, the Convention decided to change the time of meeting from June to January. The first Convention, under the new rule, will be held in St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, on the third Wednesday of January, 1925, at which time the diocese will celebrate the semi-centennial of its organization.

A step forward was taken when the Convention requested the Executive Council to secure a Diocesan Superintendent of Religious Education.

Reports from the various treasurers showed the diocese to be in excellent condition.

J. E. W.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Church Work in the Penitentiary.

On Friday, June 13, Bishop Mikell confirmed five men at the Federal Penitentiary in Atlanta, three of whom were baptized at the same service. The candidates were presented by the Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, Executive Secretary of the Diocese. This is the first confirmation service ever held by the Church in the history of the institution, although it is a matter of record that the Protestant chaplain in years gone by was a priest of the Church.

At the present time there is a flourishing Bible Class at the Penitentiary, conducted by Mr. A. H. Thomas, of Atlanta, whose average attendance has been high from the beginning. The authorities have cooperated in every way possible to assist the Church in her work among the men and it is felt that the work is bearing fruit in every respect and the men and those working with them on behalf of the Church are receiving great help from the program of activities fostered by the church in the institution.

St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta, has a Dramatic Club of which it is very proud. The members recently presented a play by Catherine Hurlt, of the parish, entitled "High and Low," which was warmly received. The plot has an ecclesiastical setting and is very clever.

Trinity Church, Columbus, is planning to build a parish house in the near future to add to their present splendid plant. Holy Trinity, Decatur, is planning to build a new church which the parish sadly needs.

Miss Katherine Smith, having completed a special course at Columbia University, returns to the diocese to be Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education and will take up her duties in August, having her headquarters in Macon.

An effort is being made to raise $10,000 to complete the new Appleton Church Home, the diocesan orphanage at Macon. The site is all that can be desired in every way and the buildings, of fireproof construction, are modern in every respect.

Personal Notes

The Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Ga., has resigned his parish to become Professor of Theology at the University of the South. The Rev. R. G. Shannonhouse resigned as missionary in charge of churches at Fitzgerald, Douglas and Moultrie, Ga., and on January 1 accepted a call to become rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, Pittsboro, N. C. He also has charge of the Mission of St. Thomas' at Sanford, N. C. Mail should be addressed to Pittsboro, N. C.

After July 1 the address of the Rev. James F. Plummer will be changed from Toulminville, Mobile, Ala., to 612 W. Rittenhouse St., Germantown Philadelphia.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Port Washington, N. Y., was elected President of the National Shakespeare Federation at its eighth annual convention held recently at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City. The Federation comprises Shakespeare Clubs within forty-two various states.

The Rev. Winfield Shiers, rector of Nottoway Parish, Franklin, Va., has accepted a call to All Saints Church, Pleasant Ridge, and St. Mark's Church, Oakley, Cincinnati, Ohio, and expects to take charge September 1.

ORDINATIONS.

On Wednesday, June 11, in St. John's Church, Fayetteville, N. C., the Rev. George F. Cameron, B. D., was ordained to the priesthood by the Bishop of East Carolina, the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D.

The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. James E. W. Cook, rector of St. Paul's Parish, Greenville, N. C., and the candidate was presented by the rector of St. John's, Fayetteville, the Rev. Archer Boogher.

Other clergy present and joining in the Imposition of Hands were the Rev. Kirkland Huske, of the Diocese of Long Island, and the Rev. Harvey A. Cox of Red Springs, N. C.

In Bruton Church, Williamsburg, Va., on Sunday, June 15, Trinity Sunday, James Sutherland Watt was ordained Deacon by the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia. The Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, rector of Bruton Parish, presented the candidate and preached the ordination sermon.

On June 11 Bishop McElwain ordained Mr. James Edward Blake as a Deacon in Christ Church, Austin, Minnesota. The candidate was presented by the Rev. George H. Ten Broeck, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. C. C. Rollit.

The Rev. Mr. Blake has been assigned, temporarily, to the care of missions at Wells and Blue Earth, Minnesota.

Eight young men were ordained to the diaconate Trinity Sunday morning by Bishop Garland at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. They were: Lawreston Castleman, J. Jarden Gnether, Percy G. Hall, William R. McKee, Arthur C. Moore, Thomas Parker, Edmund B. Wood and Coloman Kovachy.

Mr. Parker will become assistant to the Rev. Dr. George H. Toop, rector of Holy Apostles. He will begin his duties on June 29.

At Christ Church, Norfolk, Virginia, on Friday, June 13, Philip Francis Tilghman was ordained Deacon by the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia. The Rev. Francis C. Steinmetz, S. T. D., rector of Christ Church, Norfolk, presented the candidate and preached the ordination sermon.

DEATHS.

Student work has suffered a well-nigh irreparable loss in the death on June 7 of the Rev. Alexander K. Barton, Student Inquirer for the Province of the Pacific and student pastor at the University of California. He was only thirty-one years of age and leaves a wife and baby boy.

Mr. Barton was one of our most successful workers with students, of rare charm of personality, deeply consecrated, greatly liked by his fellow workers in his own and other churches and in the Y. M. C. A., and in his two years at the University of California achieved very remarkable results. The Y. M. C. A. made him their secretary for work among fraternity men. He was selected out of all the student pastors and prominent clergy of Berkeley and San Francisco to make the invocation at the dedication of the University of California Memorial Stadium. Had his life been spared he would probably have solved many problems of Church work at a great university for the benefit of his fellow clergy working among students.

The Church and the Relations of Life.

A lesson to be learned is a renewed loyalty to the Church. Loyalty, however, demands something more than comfortable and complacent content in Churchmanship as it has been in the past. A Churchman's loyalty should mean, by intelligent influence and effort, to further the task of the society to which he belongs. A large part of the Church's task is the bringing of Christian principles to impinge upon all the relations of life. In this application a primary principle of Christianity is the value of personality, "one of the least of these my brethren." Of vital importance is it today that the development, and full and free expression, of personality in right directions be not sacrificed to organization and mass-play and reformation by legislation. There should be, moreover, recognition of the truth of the proverb: "One man alone is no man." In other words, personality is fulfilled in social relations. It is a second principle of Christianity that the last word touching personality is fellowship.—The Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D. D.

FOR me---to have made one soul
The better for my birth;
To have added but one flower
To the garden of the earth;

To have struck one blow for truth
In the daily fight with lies;
To have done one deed of right
In the face of calumnies;

To have sown in the souls of men
One thought that will not die---
To have been a link in the chain of life:
Shall be immortality.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"God is the last word in science."

It is not the anguish of wickedness that is so fearful, but its joy.—Ex.

Faith takes up the cross, love binds it to the soul, patience bears it to the end.—Bonar.

That which we do for ourselves is forgotten; that which we do for Christ is immortal.—T. DeWitt Talmage.

Do not make the mistake of thinking you can become rich by never giving away anything.

Nothing can strengthen our hearts like knowing that God has promised to be our strength.

In scorning the brother less gifted, take heed that thou findest not fault with God.—W. T. Besser.

"Let me fail in trying to do something, rather than to sit still and do nothing."—Syrus Hamlin.

Though one but say, "Thy will be done," He hath not lost his day At set of sun.

—Christina Rossetti.

"Ye are the light of the world! You are to shine so that the last man shall have some sight of your candle."—Babcock.

The Christian soul is one that has come unto God and rested in the peace of God. It dares to call Him Father, without any sense of daring.—Horace Bushnell.

A prayerless day can never be anything but a day of loss and failure. Business may be prosperous as ever. The table may be beautifully spread. But however bright and happy a day may seem to be, if it lacks heaven's benediction, it is a sad day.—J. R. Miller.

Let each day have its value from your calling to abide in Christ! As its light opens on your waking eyes, accept it on these terms: A day, just one day only, but still a day, given to abide and grow up in Christ.—Andrew Murray.

"The Church has not yet discovered, still less begun to realize, the limitless possibilities of intercession. . . . The evangelization of the world is not primarily a matter of numbers, wealth, knowledge and strategy, but of the unhindered working of the Spirit of God. Such Divine manifestation has been associated invariably with prayer."—John R. Mott.

By enlisting in the service of God we enter the one profession which is continuous through time and eternity, in which the work done here and now contributes to the great hereafter, in which nothing is lost or left out, but all our efforts which are made "in Christ" move on, accumulating in one ever-broadening stream.—E. A. Burroughs.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS

We find that being an editor does not change the habit of thought. Those who have the patience to follow the seemingly random ramblings of the editor might as well be let into the secret which is no longer a secret among our friends. We were standing among a group at a Church Convention once when some one asked us a question. Before we were able to reply, a friend spoke out and said, "You fellows stand back a little and give him room. He always has to go back a couple of thousands years to get a running start." This time we are claiming even a little more room; for our starting point in history is nearly 500 B. C. The exponent of woman's rights, whose program we commend to the consideration of women of today lived in a time and in a land where woman was valued only as a plaything; where she exercised no right of choice. She was supposed to be absolutely subservient to man, and had no rights nor privileges save those which her beauty or her cunning could extort from man. So far as we know she is the first woman who claimed rights as a woman. She is the first woman martyr to the cause. She has never received recognition, nor have we ever heard her held up for the admiration of her sisters; but ever since childhood she has been our heroine. She was a Queen, the wife of Ahasuerus, King of Persia. Historians tell us that Ahasuerus was the Persian name of him whom we know as Xerxes, whose fleet was destroyed at Salamis; and Athens, like England, after the defeat of the Spanish Armada, entered upon its golden age of creative thought and splendid adventure.

Just before Xerxes marshalled his hosts and ships for the attack upon Greece, he gathered the princes of the empire for a great Council. For three months in the Capital city there was a continuous round of festivities and revels. At the feasts, we are told, all the usual restrictions of a formal character were lifted, and the men were invited to drink without restraint. In the midst of one of these riotous feasts when, as we are again told, the King himself was merry with wine, he sent officials of the Court to Queen Vashti to bid her array herself and come to show her beauty to the drunken lords who sat around the table. Vashti was famous, even in a land of fair women, for her beauty. The company was the most distinguished in the world. Every man at table was a prince of the realm. She knew well enough that no woman in Persia would dare to disobey openly the command of her own husband. She knew full well the unreasoning rage that is ever the characteristic of an absolute monarch. But Vashti was a royal nature who needed no crown of gold and jewels to be a queen. She was sovereign of her soul. To come into that company that her beauty might be admired by drunken men, no matter if they were princes, was to degrade her. To surrender at the word of a drunken king the dignity of her womanhood was to sink herself to the level of a slave. She did not have long to wait to find out how her choice between a tinsel crown and her womanly dignity was to be received by the drunken King and his drunken lords. With one voice they declared that if Vashti went unpunished every woman in Persia would feel that she need no longer be a plaything and a slave. She was stripped of her royal robes and driven from the palace. Surely there is no nobler figure in the pages of Ancient History than that of this beautiful young woman, who claimed for herself the right to be a woman; who counted the admiration of drinking and drunken men a vile and degrading thing; who prized above jewels and position the consciousness that she had never bartered the priceless worth of her own self-respect for the false tribute of admiration that was in itself an insult. We know nothing of Vashti's youth, and nothing of how she fared after she was dethroned. She appears only for a moment on the stage of history, but, among all the long list of women who have helped to make this world a better and happier world, is there a nobler figure?

Young women of today enter the larger life of a world so different in its habits, its conventions, and its standards from the world in which our own youth was spent, that struggle as we may, we cannot accustom ourselves to it. We try not to be critical. It would be the miracle of history if women who constitute half the human race, and who have been held in by laws and by conventions as binding as law, through all time; and who within a few years have been flung into life's struggle, and given a freedom almost without restrictions, should be able at once to acquire or form principles to guide and protect them in the new world to which they have come. Liberty is the sharpest weapon ever put into the hand of man, and when not being used in actual struggle is the most dangerous for its owner. The girdle which held the Roman soldier's sword in place, was as important as the sword itself. Using this fact as a symbol, St. Paul pictures the soldier in life's struggle as armed with the sword of the spirit and girt about with truth. He whose girdle of truth breaks, loses his one defense. It is an interesting and neglected truth that even today in a world grown proverbially careless, many more millions of men are ruled by reverence than by law. The only possible way in which woman can keep her hard-earned reward of liberty is to see that she inspires reverence in those who might be tempted to rob her of her rights. The woman who destroys man's reverence for woman is not only throwing away her own high privilege of freedom, but is a traitor to her sex for she has opened the gates to the enemies of woman's freedom everywhere.

IN PRAISE OF WITCHES

We have a friend who is a distinct disappointment. We have often wondered that a life so filled with patient study should have remained unproductive. He is forever writing, but nothing from his pen ever appears in print. When questioned as to the fate of his manuscripts, he replied: "I have a pet waste-basket with a large appetite." One day we walked through the open door of his study and saw him sitting at his desk. His eyes were closed and he did not hear our steps. As we looked, suddenly the flexed muscles of his hand contracted till the hand became a fist, and the lines of his face deepened. Then he opened his eyes and they seemed aflame. When he saw us he relaxed and smiled a welcome. "Dreaming?" we asked. "No," he replied, "I was just practicing the ancient art of thinking." Then he began to talk; and we transcribe, as accurately as we can recall, the things he said:

"I am an anachronism. I have banished from my shelves those volumes of predigested wisdom and books of instruction that produce a mild mental excitation and cheat us into believing that we think. This is an hour when I practice what the pugilists call 'shadow boxing.' The way I do it, is to sit, feet on desk and pipe in mouth, with a murmured pledge not to seek the answer to my questionings from any of the ungossiping friends who tier on tier look at me from the shelves; and sitting thus, to summon one by one the great abstractions which rule men's lives, the witches of the mind that cast their spell over every traveler along life's roadway. Every man's mind, I take it, is full of caves wherein the witches dwell. Some day I plan to write a book in defense of witches. The ones I know are not the withered hags that snarl and mutter curses. In those rare hours when I have been privileged to meet them in the dusk, their faces seemed to me more worth the eager gaze of him who would understand life's mysteries than any face that ever looked through canvas eyes upon a wondering world. Truth, Honor, Virtue, Peace, Success and Fortitude, these are the witches' names. How often have I sought the cave of every one of them and gazed into the darkness and called aloud to ask of her who dwelt therein to tell me of the way. The witches' answer came in sounding phrase, wise saw or pithy apothegm, which telling everything, told nothing. Armed with the answers, I have hurried on until I came to one of life's crossways where the winds of chance have full play from every side and where the sign-post, blown down, lies prone by the road. There by the fallen sign I have sat down and cursed the impotence of apothegms.

Once in an angry mood I went back to the mouth of the cave and shouted that I had been mocked and bade the witch come forth. No answer came, and then I shouted again, 'I shall return tomorrow night and every night thereafter till you come forth and give true answer to my questioning.' After many nights of weary waiting she came at last, and spoke to me face to face. Since that time, when the world is locked in sleep or blinded by the glare of earthly lights, full many a vigil have I kept outside a witch's cave, seeking sight and audience with her who to the world is but a voice in darkness.

When Honor came, I saw a woman clad in loose robes of dazzling whiteness, robes worn thin with many washings, and to my questioning she answered, 'Thou wouldst not bear upon thy body the stains of yesterday's toil or travel. Has thy soul upon it any stains of yesterday?'

When Peace came, I drew back, frightened, for from the shadows rushed a pack of wolves who snapped at one another and surrounded her, and seemed about to rend her. From a basket that she carried, she held out food. With lips drawn back and snarling as they came, they took the food. In their hunger and their greed they sometimes tore the flesh from the hand held out, but the giver did not flinch. When they were fed they still crouched in a circle about her. I saw her go first to one and then to another spreading some healing ointment on the gaping wounds that every wolf bore on his body. Before the circle was gone round, the wolves had learned the lesson and stood expectant for the helper's touch. Eased of their pains they slept at last; and Peace waving her bleeding hands above the sleeping pack, said: 'The only conquered enemies are those whom you have made to be your friends.'

When Virtue came, I could not at first see her face, for she was bent as one who carries a burden. Her dress was patched in places. Her step was firm, and somehow I had the feeling that she was very strong. Upon her left sleeve just above where a tear in the cloth had been mended, were red bands that looked for all the world like service stripes. It was only when she lifted her head that I knew her. It was the face of the Conqueror, and in her splendid eyes there still glowed the fires of battle. In wonder at the majesty of that face, I forgot the question I had framed, and asked, 'Tell me, thou strong one, why should thy body be bent?' Her answer burned itself to my brain: 'I carry on my shoulders the hopes of every decent home of earth.'

I would that I were equipped with cinematic speech to tell aright of the coming of Fortitude. Just as she came from out the Cave's mouth, the overhanging rocks of the mountain above broke from their moorings. A boulder struck her down. Another barely missed her head as she lay there. I saw her struggle from beneath the rock that held her down, reach out and drag the other to her and with the two build a protection for her head. Her arms were free and as the rocks fell on or about her, she piled them on her body in such fashion as to make for herself a rude protection from the leaping death that coursed down the mountain side. When the avalanche of rock and dirt had ceased, I saw her after many efforts free herself, pick up the soiled and battered cap she had worn, and take of the many stones that had beat her down, and laying them in order, build thereof a walk-way leading into the cave. She did not speak.

Of the meeting with Success and Truth I may not speak at length. Enough that when I looked upon Success, the fashion of her countenance underwent so many changes, and the whispered words were in so strange a tongue that I should not know her, should we meet again. When Truth came her face was veiled, and by a path I had not seen before she beckoned me to follow up the mountain side. Panting I strove to climb. The sharp stones cut and thorns tore my clothing till I cried out and begged her stay; that already I was half-naked and bleeding. Her answer came: 'Clothes are the accidents of life. We go to seek reality which has no accidents.' At last I could no longer follow where she led. She came where I had fallen and I begged to see her face. 'None see my face except upon the heights. Thou art not yet fit to climb so far. Go change the diet of thy mind and learn to suffer pain without a cry. The thorns you cursed but kept you in the path. The stones that cut were fragments of the rock in which the path was hewn.'

LOVE AND DEATH

By the Reverend Elwood Worcester, D. D.

We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love.—1 John, 3, part of verse 14.

THIS is certainly a very wonderful saying, and if we heard it today for the first time, it would give us something to think about. St. John adds, it is true, "the brethren," but the object of love is not the important thing; it is love itself which is amazing. There are some things we encounter in life which we fancy we understand simply because we are familiar with their action, but as to which—like the breath of the Spirit—we know not whence they come and whither they go. The greatest of these presences are Love and Death, the twin mysteries of life, which so many mythologies have represented as the two faces of the same deity. What is love? What is death? If we could give a perfect answer to these questions we should comprehend all that is essential of the riddle of life. Or, if we knew what one of them is, we should probably know the other also.

"These two figures, Love and Death," as Edward Carpenter says, "move through the world like the closest friends, indeed never far separate and together dominating it, and yet like the bitterest enemies, each dogging the footsteps of the other, each undoing the work of the other, as they fight for the souls and bodies of men."

All religions of mankind have set themselves to explain the mystery of death, but only the Christian religion has undertaken to solve the meaning of love. Science thinks it has done its duty in explaining love merely as Nature's provision for the creation of new life, and in laying down its wholesome precepts of eugenics, which God knows we need. But children, though the crown and blessing of love, are not its sole source and object, nor does even so wonderful a thing as the creation of new life exhaust love's meaning and wonder. There is also something in love for the lover, apart from its value to the next generation. In spiritualizing love man has made his greatest moral advance and has laid the foundation of all his future greatness. He has invested love with reverie, and he dreams of making it eternal. He does not limit it to one function, and that function attained, it does not cease. From henceforth it becomes the most important part of his life. Love that looks forward to its own end and which does not believe itself to be eternal is a blasphemy.

From this consciousness springs the major part of our most imperishable literature. Love and Death are the themes of our greatest dramas, our tenderest lyrics, our most moving romances, our most intimate art and of the music which speaks to the heart. It would seem that here we touch another world, perhaps the very source of life itself, a world to us otherwise unknown, where all is exalted and poignant, where joy is unearthly and ineffable, and where doubt and sorrow are a thousand times more dreadful, a world which most men and women enter once in their lives, but which something—the weakness of their mortal nature, selfishness, blindness, lack of faith, lack of forgiveness prevents them from making their permanent and everlasting home. So the glory fades into the light of common day, and the blossoms of that incomparable Springtide wither. So the gates of that celestial paradise close, and cherubim and the flaming sword bar the way to our return, and we find ourselves again in this finite world which we account real, simply because it is so dull and unmiraculous. This is the great tragedy of life—our brief contact with reality, which we call "illusion," followed by disillusion—the return to the commonplace. Love reveals in men qualities, the noblest and the best, the strangest and the most primitive which, without love, they would never know they possessed. This is not something man has created, but which, in all the reaches of his emotional and spiritual life, has created him. Here he unconsciously came into contact with some invisible power which has profoundly altered his whole life. Can any one imagine what a desert this world would be without it? We need not trouble ourselves to picture the torments of an inferno. To live without love were hell enough.

This creative breath goes forth, the breath which has not yet created, and all sentient beings thrill and are transformed as it breathes on them. Fishes paint themselves with wondrous colors, and put on their glorious nuptial dress. Salmon hear the distinct call in their safe home in the depths of the sea, and with incomprehensible instinct, they set forth on their long journey, beset with a thousand dangers, to the upper reaches of the very river in which they themselves were born, and where they, in turn, would deposit their eggs and where they begin a longer fast than either Christians or Mohammedans ever practice. Insects fly in the sunlight and are endowed with premonitions of coming changes and metamorphoses which pass our comprehension. The lark, filling the air with glorious song, mounts to heaven. The hidden nightingale, beneath the moon, pours forth his soul in an ode to passion and to death. Great stags and bulls, clad in new armor made for the occasion, and which after these great weeks they soon lay aside, lose their habitual caution, forsake their secure solitude and wander far and wide. Of their psychology, of the profound inward and spiritual changes which are the causes of all these immense outward changes we know next to nothing. Their poetry, except perhaps that of the birds, is written in an unknown language. But one thing we see: for the time being individual life is swallowed up in something we must still call love, and to accomplish the act of creation innumerable of these mysterious creatures lay life down without hesitation and, as far as we can apprehend, without regret.

One feels that here one is groping amid mighty mysteries, which far transcend reason and description, uttering words which may or may not mean anything to the hearers, according to what they themselves have felt or experienced.

"Nay, be assured no secret can be told
To any who divined it not before."

When St. Paul was caught up to the third heaven, he was content to say he had seen things which could not be uttered, but when he wrote his great Hymn to Love his whole soul became vocal and lyrical.

Love comes to man and transforms him, so that for the time being, at least, all the rest of the world appears to him unreal and unimportant. But this is the constantly recurring phenomenon we observe in all great awakenings of the soul, when a new light dawns so dazzling as to obscure all lesser lights, a new reality is presented so overpoweringly as to cause that we had accounted reality to seem unreal. Death also comes to man and transforms him, transforms him so profoundly that for him this physical and material life no longer exists at all, and at present we are related to one of these mysteries much as we are to the other. To me, man's survival of bodily death is practically a certainty, but what the life after death is we have, really, no knowledge at all.

So, in love we come into the presence of another mighty transforming reality, call it a spiritual, cosmic energy, the face of Deity, the image of the Godhead—what you will, a power which contains within itself many elements, some old, some new, some spiritual, some physical, some purely divine, others very human, some creative, and looking to the future, others redemptive and glorifying the present, a force which entered the world perhaps in the soul of a mother, and which finds its perfect form and expression only in Jesus Christ, Who alone dared to trust love utterly, and to use this mightiest of all redemptive forces as the moving spring of His religion. It was He who took from love its weaker, darker elements, its jealousy and ferocity, its too great dependence on the senses, its transitoriness, its selfishness, sadness and disillusion, and He invested it with the quality of sanctity and immortality by identifying it with the life of God, and by assuring us that somewhere there exists the perfect love, the perfection for which we strive.

That is the real meaning of Christ's great call to the slumbering souls of men: "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." This great word Repentance, Metanoia, does not mean primarily compunction, or sorrow for sin. It means a change of disposition in regard to the two great realities with which we are forever confronted—God and our soul.

The God whom the Hebrews had conceived as jealous, revengeful, begrudging man knowledge and immortality, and partial only to the Jews, Jesus conceives as the one universal Father who makes His sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sends His refreshing rain to the just and to the unjust, whose eternal nature is to give, and whose attributes are love, light, peace, reason.

Instead of regarding man as a being essentially evil and deeply fallen from God, Jesus conceives of him as a child; it is true, with a child's blemishes and imperfections and immaturity, but as the true, legitimate and genuine child of God, filled with the divine nature. If man were essentially evil there would be no such thing as sin. In doing wrong man would be only expressing himself. The whole sinfulness of sin lies in the fact that man is essentially good. Hence it is that Jesus regarded evil as an adventitious thing, as a kind of sickness of the soul which needs healing, not condemnation and punishment, whose only atonement is to do better.

Instead of conceiving the human race to be deeply and permanently divided by descent, by color, by nationality essentially one, by virtue of their common relation to a and caste and education, Jesus conceived of all men as single Father and their consequent human qualities and characteristics. Far as we are from realizing this superb and unsurpassable conception, we are yet obliged to admit that there is no other power strong enough to deliver us from the hideous exigencies of war and from the dissolution of society by egotism and legalized theft than the sense of a common brotherhood. Without this inward change of thought and disposition which Jesus insisted on, the Kingdom of God in any real and valuable sense can never come. All our efforts to attain salvation through economic and industrial readjustments, without inward renewal and the spirit of Christ, are only shuffling and cutting the old pack we have played with so long, and making a new deal, with the certainty that if some hold good hands, others must hold bad. I think particularly of the ruin of the spiritual classes and also that at the present time nine European states are in the hands of Dictators.

"The cards are shuffled to and fro,
The games may vary somewhat so,
The dirty pack's the same we know,
Played with long thousand years ago.
Played with and lost with still by man.
Fate marked them ere the game began.
I think the only thing that's strange
Is our illusion as to change."

What we need today is something new, since every one who has eyes to see understands that the old is about worn out, and the new experiment, the greatest ever offered to man, is the faithful, practical application of the Religion of Jesus Christ. This opportunity will not be offered to us always. If we reject this, our next choice will be worse.

The world's greatest menace and horror, its moral evil, before which moralists stand aghast and over which Marcus Aurelius and Epictetus lifted their pure voices, like angels weeping over the damned, never disturbed the serenity of Jesus' soul, or put Him out of countenance. He had a natural liking and affection for those whom we politely call "sinners," and He found even in the lowest of them, some soul of goodness on which He could act. He taught, as His supreme lesson to man, a new reverence, reverence for that which is beneath us—"Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many." Not that those things we account evil are holy, admirable or even respectable in themselves, but that in healing the sick, converting the sinner, consoling the sorrowful, drying up some pools of this ocean of tears, man appears in his divinest light and most truly as the child of God; and, moreover, it is only by such selfless and devoted effort that the evil and sorrow of this world will ever be overcome.

So Jesus conceived of love. And if there be any to whom this great mystery of revelation and contact with the divine appears alluring, if there are any to whom this material world and this mundane life without a spiritual interpretation and meaning seem unreal, uninteresting and hopeless, if there are any who are disappointed in themselves and in their relations with other men, let me advise such to renew the sources of their being, and, even though old, to be born again, by making trial of this great mystery of Jesus Christ, and renewing their lives through love.

In Love we transcend this phenomenal, transitory world and come into contact with a higher and more vital form of reality. On this adamant axle the whole world revolves. The deepest and the greatest thing in love is that which, according to our material way of looking at things, does not exist at all. If you are tired of this finite world, there is an infinite world not far from you, to which you can escape. If people weary you and bore you, it is because you have never penetrated to the wonderful soul they so carefully conceal. What Shakespeare, Goethe and Balzac saw in men and women, really exists, but they saw only a little way in comparison with what Jesus Christ saw. If men or women wound you or offend you, forgive them and love them still. Hatred darkens our eyes and gives us nothing but sorrow. The only real harm in hatred is to the hater. If you would find life absorbingly interesting, use it in the service of your fellowmen and you will not find it too long. And when the end comes, and the last great revelation is made, perhaps we shall find that the old mythologists were right and that Death is but the hand which withdraws the veil from the face of Love, and admits us to the very presence of God.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love."

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE CREED.

Mr. Editor:

I wish to emphasize my unqualified approval of the letter of Mr. Berkeley Minor, of Charlottesville, appearing in your issue of May 24, 1924, entitled "The Interpretation of the Creed." Mr. Minor quotes that remarkable statement of Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, to the effect that "There is not a Bishop, priest or layman of this Church who interprets each article of the Creed as he interpreted it ten or twenty years ago." I thank Mr. Minor for writing such a letter.

Bishop Lawrence should speak for himself alone, and not assume to do so for others. On its face his statement is rash and utterly improbable. I for one thoroughly agree with Mr. Minor, and feel as he does. I am sure that ten thousand of laymen are with us on this subject, as well as hundreds of clergymen.

WILLIAM ALLMAND ROBERTSON.

Mr. Editor:

I saw the statement of Bishop Lawrence that no Bishop, priest or layman of the Church interprets the Creed now as he did ten or twenty years ago.

The Creed to me has ever grown stronger and is to me today, as it was sixty years ago. I am sorry the Bishop made such a statement.

Excerpts From a Recent Report of a Professor in One of Our Divinity Schools

One of the greatest stumbling blocks to the study of the New Testament in Greek is the existence of two such excellent "nonies" as the Authorized and Revised Versions. The average student leans much more heavily on these than on the original and cheerfully and, I may say, gladly yields homage to them rather than to the Greek of which they are a translations. When this undue deference is allowed and a Version however excellent is suffered to usurp the authority of the original, the reading—so-called—of the New Testament in Greek is of exceeding little value. Perhaps the tendency now seen in our Seminaries to reduce the study of the Greek Testament to "an irreducible minimum" and the permission granted by Canon to the Bishops on the advice of their Examining Chaplains to dispense Candidates for Orders from Greek altogether arise from the slovenly and unscholarly way in which the Greek Testament is often handled.

The accurate study of a language like Greek begets a taste for accuracy in other studies and makes for accuracy in thinking and accuracy in expression—things greatly to be desired in this our day and time.

It will be seen from this that my teaching has been confined to the study of the Scriptures only and I am inclined to magnify my office and to think that better preparation for the work of the ministry would be had if greater emphasis were laid on this study and less on collateral subjects. With a good knowledge of the Scriptures and of the Prayer Book as an interpretation and application of the Scriptures together with a fair knowledge of the history of the Church the student would be well furnished for the work whereunto he is sent. The drift, however, seems to be the other way and new subjects are from time to time added to the requirements for Holy Orders with the result that the lesser matters take up much of the student's time and the greater suffer in consequence. Man-made theologies come and go, but the Scriptures of God abide unto the end of the age—the one source of spiritual knowledge and truth.

Spiritual Illiteracy

"Spiritual illiteracy" is the charge brought against about sixty per cent of the youth of the country now in attendance in the public schools. According to an investigation conducted in Indiana by the "Institute on Social and Religious Surveys," there was an alarming poverty of ethical consciousness among the majority of the children. "Stupidity is more sinful than cheating" expresses the ethical standard of the pupils.

"Not only did a majority of the children think it was less sinful to cheat a railroad than to cheat a person and that 'if a storekeeper gives you too much money it is all right to keep it because he would probably keep it if you paid him too much,' but in actual practice sixty-four per cent of the children did actually keep the dime overpaid in a test that was 'framed'."

In commenting upon the survey, well might the Public Education and Child Welfare Association say:

"Nothing can be more essential in any scheme of education than development of character. Without character, the more complete one's education the greater the menace to society. We do not doubt the alarming poverty of moral standards among children, which is merely a reflection of the moral indifference pervading society itself. No one appreciates all of these problems and their bearings more keenly than do the school people themselves, and surely no one is looking more anxiously for the solution."

As religion in any definite and distinct way cannot be taught in the public schools, a course in ethics is advocated as the next best thing. The superintendent of the Philadelphia schools announces that such a course is already being given and with good results. In the absence of some kind of religious training, this surely is better than no ethical teaching at all. But it is far from reaching the real seat of the trouble. It is simply another effort to treat symptoms rather than the disease, as Prof. Dr. Fox, of Roanoke College, shows in his very trenchant and illuminating article on "Christian Social Therapy" in The Lutheran Church Review. What the children of our day need for the building up of character is the Christian religion. They need to be taught the fear of God, which is the beginning of wisdom, and the love of God in Christ, which is its completion. But where faith in God is lacking, and where the Christian motive is not asserting itself, your ethical teaching is as powerless to cure selfishness and sin as a porous plaster is to cure a disease that lurks in the heart or the blood.

What we fear most of all is that such ethical courses given in the schools will be considered by the public as the only thing that can be done to change this alarming situation. As things are, the one thing to be lamented is the absence of Christian training in the home. About half the Protestant (so-called) parents have shifted that responsibility upon the Sunday School, and very many of them are not particular about urging their children to be regular in their attendance even there. Perhaps after an epidemic of moral crookedness and perversity such as we are beginning to witness among the youth of the land, the public will awake to the realization that the teaching of religion is the outstanding need of the times.—The Lutheran.

The War Not the Main Cause of the World's Troubles

This is the contention of a clergyman, Dr. Phillips, who preached at an open air service in West Philadelphia on Sunday, June 1. He merely voiced the convictions of many who are in the habit of thinking deeper than the surface of events. The war was rather a result than a cause—the result of certain adverse forces which finally broke out into an eruption and let loose what had been more or less artificially repressed. There was something wrong with our civilization before the war broke out, and now we are beginning to discover what it is. The flood has broken the dam, and now the waters that have been let loose are making havoc far and wide. Dr. Phillips asserts that not one-hundredth of the economic and social chaos existing today is to be traced to the war. He goes further back and lays the blame at the door of our highly developed "mechanical civilization." There lies the egg out of which have been hatched most of our present troubles.

We quote a pregnant paragraph which expresses what he means: "The great characteristic of our age is pace, discovery, invention and machinery. The war came as a result of our pace-producing age and was not the cause of it. We little thought fifty years ago that the machinery we were making to release us, ultimately would enslave us. Today we are the slaves of the things we have invented." This chimes in with what a scientist recently told us. He said it seemed a pity that science had laid at our doors a rich profusion of good and truly wonderful things which we did not know how to use; that we were like spoiled children who were surrounded with luxuries which indulgent parents showered upon them until none of them could be appreciated. Well may Dr. Phillips say: "Our lack of restraint, and nothing else, is responsible for most of our trouble." "Where the people cast off restraint, there is no vision; today we have no vision."

In other words, idealism can no more flourish in a materialistic and mechanical soil and atmosphere than palm trees can grow in Iceland. Music is feeling the effects of the chill of our mechanical civilization. We now have pianolas, victrolas and similar devices to tickle men's ears, and the soul of music has ceased to make a sufficiently strong appeal to train up a race of masters in the art. Poetry and fiction are feeling the effects of the chill, and we must look back a half century and more to catch the inspiration of men who wrote for the centuries. Their works still live, while the books written today gain a brief popularity and then pass into the night of oblivion. Education has felt its chilling effects also. Our boys and girls, young men and women, are taught a mass of subjects superficially, mostly bearing on how to make a living rather than how to make a life, and are lacking in culture and too often in character. Naturally religion suffers, and while there is a certain kind of activity never before known, it is shot through with externalism, and the development of the inner spiritual life is far from being considered fundamental and essential.—The Lutheran.

A School of the Prophets

At the laying of the cornerstone of the new building of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School, on June 11, Bishop William Mercer Green said in part:

"We are making history as we gather today to lay the cornerstone of the new building for the DuBose School, rising Phoenix-like from the ashes of the old. Institutions, like men, are living forces to the extent to which they have within them the true spirit of life. This presence here today is the manifestation of that spirit. It has dwelt in the DuBose School from the beginning. It has guided it in its opening years. It has been heroically manifest in the trying days which have followed the disastrous fire. Leaders less strong than those who have guided the destinies of the School might have suffered moments of discouragement. This spirit will remain with us, please God, to the end. It is the spirit of faith, in the cause: conviction of its worth; enthusiastic loyalty; courage and unity in service, with undaunted confidence in Him with whom all things are possible.

"There is always romance in an adventure for God. Knighthood is perpetually in flower in His service. There has been romance in the conception, birth and short life of the DuBose School. Its leaders have moved to their tasks with the joyous courage of plumed knights.

"Four years ago the DuBose School became a reality. The conception is not without its forerunners and parallels. Schools for postulants have existed in the Dioceses of Arkansas and Kentucky, but without strength to carry on.

In England, Sweden, and Denmark, similar schools are in operation. But in fulness of scope, and in comprehensiveness of aim, the DuBose School is really unique. Its aims are the fruit of many years of thought and experience. Those whose hearts have yearned to see the plow making furrows in untilled fields and the seeds of the Kingdom planted in the waste places, have long felt the need of creating and training a ministry dedicated to the lofty service of the mission field and to that part of the field situated in the country sides. They have seen also an unused force in the Church that might be dedicated to this high purpose, a force of mature men, ready to offer themselves, in the fullness of a ripe experience and proved devotion, to the Sacred Ministry, but inhibited by the difficulties of seeking the ministry through the channels of the standard seminaries. Side by side with these has been seen another group, younger than the first, but inhibited by years from entering the seminaries through the channels of a standard college course. As they thus saw the field and the men, a large challenge has been presented to them, and they have dreamed of a school which might answer this challenge, a school which might at once train men for the field untilled and in doing so, coin into the currency of the Kingdom, the gold of unused forces."

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl M. Block, D. D.

WITH the next issue of the Southern Churchman the page dealing with Young People's Work will be discontinued for the summer. Everything conspires to make this advisable.

It is rather amazing and it is certainly unfortunate that any movement in the Church as vital as the establishment of Societies for the Young People finds so few correspondents. It is tremendously difficult to get individual or corporate reactions to suggestions as to methods and the upbuilding of morale.

We are entering upon the Summer Conference term of the year, and it has fine opportunities and grave responsibilities. The Summer Conferences are changing materially in their outlook, their curricula and their personnel. The young people are attending in greater numbers. In most schools courses are being given on the rationale of work among young people. Conferences should be held with clear-cut reports of success or failure, and both should be analyzed.

The General Convention is hardly more than a year off, and yet the National Church has only been able to observe and commend this remarkable movement. It will be a tragedy if some coherent and well-considered plan, leading to the development of a National consciousness is not available before the Convention meets. The outlines of this plan should be developed by the young people themselves and safeguarded by the counsel of those who have worked with them.

The adolescent today is different from the type we knew before the war. Old-fashioned conventions have disappeared and a new sensitiveness and irritation of restraint is very apparent. With this independence a desire for the exercise of initiative has come. "As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be" makes no appeal to our modern young people. They want to know the whys and the wherefores, and the traditional must justify itself if it is to be respected. There is no lack of idealism unless those who misunderstand youth offer in their leadership a lower ground of appeal. When the young people cause anxiety, it is most largely occasioned by their appealing their elders. Nothing is more futile than for one to attempt to dogmatize about the character of this national organization which must make its appeal to the youth of the Church and be expressive of the genius of our own communion. Where a counsellor has sympathy and understanding and is gifted with personality, modern youth is peculiarly susceptible to his or her influence.

Disappointment with the young people is frequently due to the fact that the more mature leaders of the Church have endeavored to compress their organization into a type which reflects their own preconceptions or even prejudices. Youth will always be a problem, for it always has been. Rudyard Kipling, in his Rectorial Address, remarks sentimentally that "the sole revenge that age can have upon youth is to preach at it." The Church of the present day cannot afford to take any such ground in dealing with her young people. There are far too many who have an abiding desire to serve Christ and His Church for them to fail under the condemnation deserved by that minority who represent the eccentricities and tragedies of our spendthrift age.

This summer, with God's help, we must endeavor to think things through, and our thinking must be unfettered from prejudices, predilections and the exercise of direct authority. It would be of great value to offer to each Summer Conference, where an appreciable number of young people are present, the responsibility of drawing up at least the skeleton of a national organization, outlining carefully the goal of the movement, the manner of its propagation, the organization necessary for its coherence and those objectives upon which the youth of this great Church can focus with profit and helpfulness.

When the General Convention meets, we must all be prepared to give up our insularity and our prejudices as regards everything from the name of the organization to the character of its National establishment, with the thought that in the last analysis the central emphasis is not upon method nor can any external scheme assure success.

The whole question of finance is tremendously vital and in this we have the warning of the Young People's Societies of our sister communions, in which anxiety has already been expressed as to the amount of "overhead" heretofore thought to have been necessary to the functioning of their national consciousness.

Many of the young people are eager to have a Young People's Department properly officered and intelligently financed by the National Council. We must be on our guard as regards "Specials." The morale of the Campaign for the Church's Mission must not be broken by using this new organization simply to do the extra things for which funds of the National Council are not available. If the lessons of the Nation-Wide Campaign and its subsequent development in the Church are to be heeded, we must seek the highest possible ground upon which to place the emphasis in this new organization.

We need more devoted, more consecrated Churchmen, and that is not simply obvious. We must have an organization which will grip the imagination of our young people and convince them that it is all worth while—that the Lord Christ has given a mission to His Church, and that this mission is a responsibility of every member, that it has been his since he was baptized and it will be his, for weal or for woe until "he is gathered to his Fathers." How can we lay this burden and confer this privilege upon all of the young people of the Church? There are formidable obstacles in the way. Organization selfishness with consequent split loyalty, is sufficiently impressive—to note only one of many of these obstacles. In all truth, we need the direction of God's Spirit, for we believe that the youth movement in the Church was originated by the Spirit of God, and its successful advance depends upon His continued direction. Let us therefore make this a subject of earnest prayer and intelligent study, so that the forming of a National Organization can be begun under the best possible auspices.

Unique Meeting at Christ Church, Greenville.

On Sunday night, May 25, the Y. P. S. L. of Christ Church, St. James' and St. Andrew's, Greenville, held a joint meeting in the Parish House of Christ Church. This being "Reconstruction Sunday," the Program Committee of the League from Christ Church decided that Japan must be the subject, and the result was a playlet, entitled "The Gift," written by Miss Mildred Cook, Chairman of the Program Committee.

This playlet was in two short acts. The first scene opened in Bishop McKim's office in Tokyo. He is seated at his desk writing, when in walks Araki San, nurse of St. Luke's Hospital. She tells the Bishop how distressed she is at having to turn away so many people, for lack of room and equipment in the temporary hospital, whereupon the Bishop tells her that she must not worry, for he feels sure that after Sunday, when the campaign is begun in America, they will have all the funds with which to go ahead with their reconstruction program.

Then in comes the Rev. Mr. Tucker, who tells the Bishop of the fine results he is having in his work, of the boys who have come into the Mission, asking to be confirmed, and of how much more he could do if he had a Parish House and a church. To him also the Bishop says that he is sure the American Church will not fail them. God has been so good to America, he says, that the Americans will be good to Japan.

At this point Dr. Teusler arrives with a little Japanese girl and her baby, who have been turned away from St. Luke's and who insists on seeing Bishop McKim. Her appeal to the Bishop to take care of her baby, and her excitement when she sees the nurse who turned her away, were very fine. The Bishop tells her to bring in her baby and he will see that it is taken care of. The scene ends with an invitation from the Bishop for them all to come to his office the next night, Sunday, to hear over the radio the news from the Missions House, of the result of the canvass.

The second scene finds them all again in the Bishop's office and Lotus Blossom, the Japanese girl, tells the Bishop how much better her baby is, how good the nurse was, and that she wants to know all about Jesus and become a Christian.

Mr. Tucker asks the time, and finds that it is time to tune in on the radio, and finally with great excitement he announces that he has America, and they all crowd around him, tense and anxious. When he tells them that the American Church has oversubscribed the $3,000,000, and that they can go ahead with their work, little Lotus Blossom falls upon her knees, and the others rise and with great reverence and joy sing the Doxology.

This program was splendidly carried out, with appropriate hymns and Scripture, prayers for Japan and the success of the Campaign. All the young people were in costume. The cast was as follows: The Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., James Rutledge; the Rev. Mr. Tucker, American Missionary, John Turner; Dr. Rudolph Teusler, Archie Sterling; Araki San, Minna Turpin; Lotus Blossom, Mildred Cook.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

CONTRACTION OF THE WORLD.

"London, June 14.—Using for the first time telephonically the radio beam system, through which the wireless waves are thrown in a particular direction, William Marconi, inventor of the wireless, is reported to have spoken from the Poldhu Station in Cornwall, to Buenos Aires.

"The accounts state also that Dr. Thomas Le Breton, Argentine Minister of Agriculture, who is visiting in England, spoke to War Minister Justo, and that subsequent cable messages from Buenos Aires said Dr. Le Breton's voice was heard there."

The foregoing is from the current issue of the Sunday New York Times, which is about as reliable as any of our daily papers, therefore we have every reason to suppose that Messrs. Marconi and Le Breton did talk through the air from Cornwall, England, to Buenos Aires.

The same paper gives an account of the air mail service about to be established between San Francisco and New York whereby letters will be carried from the one place to the other in thirty-two hours, and by means of illuminating stations along the route these flying postmen will travel as readily at night as in the day-time.

These two items bring sharply to our attention the contracting conditions of the world.

In the face of these things how is it possible for sensible and up-to-date writers to contend that it is better for us to stay out of European entanglements, when we are sitting on Europe's front steps, and she is crawling up our back stairway.

The World Court was more or less lost this year in the great mass of inefficiencies of the recent congress, but it is to be hoped that the Federation of Churches will stay on the job, and keep this matter continually before the minds of Christian people, so that when it comes up in the future, as it surely will sooner or later, a great mass of public opinion can be speedily mobilized through the Churches so as to put necessary pressure behind it to make it become effective.

Every day such incidents as the two to which we here call attention are making it more and more evident that we can not stay out of European entanglements, no matter how much we might like to do so.

LOOK BACK AND TAKE HOPE.

Sometimes it is necessary for us to look back to see how forward we have come.

A paper of wide circulation in a leading Southern city runs a column of news items printed "fifty years ago," and another under the heading "Twenty-five Years Ago." From the latter we quote the following item:

"The efforts being made by employees in stores to have their employers close at seven o'clock is meeting with success. It was announced last night that every clothing and men's furnishing establishment on Broad Street save one had agreed to close at seven o'clock, Saturdays excepted. . . . The salesmen . . . are hopeful of eventually having all business houses closed at seven o'clock."

The closing hour of such stores as those referred to above now close at five o'clock in the summer time as a matter of course, and there is no objection from either patrons or employers.

This fact is merely indicative of the strides that have been made all along the line for the benefit of people who have to work for a living.

It is only by means of such items as these, clipped from the twenty-five years ago columns that we fully realize how rapidly the world is moving, and conditions are constantly being made easier, and more equitable for all classes. In spite of these evidences of improvement, there are those who love to mope and discourse on the rapidity with which the world is growing worse. How is it possible?

PROGRESS ON BOTH SIDES OF THE WORLD.

It is nearly twenty centuries since Our Saviour said, "Let the little ones come unto Me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," but in that short sentence He blazed the way for a movement that is constantly acquiring new and greater momentum.

It is significant that the same month that marked the adoption by the Senate and House of Representatives of a resolution that provides for Child Labor Legislation by the Federal Congress should also bring to us the following news item from the opposite side of the world:

Juvenile Offenders in India.

The government of Bombay has published its plan for the protection of children and young persons in the form of a bill to be introduced in the Bombay Legislative Council. This bill would create separate courts for children's cases and abolish hanging and transportation as punishment for youthful offenders. It would prevent the sending to prison of any children except those adjudged by the court to be too unruly to benefit by admission to a reformatory school; would introduce a system of probation and also establish industrial schools teaching trades to offenders under sixteen.

Those who are looking forward to the day when children can no longer be stunted and weakened physically and mentally in coal mines and factories must not think that the final victory is won now that the resolution providing that the Federal Government shall have authority in this field. This matter will have to be ratified by three-fourths of the states and when constitutional legislation is finally passed it will not be a simple matter to enforce it.

Progress is being made, but the final elimination of children in industry is not yet accomplished.

LADIES GOING TO NEW YORK TAKE NOTICE.

The following notice of the headquarters and activities of the Church League Club may seem a trifle local, but New York City is so much of a mecca for travelers from all parts of the country that we feel that this item may be useful to some of our readers, and so we quote as follows:

"Twenty States in the Union have already enrolled members in the Church League Club, a club organized two years ago for the purpose of providing a New York centre where visiting Churchwomen may entertain their friends and find a temporary home. Already six hundred and fifty women have joined the organization, which maintains quarters at Allerton House, Lexington Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, many of them women belonging to the business and professional world as well as women closely associated with religious work. The club is sponsored by the Protestant Episcopal Church, but is open to all Churchwomen.

"During the past two winters frequent luncheons, followed by talks on civic and other subjects, have brought into closer touch returned missionaries and others who, through foreign philanthropic activities have gotten out of touch with affairs at home. The club has, too, been frequently used for entertaining distinguished visitors—the Very Rev. Dean of Lincoln Cathedral, England, was a guest last winter as well as the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

"The club has seventeen bedrooms under lease from Allerton House available for its members, and can take care of non-members for a week or until they find other quarters. The large sun parlor on the seventeenth floor provides a pleasant place to lounge and rest and the Wednesday afternoon teas have attracted many friends of the club.

"It was during the winter of 1921 that a series of meetings at the house on East Thirty-fourth Street formerly occupied by F. Hopkinson Smith resulted in plans for a permanent organization. The house at 9 Park Avenue

The Great Commission

MISSIONARIES' CONFERENCE AT CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE.

There has been a great sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees at Church Missions House. Four of the newly appointed missionaries and fifteen of the missionaries now on furlough have been meeting together, with a half dozen officers of the national staff, on June 11-13, for three days of conference and discussion which, with a world-wide sweeping view of the Church abroad, a concise presentment of the organization behind the missionary, and a clear penetrating statement, from one country after another, of the work of the Church, in terms of exalted spiritual ideals, none the less practical, has brought to every one who attended a keener eagerness to serve in every possible way.

There are two things one most wants to pass on to others. The first is a sense of pride in our missionaries. They are not only faithful and hard-working, they are really splendid people. They are not dabbling in little affairs here and there. They are seeing the Church's work in its largest terms, meeting and grappling with fundamental moral and spiritual problems in all their bearing on racial and national life in whole countries and continents. Every Churchman ought to feel a personal pride in these, his representatives.

The second impression to be shared is that of the essential oneness and wholeness of the Church's mission, whether it be carried on from the treasurer's office or the home parish or a hospital ward in the Orient or a thatched hut in Africa. The oneness of the Church's work is not a mere convenient theory. It is a living truth which one comes to appreciate and value more and more as he studies the whole field.

The plan on which the three days' sessions were based is one to be commended for the use of parishes and dioceses in which similar inspiring and informing gatherings could be held even without the unusual personnel of thirty missionaries. The chief points of consideration were four commands of Our Lord—Look, Pray, Give, Go. Before and after the four discussions of these commands were talks on the different fields of work.

Home from Liberia on his first furlough, was the Rev. E. L. Haines. Many people have heard him talk and others will be eager to. He has the unfailing advantage of first-hand experience to tell about, and in Liberia the details seen by one thoughtful observer reflect the tremendous evils present and the great promise of future good for whole tribes and races. Africa is not "dark" in itself. The darkness over that continent is the shadow cast by slavery and polygamy, evils built into the very economic fabric of African life, and by devil worship and ignorance, and by the aggressive advance of the Mohammedans. None of these evils can finally withstand the progress of the Church, but the process of freeing the Africans from their dominion is more difficult than we can realize. The native gentleness of the African tribes, their honesty where they are uncorrupted by the baser elements of civilization, their eager cordial welcome of the white man, are things to build on.

One of the familiar names among our workers in China is that of the Rev. E. L. Souder, of Wuchang. He talked of a fourth command, "Go ye therefore." It applies, of course not only to missionaries, but to every baptized person. The inactive un-missionary Churchman needs to hear and interpret this command. Furthermore, our "going" to other lands, where there are ancient races and ancient civilizations and different customs, must not be with a purpose of destruction and supplanting. The Church goes to fulfil, and to discover and appropriate new gifts and graces from all nations.

This idea was emphasized by the Rev. Walworth Tyng, of Changsha. The Chinese have some of the very virtues we most lack. Against our pugnacity and individualism are their humility, their ideal of meekness, and the solidity of their long, long racial life, holding together in spite of the turbulent conflict of national affairs. The Christians, now of the second and third generations, are beginning to make the Church felt as a stabilizing environment, and, whether they go into education, commerce or government, are constantly showing themselves the best of their kind.

One idea that ran through the entire conference should be brought home to every man and woman and child of the Church. It is the value of constant faithful prayer, and the missionaries' great desire for it. One after another mentioned achievements and developments beyond the power and even the intention of the missionary, which could only be accounted for by the prayer of the people at home.

PIGS AND PIRATES.

A hospital for men, situated in the heart of a poor and crowded district, is St. Luke's, Shanghai. It has one hundred and sixty beds, a training school with fifty to sixty Chinese boys in training, eight Chinese internes, in addition to the small foreign staff. The clinic, to which women and children as well as men come, takes care of 70,000 or more in a year, sometimes four hundred in an afternoon. Here as in the hospital cases may be seen every day such as might appear only once or twice a year in America.

Several streets lead to St. Luke's and the hospital is surrounded by them, so there is an abundance of light and air. There is also plenty of noise. Trains screech around the corner day and night; flocks of sheep are driven by, bleating in terror; wedding processions and funerals pass, wailing and sobbing and howling; pigs strapped to wheelbarrows squeal in chorus with the ungreased axles, drunken sailors shriek and beat and sing to the fast-barred iron gate through the long summer nights, and the rickshaw coolies howl.

In a little chapel in the hospital morning prayers are said daily, a service written specially for St. Luke's staff.

There are six wards, two medical, three surgical and one for eye troubles. A ward just opposite the chapel is for prisoners, street beggars, pirates and other roughish customers. The windows are barred and there is always an officer on guard; otherwise anything from gambling to murder might happen to disturb the blissful peace of the hospital.

Dispensary and laboratory are combined in one small inadequate building which is occasionally so full of people one can scarcely turn around. A small room is to be built which will relieve things to some extent. Here Dr. Koo examines postoffice employees, who are sent to all parts of China. Here Dr. Tyau examines employees of factories and companies which contract with the hospital for the care of their patients. Street accident cases are also received. An emergency operating room is almost constantly busy.

The hospital pays its own running expenses, either through fees or gifts of Chinese and foreign residents of Shanghai. The General Church makes appropriation only for the salaries of the foreign staff.

JAPAN RECONSTRUCTION FUND.

At a meeting of the Japan Reconstruction Fund Committee, held in the Church Missions House on Thursday, June 19, 1924, the following statement was adopted:

Acting under instructions of the National Council, this Committee presented to the people of the Church the needs of the Church in Japan, due to the earthquake and fire of last September. The schedule of reconstruction required for its completion the sum of $2,400,000, in addition to the sum already in hand toward the cost of St. Luke's International Hospital and the cost of new land, which is to be provided through the use of property now owned in Tokyo.

The Committee determined upon a plan of campaign having three distinct features, the first being the solicitation of the people of larger means by direct representatives of the Committee, the second being a selective canvass in each parish by a parish committee of all able to give or pledge in amounts of $10 and upward, and the third being the general offering on May 25.

From reports so far received from dioceses and parishes the Committee estimates that there has been given and pledged to date something less than $700,000.

In several important parts of the Church the presentation of the Japan appeal has been delayed until the autumn.

The Committee would again emphasize the vital character of this work, in order that the fruits of sixty years of intensive effort may be realized. Practically the entire equipment of the Church in Tokyo and vicinity has been destroyed. This must be replaced in order that the Church's work shall not be permanently crippled in the face of unequalled opportunity for effective service.

The Committee proposes to go right on with its work until its duty has been fully discharged and will keep the Church informed.

With the funds now in hand or assured by pledges, it will be possible to proceed with some of the most immediate needs.

The Committee desires to express its deep appreciation to those who have given and to those who have labored earnestly for this great cause.

For the Committee,

WM. COOPER PROCTOR,

Chairman.

Lay Cornerstone of the New DuBose School.

The cornerstone of the new building of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School was laid on June 11, 1924. Bishop Gailor presided over the simple but impressive ceremony, assisted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Bratton, Bishop of Mississippi, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Carson, Bishop of Haiti.

The procession, made up of the student body, the visiting clergy, and the faculty of the school, marched from the chapel to the site of the new building, to the singing of the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation." The Rev. Dr. Mercer P. Logan, Dean of the School, was preceded by the young son of Dr. Wm. Haskell DuBose of Sewanee (and the grandson of the late Dr. Wm. Porcher DuBose), who carried the articles and the box for these, to be later placed in the cornerstone.

After the reading of the Proper Psalms and prayers, the Dean placed the articles in the cornerstone, announcing the name of each article as it was packed into the box. Then the presiding bishop again led in prayer. When the singing of the hymn, "Crown Him With Many Crowns," was finished, addresses were delivered by the Rev. Dr. Wm. Mercer Green, Bishop Coadjutor of Mississippi, Archdeacon Claiborne, Field Secretary of the School, and the Hon. W. A. Sadd, President of the Board of Trustees.

The service was closed by prayers led by the Bishop of Haiti, the pronouncing of the benediction, and then the singing by the assembled company, of the hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

After the ceremony, many of the visitors lingered about the cornerstone, which was quarried out of the rock of the mountainside by a mountain stone cutter, and sculptured by a mountain stone mason. Thus it represented in the labor involved the simple ideals for which DuBose School was founded. Its design bears the inscription, "The Field is the World," beneath which is the Cross, surrounded by the circle of Eternity. Thus even in its design, the cornerstone stands for the high mission of world service and sacrifice for which DuBose School was organized.

Colored Leader On Good Will Program.

"The movement for the promotion of good will, mutual confidence and co-operation between the dominant races in the South is regarded by many as the most significant of its kind since the Emancipation," said Bishop R. E. Jones, of New Orleans, eminent colored leader, in his report to the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in session in Springfield, Mass. Expressing pleasure in the opportunity to cooperate in this movement, Bishop Jones gave the following survey of its spirit and work:

"We have found in the South a group of white men and women who are sincere and courageous in their desire for justice, equity and peace for all men. The movement began as one of our after-the-war necessities. At first faith was small, vision dim, hope uncertain, but the work grew until now out of one thousand counties in the South, eight hundred or more are duly organized with joint committees representing both races. There is a central office at Atlanta with Dr. W. W. Alexander, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as director. Most of the States have full time Interracial secretaries. Some of the States have two secretaries, one white and one colored.

"The organization of the Woman's Department of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation has brought to light fine heroism on the part of the women. These women have added strength, dignity and confidence to the commission. There has been opposition in some quarters, misgivings in others, lack of interest in others, but the movement still goes forward with confidence, intelligence, equity and the leadership of Jesus Christ. This ideal of promoting a better understanding on the basis of cooperation and a more adequate appraisal of human values will strengthen our National Government and its reaction will be felt throughout the world and redound to the glory of God and the advancement of His Kingdom.

"I do not know a better summing up of this movement than was put in a little verse which appeared not long ago in a South African magazine:

"If I knew you and you knew me,
If both of us could clearly see
And, with an inner sight, divine
The meaning of your heart and mine;
I am sure that we would differ less
And clasp our hands in friendliness;
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree
If I knew you and you knew me."

Commencement Exercises, Bishop Payne Divinity School.

The commencement exercises of the fifty-fifth session of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va., were held in Emmanuel Chapel, June 8-11.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached by the Rev. E. H. Hamilton, B. D., of Hampton, Va., Sunday afternoon, June 8. The meeting of the Alumni Association was held Tuesday evening, the special speakers being the Rev. J. E. Culmer, B. D., of Tampa, Florida, and the Rev. J. C. Wagner, M. A., a member of the faculty. At the business meeting of the Association Wednesday morning, the Rev. J. L. Taylor, D. D., of Richmond, Va., made an address on Social Service. The Board of Trustees and the faculty recognize the good work that the Alumni Association is doing for the School by upholding high mental and moral standards and by raising among themselves funds for scholarships.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held in Whittle Hall Wednesday at noon, Bishop Tucker presiding. Full and detailed reports were made by the Dean and other professors and by the treasurer. The executive committee was instructed to borrow money for necessary repairs to the buildings. The resignation of the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., was regretfully accepted and the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, was elected a member of the Board. Suitable resolutions were adopted with regard to the Rev. E. L. Goodwin, D. D., and Mr. S. W. Travers, two most faithful members of the Board who departed this life since its last meeting.

The commencement exercises proper were held Wednesday evening. After a short devotional service the graduation essay was read by Mr. Aston Hamilton, of the Diocese of Virginia, and the address was made by the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, of Petersburg. The Dean announced that the Board of Trustees had conferred the degree of Bachelor of Divinity upon the Rev. A. F. Nightengale, of Ancon, Canal Zone, who graduated in 1915. Bishop Tucker made a short address, emphasizing especially the thoroughness of the instruction given in the School and the high standard that is required in order to receive its full diploma. He then presented the full diploma of the School to Mr. Aston Hamilton, of the Diocese of Virginia.

The session just closed has been most satisfactory. The students did their work faithfully and well. The number of students enrolled was fourteen, seven of whom entered this session. The dioceses represented were: East Carolina, Georgia, Los Angeles, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Southern Virginia, Texas, Upper South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Canal Zone. This general diocesan representation and the fact that it has been adopted by the American Church Institute for Negroes give this School the distinction of being the "General Theological Seminary" of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. It is the only School of its kind in the Church, and because of this distinction and because of the fact that it has sent more than one hundred men into the ministry, it pleads for the sympathy and interest and a more generous financial support from all Churchmen who are interested in the Church's work among our colored brethren.

Regulations Pertaining to Chaplains.

No group of men ever enjoyed a greater compliment than that which has been paid to chaplains of the Army of the United States by those who have been in authority in the War Department since the first chaplain was appointed in 1789. That compliment is expressed in the generous attitude of the Department always shown in the matter of regulations for religious work. The greatest possible freedom for initiative has been allowed. Only a dozen paragraphs have been employed to define the status, duties and responsibilities of chaplains and their relations to officers and men.

During the past week, under authorization of the Secretary of War, a codification of the regulations pertaining to chaplains has been published. It is a pamphlet, AR 60-5, which again indicates the earnest desire and intention to provide as adequately as may be possible for the moral and religious life of the military personnel, at home and abroad under all circumstances.

Salient features of the new regulations are the freeing of chaplains from many burdensome extra-professional duties which at times have been assigned to them. They are no longer available for such services as post exchange officers or as counsel for the defense in courts-martial. The chaplain is given a definite place on the staff of the commanding officer, upon whom rests the ultimate responsibility for matters of a religious and moral nature within a command as completely as does the responsibility for strictly military matters.

Authority is given for the enlistment of the active aid of civilian assistants, both lay and clerical, and provision is made for the use of certain non-appropriated local funds to employ supply clergymen when chaplains are not available.

Chaplains are directed to, "Serve as friends, counsellors and guides, without discrimination, to all members of the command to which they are assigned, regardless of creed or sect." Their duties, have been broadly defined as being "closely analogous to those performed by clergymen in civilian life, modified only by the peculiar conditions attaching to military life and especially by the necessity that each chaplain shall, so far as practicable, serve the moral and religious needs of the entire personnel of the command to which he is assigned, either through his own personal services or through the cooperative efforts of others."

Transport chaplains are to accompany all large contingents of troops moving to or from duty outside the continental limits of the United States.

An orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military service is enjoined. Military duty and labor on Sunday are reduced to the measure of strict necessity and such activities as may be held on Sunday are so scheduled as not to interfere with attendance upon public services of worship.

Chief of Chaplains.

Annual Commencement of Berkeley Divinity School.

Bishop Lines, who graduated fifty years ago at the Berkeley Divinity School at Middletown, Conn., was the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the school on Tuesday, June 3. He deplored the present tendency to controversy in the Church, as unworthy of the greatness of Christianity. "Labels," he said, quoting Dean Inge, "are often nothing but libels. Fundamentalists and Modernists are objectionable words only when used as terms of reproach. Of course, we are all fundamentalists and modernists if we be allowed to define those words in our own way."

He rejoiced that Dean Ladd was attempting to correlate the ancient fundamentals of the faith with the changing demands of the modern world.

The Rev. Theodore Sedgwick, D. D., of the Class of '90, who acted as toastmaster, referred to the great success of the School during the past few years under the able administration of Dean Ladd. He announced that the Berkeley Associates, a group of interested friends and supporters of the School in New York City and elsewhere, had in the last three years raised over sixty thousand dollars for the institution. He said that the creation of this fine body of allies was due to the Dean and his ability to inspire confidence in himself and in his vision for the future of theological education.

Burton Mansfield, of New Haven, a trustee of the School and a member of the National Council of the Church, said that in the last twelve months Berkeley had done a great service to the Church, in bringing to America a preacher of such power and note as the Rev. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, rector of St. Edmond's Parish, London, and Chaplain to the King, whose stirring appeal for a truer Christian social order was listened to so eagerly by many thousands in the east and middle west last winter.

Dean Ladd read a letter announcing that Mrs. F. W. Keasby, of Morristown, N. J., had just given the School the sum of twelve thousand dollars to found the William H. Vibbert Scholarship in memory of her father. Dr. Vibbert was the brilliant and much loved professor of Hebrew in the School from 1862 to 1873, and at the time of his death was Vicar emeritus of Trinity Chapel, New York. Mrs. Keasby is a Berkeley Associate. She has maintained a yearly scholarship for several years past, besides making other gifts to the School.

At the alumni service Tuesday afternoon the preacher was the Rev. Gilbert E. Pember, B. D., of the Class of '02, rector of St. Michael's Church, Germantown, Philadelphia. His subject was the "Prophetic Office of the Church." He pleaded for the greater recognition of the "Sacrament of preaching." He said that the prophet had always prepared the way for the priest. The Divinity School as the "School of the Prophets" should be first in the interest and the first care upon the heart of the Church today.

At the graduation exercises on the next morning, honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity were conferred upon the Rev. Thomas Sparks Cline, B. D., of the Class of '05, recently elected professor of Pastoral Theology at the General Theological Seminary, New York City, and the Rev. Edward Huntington Coley, D. D., of the Class of '87, Suffragan Bishop-elect of the Diocese of Central New York.

Brief addresses were made by the members of the graduating class and certificates of graduation were conferred upon them by the Rt. Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, D. D., President of the Board of Trustees.

The graduation address was given by the Rev. R. B. Ogilby, D. D., President of Trinity College, Hartford. He spoke on the "Technique of Prophecy."

Tornado Sweeps South Dakota.

Bishop Burleson sent the following telegram to the Department of Missions from Sioux Falls June 17:

"Disastrous tornado swept over state Saturday night. Three chapels on Crow Creek Reservation destroyed. Others badly damaged. Chief church on Lower Brule demolished. Present known destruction probably fifteen thousand. No doubt there is much more not yet reported. Insurance about one-third of loss."

Religious Conference at Tappahannock.

The second annual conference for Church Workers was held under the auspices of the Rappahannock Convocation, at St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock, June 9-13. There were one hundred and fifty-five registrations and much interest was shown in the conferences and subjects for consideration. Sunday-school Conferences were held; the younger grades by Miss Sallie Deane, of Richmond; older grades and "Illustrating the Sunday-school Lesson," by the Rev. Dr. K. J. Hammond, of Culpeper. Conferences were also held for the Woman's Auxiliary leaders by Miss Louisa T. Davis, President of the Virginia Branch.

A Mission Study Class for leaders was conducted by Mrs. C. Jacqueline Smith, the new book for the year, "China's Real Revolution," by Paul Hutchinson, being used. Lectures were given by Miss Deane, on "Diocesan Missions," and Dr. Mary E. Brydon, of the State Board of Health, on "Training the Child for Life." Conferences were also arranged for the girls under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Story, of New Jersey, Vice-President of the Girls' Friendly Society, and Dr. Mary E. Brydon. Conferences for Junior Leaders were held under the direction of Mrs. Charles E. Davidson, of Richmond.

A Men's Conference was held on Thursday, June 12, with thirty men present, clergymen and laymen. Special addresses were made by Messrs. W. R. Stansbury, J. Herbert Mercer and R. Carter Beverley, of Richmond. Much interest was shown and definite steps were taken towards the formation of a laymen's organization in the Rappahannock Convocation, for the purpose of obtaining more information on the work of the Church.

The Conference was opened on Monday night, June 9, with a service in St. John's Church, the Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., making the opening address. A beautiful pageant, under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Story, was held on the campus, near the bank of the Rappahannock River, on Thursday evening. The arrangements for the Conference were made by a committee of the Convocation, of which the Rev. Herbert S. Osborn, of Tappahannock, was Chairman.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Executive Board Reorganized.

Following the rule provided in the Canons, four members of the Executive Board—two clergymen and two laymen—went out of office at the time of the Annual Council in May, and four new members were elected to serve for a period of three years: these being, the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of Lynchburg; the Rev. David H. Lewis, of Salem; Mr. John A. Muse, of Bristol, and Mr. Kennon C. Whittle, of Martinsville. The first meeting of the Executive Board after the Council was held on Friday, June 20, and the several departments of the Board were reorganized as follows: Field Department, Mr. W. D. Tyler, Chairman, Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, the Rev. Carleton Barnwell; Department of Finance, Mr. C. Edwin Michael, chairman, Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, Mr. John A. Muse, the Rev. J. M. Robeson, D. D., the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr.; Department of Religious Education, the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., chairman, the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, Mr. Mayo C. Brown, Mr. Kennon C. Whittle; Department of Christian Social Service, the Rev. J. M. Robeson, D. D., chairman the Rev. David H. Lewis, Mr. W. C. Rierison, Mr. John A. Muse; Department of Publicity, the Rev. G. Otis Meade, chairman, the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, Mr. Thomas A. Scott.

Bishop Jett announced that the Rev. A. C. Tebeau entered upon his work as rector of Emmanuel Church, Bristol, on June 15; that the Rev. F. E. Warren will take charge of the churches at Buena Vista, Glasgow and Natural Bridge Station about July 15; that the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, deacon, will take charge of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, July 1; that the Rev. Theodore H. Evans, deacon, has charge of St. John's Church, Waynesboro, during the summer; that the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, recently ordained priest, has accepted the post of assistant rector of St. John's Church, Roanoke, effective September 15 next, and that the Rev. R. H. Baker, also recently ordained, has accepted the position as chaplain and member of the faculty of the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, and will begin his duties there in September. Thus it is seen that a number of vacancies in important places are now being filled, and the Diocese has reason for the greatest satisfaction on this account.

Wythe County Missions.

Bishop Jett made his annual visitation to the Wythe County Missions, Mrs. William Wilkins, Missionary, on Sunday, June 15. He officiated at Byllesby (Carroll County), in the morning and was at St. Andrew's, Ivanhoe, in the evening. In the afternoon he was greeted by a fine congregation at St. Barnabas' Community House, Piney. The service began with the dedication and setting apart of an Altar Cross, a Flagon, a chalice and baptismal shell. All of which are memorials and the gifts of friends of the Mission who live in Philadelphia. After the administration of Holy Baptism to three children and the Bishop's sermon, the Rev. D. L. Gwathmey presented, for Mrs. Wilkins, three persons, to receive the laying on of hands. Mrs. Wilkins has been serving the Church very earnestly in this interesting field.

Memorial Service for Mrs. George C. Thomas.

On June 22 at the Sunday morning service at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, there was held a memorial service for Mrs. George C. Thomas, who passed into the life eternal on June 3.

The Rev. George H. Toop, rector of the parish, preached the sermon, which dwelt especially upon the loyal faith, the deep sense of stewardship, the fresh and intense interest in the work and people of the parish evidenced by Mrs. Thomas.

News Notes of Interest.

The twenty-third annual reunion of the Descendants of Early Worshipers of St. James' Church (Perkiomen), Evansburg, was held Saturday, June 7. The exercises consisted of Morning Prayer at eleven o'clock with a sermon by the Rev. William Taylor, rector of Christ (Old Swedes' Church), Upper Merion. Martin G. Brumbaugh, former Governor of Pennsylvania, was the orator at the meeting in the afternoon.

During the absence of Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, who will not return until the middle of September, the pulpit of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, will be filled by Rev. Percy R. Stockman, Superintendent of the Seamen's Church Institute, who will alternate with the assistant, the Rev. John R. Huggins, in conducting the services at Holy Trinity during the summer.

Dr. and Mrs. Tomkins are now in Glasgow, Scotland, where they are attending the World's Sunday-school Convention.

George H. Streaker, Superintendent of the Sunday School of St. Stephen's Church, the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector, and leader of the "Drop-In" Bible Class and Sunday evening meeting at the Central Y. M. C. A., has gone as a delegate to the World's Sunday-school Convention at Glasgow, Scotland. St. Stephen's Church and the Y. M. C. A. joined in sending him.

A campaign to raise $15,000 to complete the parish building of St. Barnabas' Church, Germantown, in memory of the Rev. Samuel Upjohn, D. D., was inaugurated Sunday, June 15, by the rector, the Rev. E. Sydnor Thomas. He referred to Dr. Upjohn as the "Father of St. Barnabas' Mission," for it was he who saw the possibility of starting an Episcopal Church for Negroes in Germantown.

The members of Dr. Upjohn's family, approving the plan, sent a letter to Mr. Thomas expressing gratification at the suggestion.

Following extensive repairs, repainting, redecoration and the installation of a new lighting system, St. Andrew's Church, West Philadelphia, of which the Rev. W. J. Cox is rector, was reopened Sunday, June 15, and the regular services are being held.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

Nearly every pledge over-subscribed and every pledge paid, was reported by the treasurer at the thirty-second annual meeting of the Georgia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, which met at the same time as the Diocesan Convention in Savannah, May 4-6. Preceding the opening business session the entire delegation attended the opening of the Diocesan Convention, the celebration of the Holy Communion, and heard the Bishop's annual address. The United Thank Offering Custodian reported in hand a total of $1,910.61, and the Secretary of Boxes reported that twenty-five boxes to the value of $751.08 had been sent during the year.

Two speakers who had been invited to address the Diocesan Convention, also spoke at the Auxiliary session, the Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, of Liberia, who spoke on the William Hoke Ramsaur Memorial, and the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., of Wilmington, N. C., whose subject was, "Woman's Work in the Five Fields of Service." Mrs. W. N. Pratt, of Savannah, was elected president, and the delegates elected to the meeting during the Provincial Synod, to be held in Wilmington, N. C., October 21-23 are: Mrs. Pratt Mrs. F. F. Reese, of Savannah, Mrs. Jackson H. Harris, of Augusta, and Mrs. J. W. Quincy, of Douglas; alternates, Mrs. Arthur Hazard, of Augusta, Mrs. J. P. Stewart, of Waycross, and Mrs. Thomas Purse, of Savannah. Immediately following the reading of Bishop Lloyd's words in the Auxiliary Haudbook, a member rose and announced that she wished to subscribe $50 for a scholarship to the Ramsaur Memorial as a thank offering for direct answer to prayer.

COLORADO.

Rt. Rev. I. P. Johnson, D. D., Bishop.
Rev. Fred Ingley, Coadjutor-elect.

A Notable Ordination.

On Tuesday, in Whitsun-Week at St. Mark's Church, Denver, Colorado, the Rev. Homer Earl Grace was ordained to the Diaconate in the Episcopal Church by the Rt. Rev. Fred Ingley, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese. The candidate was presented by the Rev. James H. Cloud, D. D., of St. Louis, Missouri, who preached the Ordination Sermon; the Rev. A. G. Harrison, of St. Luke's, Montclair, read the Epistle, and Mr. J. W. Hudston, Lay Secretary of the Standing Committee, read the Litany.

The occasion was a notable one, since the Rev. Mr. Grace, a deaf mute, will minister to the "silent people" of the Diocese, amongst whom a Mission has been in progress for some time under the supervision of Dr. Cloud, the ordination of Mr. Grace to the "voiceless ministry" being a direct result of that work.

Bishop Ingley read a brief preliminary exhortation of counsel and encouragement to a congregation of some fifty members of the Mission, which was translated to them simultaneously in the sign language by Dr. Cloud, the same method being followed in the ordination sermon and throughout the service, which was deeply impressive, despite the difficulty of the dual rendition.

In an interesting reference to the work of the Episcopal Church amongst deaf mutes, Dr. Cloud said, in part:

"It is a matter of no small gratification that among all the many religious organizations the Episcopal Church was foremost in developing the work among the deaf and for a number of years was alone in promoting this work."

As a distinctive work it had its beginning seventy-five years ago when the Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, son of the founder of the education of the deaf in America, began a work in New York which grew into the present Church Mission to the Deaf in that Diocese and St. Ann's Church for the Deaf in that city.

At the present time New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, each have a church and parish house for the exclusive use of the deaf with a resident clergyman in charge.

"In many of the larger cities there are active missions for the deaf under the care of general missionaries, as is the case here in Denver, and housed in parish churches, as we are here at St. Mark's. The first deaf man to be admitted to the sacred ministry was the Rev. Henry Winter Syle, of blessed memory. Of the clergy who have been engaged in work among the deaf he is the only one who was born and nurtured in the Church. Mr. Syle was the son of one of our Church's missionaries in Japan, in which country he was born, and received the degree of Master of Arts from Yale. He was ordained Deacon in St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, in October, 1876, by Bishop William Bacon Stevens.

"Our brother here who is to receive Holy Orders this morning will be the twenty-second admitted to the ministry being deaf at his ordination. Of those deaf at their ordination five have joined the Church Triumphant and two have retired. One of our active missionaries acquired a hearing defect years after ordination. Our brother here will be the sixteenth missionary to the deaf now in active service.

"How widely scattered our missionaries are may be indicated by the dioceses in which they reside and from which most of them radiate into the surrounding territory: Connecticut, New York, Central New York, Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Maryland, Washington, North Carolina, Mississippi, Ohio, Southern Ohio, Chicago, Missouri, Los Angeles, Olympia, and now last, but not the least, Colorado.

"In the early years of Church work among the deaf fewer than half a dozen hearing clergy qualified for this special field. They all have passed away leaving it exclusively to the deaf clergy. Our Book of Common Prayer is an invaluable blessing to the deaf as a medium of worship.

"While some people may claim that 'one Church is just as good as another' there can be no question but that the 'Prayer Book Church' is the best adapted for meeting the special needs of the deaf."

FLORIDA.

Called Meeting of Diocesan Convention.

The Standing Committee of the Diocese met in the Church Club, at Jacksonville, and called a meeting of the Diocesan Convention for July 22 in that city, to elect a bishop, Bishop Henry St. George Tucker having notified the committee which waited on him that he must decline the office. The Standing Committee felt that the urgency of many diocesan matters which cannot be attended to without episcopal direction justified calling the convention in July.

Presented With Home.

The vestry of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, has purchased in the beautiful riverside section of the city a home for the Rev. Van Winder Shields, D. D., who has been rector emeritus of the parish. Dr. Shields has been rector of the parish for more than thirty-five years. Under his leadership it has grown to be one of the great parishes of the South. Besides its large church building, seating about 1,100, it owns a community house across the street from the church and a $125,000 parish house building is nearing completion. Dr. Shields is one of the most beloved of rectors, and an outstanding citizen of the city. He is president of the Standing Committee, delegate to General Convention, presiding officer of the Convention; active in service, a respected Churchman, with a record of accomplishment rarely equalled.

Work at the University.

The Rev. Messrs. C. A. Ashby, W. T. Cavell and Mr. George Waller Thames, Jr., met with the Rev. R. B. Templeton, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Gainesville, and outlined the work at the University, at that place for next session. The dormitory will be converted into a club house, with a student in charge. It will be known as "The Episcopal Club," and the building as "Weed Hall," in memory of the late Bishop E. G. Weed. A committee consisting of a representative of the Church at Gainesville, Mr. George Waller Thames, Jr., representing the Board of Missions, one to be elected by the Episcopal students at the University and one from the Diocese of Southern Florida, to be selected by Bishop Mann, with the Bishop of the Diocese, when one is named, were appointed a committee to arrange for the operation of the club house.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Historic St. Anne's, Middletown, Celebrates Anniversary.

Seated in the quaint family pews in St. Anne's Church, Middletown, Delaware, built in 1768 for a parish that was founded in 1705, members of the congregation and their friends observed the two hundred and nineteenth anniversary on June 15. The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., assisted by the rector of St. Anne's, the Rev. Percy L. Donaghy, presided at the services. The morning sermon was preached by the Rev. R. B. Mathews, D. D., rector of St. Thomas', Newark, and the afternoon sermon was preached by the Rev. R. W. Trapnell, of St. Andrew's, Wilmington.

Dr. Mathews in his sermon said that Creeds and traditions are essential in this world. The Church, he pointed out, is a vehicle for tradition and we depend on tradition for our history and literature. He told how the Hebrews passed tradition from mouth to mouth until it was written in fixed form. Creeds are a written form of tradition. After drawing a mental picture of the period in which St. Anne's Church was built, a time when all Europe was restless, Queen Anne of England and Louis XIV of France at war, with independence for the colonies in the air, Dr. Mathews declared that there were other functions of the Church, in addition to being a vehicle for tradition. The Church, he said, looms before us solid and firm; it stands as a great monument, signifying imperial majesty. It has endless power and is a comfort to the weary and sick at heart, it is a reservoir of spiritual life and is the conservator of our morals.

Speaking of the latter point, Dr. Mathews declared that the moral teachings of Aristotle, Seneca and other ancient ethical teachers do not differ in meaning from those of Christ, but their teachings dangle in the air while the teachings of Christ are grounded in God.

Diocese Reorganizes Executive Council.

In accordance with the revised canon passed by the last annual convention, the Executive Council of Delaware has been reorganized. The Department of Religious Education and Christian Social Service has been divided into two departments. The Rev. T. Getz Hill, rector of St. Peter's, Smyrna, was elected chairman of the Department of Religious Education and the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, rector of Immanuel, New Castle, chairman of the Department of Christian Social Service. The Rev. Benjamin F. Thompson, of Dover, was continued as chairman of the Department of Church Extension and the Rev. Dr. F. M. Kirkus, of Trinity, Wilmington, chairman of the Department of Ways and Means.

Old Swedes, Wilmington, Celebrates Two Hundred and Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

More than fifteen hundred persons, many coming from a distance, attended the services marking the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of Old Swedes, Wilmington, on June 15. Consecrated on Trinity Sunday, June 4, 1699, this church has the distinction of being the oldest continuously active church in the United States.

The day began with an early celebration of the Holy Communion by the vicar, the Rev. Robert Bell. At eleven o'clock the celebrant was the Rev. Frederick Maurice Kirkus, D. D., rector of Trinity Parish, to which Old Swedes belongs, and a sermon was delivered by the Rev. Percy R. Stockman, Superintendent of the Seaman's Church Institute, of Philadelphia. In the afternoon the service was conducted by the Rev. Alban Richey, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Wilmington, assisted by the choir of St. John's Church. In the evening the Bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., addressed a large congregation. All three speakers extolled the courage and fortitude of the sturdy Swedish settlers who landed March 29, 1638, within a short distance of where the Church now stands. The graveyard with its 16,000 dead, the rock marking the original landing place of the Swedes, the memorial tablets, the old high-back pews and red brick floor, the ancient portraits of Eric Bjork, Israel Acalius, the historian of the Swedish settlement, and Peter Tranberg, which hang in the robing room of the church, and communion sets and early records of the church and many other things of historical interest, were pointed out by the special committee appointed for that purpose.

Old Swedes' Church, under the care of its vicar, the Rev. Robert Bell, is doing work of a high order amidst the downtown population.

G. F. S. Gives Masque.

The "Forest Princess," an old English Masque, was given on Bishopstead lawn, in Wilmington, on June 16. The cast included members of all the branches of the Girls' Friendly Societies throughout the diocese.

The proceeds were for the vacation fund of the Girls' Friendly Society.

The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mr. Josiah Marvel at his home, "Nanticoke," on June 14. The guests included all the clergy and vestrymen of the diocese. The affair was informal, and the spacious grounds afforded opportunity for archery, rifle practice and other diversions.

The Depths of Love.

W. B. Lydenberg.

O for some little fellow soul to love,
Some eager, struggling faith however crude,
Some sacrifice to raise this heart above
Its own blind wants to taste of heaven's food!
No child to throw its tender arms around My neck and in this bosom hide its fears;
No mother's brow, with silvered tresses
crowned,
Sweetly to kiss as slumber's hour appears!
O hungry soul, and have you found the bread
For which your silent heart so long has yearned?
O have you seen how joy like sunlight spread
As fell the tears of Christ? and have you learned How rich is life when thoughts of self are shed,
How sweet is love though even not returned?

The Unconquered Empire.

Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

Man has literally conquered the earth. Man has mastered the material, the vegetable, the animal kingdom—almost! Man has conquered the world in respect to land, in respect to water, in respect to air.

Some time ago I saw a picture of a group of boys and girls, with hoes, rakes and other garden implements in their hands. They were on their way to the community garden. Underneath was the legend, "We conquer the earth"! And so they do. You can take a plot of ground that has never produced anything but weeds and briars and make it blossom like a rose-garden.

Man has gone into the earth and found gold, silver, iron, etc., God's bottled sunshine, and has brought it out in abundance for the comfort, the pleasure and the wealth of the people. Man has conquered the earth!

In respect to water, man has conquered the material world. Time was when man was afraid of the water and when Columbus and his men, about to discover the greatest of countries, getting out of sight of land, the fearful sailors mutinied and would throw their leader overboard. But they had a master-man aboard. "What shall we do when hope is gone?" The words leaped like a leaping sword, "Sail on! Sail on! Sail on!" They sailed. They gained a world. They gave that world its grandest lesson—"Sail on!"

Man has about conquered the air. He has liquified it, condensed it, compressed it. He is working minor miracles with it. And now he is flying about at will in the air.

So much for the material kingdom. There is one empire in which, as yet, man is not the conqueror. This empire, too, is three-fold. This is the empire of self. The man does not live who is his own master. You are the unconquered empire!

In respect to his body, which may be compared to the earth, man has not gained the victory. Could we but control our hands, our tongues, our emotions, our appetites and passions, we would be masters of men. All the hands in the world are God's hands. All the tongues in the world are God's tongues. We have taken them away from their Creator and are using them for our own selfish purposes. Not until hands, tongues and lives have been rededicated to God and Humanity, will there be peace and good will in the world.

In respect to his mind, which may be compared to the realm of water in the material kingdom—your thoughts and my thoughts and every man's thoughts running out into a great sea of universal thought, potent and powerful for good or ill—in respect to his mind, his thoughts, his will and his imagination, man is by no means the master.

In respect to his soul, which may be compared to the realm of the air, intangible, difficult of control and mastery, man is not master. Could man but turn soul, mind, body over to the directing power of the Almighty, what an instrument of love and of service and of constructive purposes man would be!

Now, man did not conquer the world without an agency. His agency, his tool, was science. With the tool of physics, chemistry, geology, mineralogy, engineering and dozens of branches of science, man has been enabled to work wonders. But without a tool, man cannot build a house—much less the temple of character! Without a tool, man cannot ever write a letter—much less be the right kind of an epistle to be read of men!

As science has been the tool by which man has conquered in the material realm, so religion must be the tool by which he shall eventually rule the unconquered empire. Religion puts God, Christ, Infinite Power at the disposal of man, if he but know how to use them.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Judgment Foretold.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord was on Olivet. In front and to the right was Mount Zion and the Temple. To the left front was the city dumping-grounds, the valley of the brook Hinnom—Gehennah. "Where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched," for they burned the inflammable refuse and piled the rest to rot.

In this situation He began a description of Judgment, giving that famous passage which begins, "Then shall the King say to them on his right hand," and ending, "But the righteous shall go into life eternal."

The promise of brotherhood cannot refer to Christians as Our Lord's only brethren, for millions of heathen have died without meeting a Christian. It must mean all mankind. Christ states Himself brother to all men; even heathen and prisoners. Elder brother to all mankind!

The exposition of the law is by the judge. Whatever may be implied, nothing is directly said about religion or about sin. Redemption is for love and hospitality. Damnation is for neglected opportunities of philanthropy.

The sheep of the Right Hand are happy. The kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world is a great and blessed thing. The Place prepared by Christ for the saints is more blessed.

Our Lord established a kingdom composed of saints. The covenant-sacrifice through which they enter is now Baptism by water and the Spirit. When they break the covenant they cease to be saints, but do not cease to be in the kingdom. When they renew the covenant by repentance, confession, restitution and communion with Him they become saints again. The Kingdom, therefore, is composed of both bad and good and shall be so until the end of the Age. The means by which the broken covenant is normally renewed and the sinner, after repentance and restitution, becomes a saint again, is the Lord's Supper. No man, woman nor child can enter the Kingdom which Our Lord established by any other way than by baptism with water and the Spirit, with the possible exceptions of those who were in it before He gave the law of Baptism and of the martyrs baptized in their own blood, and even those doubtful. Such men as Noah and Daniel and Job and all the prophets with, by inference, many more, may be (and many were) saints without being in the Kingdom. They were "Sanctus" set apart for God, by some older form of covenant. At the last all saints shall be in the kingdom. It is possible that there is a baptism with the Spirit in the next world. Or it may be that at resurrection, in the Marriage-Supper of the Lamb, there is a something further given to all saints of all folds. At any rate, all saints shall be in the kingdom some day. Men not found worthy to be saints shall be judged by the laws of the last Judgment; and shall some be admitted to, others excluded from, that Kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

The saints are raised to meet the Lamb at His coming, in bodies like His resurrection-body. The sheep of the right hand are raised after the Marriage-Supper of the Lamb, in bodies the nature of which is not told. The saints are with Christ, His agents and body-guard, and go with Him where He goes. The Sheep are ruled by the saints and inhabit the new earth of the renewal of all things. The saints partake of Christ's nature through covenant-sacrifice. The Sheep have actively expressed altruism or philanthropy.

Why, then, should Christ institute the New Covenant if philanthropy and altruism will keep a man out of hell without religion and lack of altruism and philanthropy will damn a man no matter what his religion?

What Christ did for us at His crucifixion won the chance for altruism and philanthropy to keep men out of hell. By Him, also, altruism and philanthropy are awakened in hearts destitute of either and in a world ignorant of both. Above all, by the sacraments of the kingdom mistakes are obliterated, innocence regained, sins forgiven and such elements of the Divine Nature implanted in the human that the least saint differs from the greatest of the Sheep as a child differs from a dog. Man born of woman was not greater than John Baptist, yet the least in the kingdom is greater than he. God plans a new race.

Some One Has Passed.

Some one has passed and left the door ajar,
And through the dismal gray that fills my room
I see a branch a-droop with silvery bloom
And just beyond its tip a golden star.

Down the dim trail that leads beyond the tomb
Some One has passed and left the door ajar.
A bough in blossom and a pilot star
Shine clear against the blackness of the tomb.

The Bible As Literature.

The literary excellence of the Bible, both in the original and in King James' version, has long been recognized, but has been but little appreciated by the generality of men and women. Applying to it the strictest standards of literary criticism, it must be awarded first place among all writings. The "Supreme and universal excellence of Shakespeare," as Macaulay terms it, must yield place to it, as must the merit of all other writers. In construction of sentences, in phraseology, in thought and in delineation of character and use of words, it has no peer.

The scene in Scott's "Lady of the Lake," where King James unknowing, meets Roderick Dhu, is one of the finest dramatic situations in literature. When James had bitterly denounced the rebel and told how he panted to meet his foe face to face, the rebel chieftain whistles and from brack and bush all around hundreds of his followers arise—

"These are Clan Alpine's warriors true,
And Saxon; I am Roderick Dhu."

Through more than a hundred preceding pages the climax has been worked up to, and most skilfully and dramatically is it produced. But contrast St. John's account of the seizure of Christ, chapter eighteen, when the band, with swords and staves, come to take Him—

"Jesus, therefore, knowing all things that should come upon Him, went forth and said unto them—whom seek ye? They answered, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus said, I am He, and Judas also, which had betrayed Him stood with them."

The simple unstudied narrative of the disciple is not less dramatic, not second in literary perfection, to the polished and repolished poem of the practiced literateur.

As for beauty of expression, Marlowe's lines—

"She was as fair as a summer's eve Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars."

have long been admired. It is pure poetry, a beautiful fancy beautifully expressed. Yet is it as fine as from the twelfth chapter of Revelation—

"And there appeared in the heavens a woman clothed with the sun."

To Shakespeare has been accorded first place among all profane writers. The soliloquy of Cardinal Wolsey is one of his finest things—

"This is the state of man; today he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; tomorrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a-ripening, nips his root
And then he falls as I do."

This is beautiful and splendid, but is it not inferior to the expression of the same idea in the one hundred and third Psalm—

"As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field so he flourisheth.
For the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall no more know it no more."

Addison has long held a preeminent place in literature for his loftiness of thought and expression and the purity of his language. He wrote a paraphrase of the nineteenth Psalm so excellent as still to be included in the hymn books of today—

"The spacious firmament on high
And all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a starry frame,
Their great Original proclaim."

But mark the greater simplicity, the wider sweep, the deeper, more solemn note of the original—

"The heavens declare the glory of God
And the firmament sheweth his handiwork,
Day unto day uttereth speech
And night unto night sheweth knowledge."

Examples might be multiplied a hundred-fold. For the finest gems from all profane literature, parallels may be found in the Bible which possess greater literary beauty or strength. It was written by many hands, some of them unlearned. It deals with a multitude of men and women and events, and with an infinite variety of circumstance—with exultant victor and shameful death; with wars, struggles and strife, and with ways of pleasantness and paths of peace; with humble homes and magnificent courts of kings; with rulers and dynasties, and with paupers and the heritage of beggars. Yet each and all are touched with the genius of literary perfection, and through it all runs a divine harmony like unto the music of the spheres.—Hon. Henry Minor, in Southern Methodist.

A Mother's True Love.

Frederick H. Adler.

Is there greater known proof of the Lord's holy plan
Than a Mother's true love for her one only son?
For when once in her eyes mystic beauty
you scan,
Is there greater known proof of the Lord's holy plan?
Even sparrows all know His own love's boundless span—
Thus, Mother-love lingers, when life's course is run.
Is there greater known proof of the Lord's holy plan
Than a Mother's true love for her one only son?

A Prayer.

Faithful Shepherd, Who dost not lose sight of even the weakest of Thy flock, lead on! I am weak but Thou art strong: I am blind, but Thou all-seeing: I am "bewildered on the way," but Thou seest the end from the beginning: I was lost in the darkness of sin but Thou hast found me: I was naked and hungry, but Thou hast clothed and fed me.

Lead Thou me on, through the green pastures of hope, or through the valley of the shadow of death. I fear not, since Thou, the Shepherd of the weak and strong, art with me. In Thee I shall conquer all foes: my spirit is armed by Thy power, and naught shall prevail against me for I am Thine, and Thine is the Kingdom and power and glory forever. Amen.

His Heart In It.

A manufacturer in Philadelphia once told a friend the story of one of his superintendents.

"Twelve years ago a boy applied to me for work. He was employed at low wages. Two days later the awards of premiums were made to manufactories at the Centennial Exposition.

"Passing down Chestnut Street early in the morning, I saw Bob poring over the bulletin board in front of a newspaper office. Suddenly he jerked off his cap with a shout.

"What is the matter?" some one asked.

"We have taken the medal for sheetings!" he exclaimed.

"I said nothing but kept my eyes on Bob. The boy who could identify himself in two days with my interests would be of use to me hereafter.

"His work was to deliver packages. I found that he took a real pride in it. His wagon must be cleaned, his horse better fed, his orders filled more carefully and more promptly than those of the men belonging to any other firm. He was as zealous for the house as though he had been a partner in it. I have advanced him step by step. His fortune is made, and the firm has added to its capital so much energy and force."—Exchange.

For the Young Folks

One Thing.

Help me to choose, O Lord, from out the maze

And multitude of things that by me roll,

One thing to work and pray for here on earth—

Something to keep before me as a goal;

That when I die my days may form for Thee,

Not many fragments, but one perfect whole.

I seek, O Lord, some purpose in my life,
Some end which will my daily acts control

So many days seem wasted now to me—
All disconnected hours that by me roll.

Help me to choose, O Lord, while I am young,

Something to keep before me as a goal.

How Often Shall We Forgive?

Eugenie du Maurier.

Once, Our Saviour was talking with His Apostles about getting along agreeably with each other. He knew that sometimes one would offend another for that is what always happens, but no real harm would come if the offended one was reasonable and forgave the offender. It was at this time that Peter asked: "Lord, how often shall my brother offend against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" But Jesus, Who knew, even then, how He must suffer and that from the cross He would plead for His murderers, said: "I say not to thee till seven times; but till seventy times seven." And then immediately, to show exactly what He meant, He told them the parable of The King and the Wicked Servant. Ten thousand talents was a great sum. A talent was money of gold or silver. And its value differed at different times and in different countries. Its worth varied from about five thousand to about five hundred dollars. Our Saviour wanted to show how generous the king was when he forgave so great a debt. In those days the debtors could be put into prison or sold as slaves. It was from this horrible fate that the king saved his servant.

How happy the servant ought to have been when he left the king! We can almost see him trying to make some good return for the kindness shown to him. But no! A fellow servant, a poor man, whom he knew well, owed him a very small sum. And he demanded immediate payment. And when the man could not pay but begged him to wait a little, just as hard as he had begged of the king, the hard-hearted, unforgiving man sent the poor beggar to prison.

When the story of the cruelty of the unforgiving servant was told to the king, he sent for the servant and said to him: "Should thou not have had compassion on thy fellow-servant even as I had compassion on thee." Of course the hard-hearted man knew that he had done wrong. But it was then too late. "Forgive us as we forgive," is our daily prayer. One of the best ways to help us to forgive is to try to never think about the wrong that we are trying to forgive. If we put it out of our minds, when it comes to us, we shall soon forget it—and then forgiving will be real.

"Lady Come to See."

Kate Goldsboro McDowell.

"Margie, let's play, lady come to see. You dress your dollie up fine, and I'll dress mine; then we'll take these 'restless little creatures'—that's what mamma calls us—out visiting with us. Because, nurse is busy you know, and we're afraid they'll get into some mischief."

Margie agreed to this. So she and Fannie had great fun seeing which could dress her doll the best. They got out their pretty silk dresses, one blue, the other one pink; then their capes trimmed with fur; and the final touches were, the large black velvet hats, one trimmed with blue feathers, the other, with pink to match the dresses.

As soon as their dollies were ready, they sat them each in a chair, telling them to keep quiet, then began to put on their own calling costumes. Fannie and Margie had two long skirts that their Mother had given them to play with. Very old skirts they were, but the little girls made believe that one was yellow satin, the other one red silk.

Having put on these, they took down from the closet shelf two old straw hats, which they had made very pretty, they thought, with wreaths of bright colored paper flowers. These things, they always kept on hand to play lady with. So now they were ready to start.

They went into the hall, each with her dollie in her arms, and knocked at Mother's door. Mother was sitting at the window darning stockings. "Come in," she said in her gentle voice. In walked the two fine ladies with their children.

"Why good morning, ladies; won't you sit down?" Mother said this as soon as she saw who it was, for she was accustomed to having these visits, whenever her little daughters felt in the humor for playing lady. Each took a seat with her doll in her lap. Then Mother began: "Well, how are you. Mrs. Jones, and how is your little daughter? I see you have her with you."

"I'm quite well, thank you, Mrs. Brown, and so is Susie; I take her with me when I call, because she's such a 'restless little creature.' I really can't leave her at home." Mother couldn't help smiling, because Fannie had imitated her, so exactly. Then she turned to Margie:

"And how are you, Mrs. Smith, and your sweet little girl?" Margie gave her head a toss in the most affected manner, and replied:

"Oh, I'm pretty well, thank you, but my dear little daughter has a very bad cold; as nurse was busy, I brought her with me. My children are such a nuisance, sometimes."

"But, Mrs. Smith, they are such dear little creatures when they are good."

"Yes, I know, but what with their noise, and the trouble I have with my servants, I feel worn out; really, life is a burden."

Mother gave a decidedly broad smile at this, because Margie had so perfectly mimicked a visitor who had called on her the day before.

"And then," Fannie began, "As we live next door to each other, the servants do annoy us so, by talking backwards and forwards. Oh, my! it's really too much!" and she sank back in her chair with the most woe-begone expression on her face.

Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jones then bade Mrs. Brown good-morning, and went back to the nursery. Soon they took another trip through the hall, but when they again tapped on mamma's door, she called out, "Not at home."

"O, I'm so glad she's out," said each to other, outside the door; "I do dislike that Mrs. Green so much, we just had to call for politeness."

Then opening the door and walking in they addressed Mother as Mrs. Green, "Why Mrs. Green, we just called at your house; you don't know how sorry we were to find you out; we've been intending to call for so long, and wouldn't have missed you for anything." At this, Mother put down her work and looked very serious. Her little daughters didn't know she had heard what they said outside the door. She never had known of their doing anything of this kind before, so she thought now was the time to teach them a lesson.

"Fannie and Margie," she answered. "My darlings, don't ever let mamma hear you talk in this away again, when you are playing ladies."

"Why, how, Mother?" they asked at the same time.

"I heard your words out in the hall, when I said Mrs. Green was not at home. Then you pretended to meet Mrs. Green, and told her how very sorry you were that she was out when you called. This, dears, was an untruth. If you practice such deceit when you play, you will learn to use it always."

"But, Mother," answered Maggie, "We heard Mrs. Tilford say that, at Mrs. Green's door, when we passed by the other day, and as we were coming home, she met Mrs. Green said said, just what we told you."

"I am very, very sorry, that any lady should stoop to such deceitfulness, to make herself popular. But remember, little daughters, it is a great deal better to make a few warm friends by being honest and truthful—without being rude, this is not necessary—than it is to try to make yourself a favorite with all, by acting in a way you do not feel. This is really, acting the lie."

"O Mother!" said the two little girls in a breath.

"No wonder, dears, you are shocked; but there is no better way of expressing it. Let your play of 'lady come to see,' today, help teach you that it is always best to be strictly truthful in matters that seem so unimportant. Then this habit of sincerity once formed, when you come to be grown up ladies, you will be above acting one way, and feeling another. If you cannot sincerely mean what you say, keep silent—this you can do without being rude."

I am glad to say, when Fannie and Margie were grown young ladies, they practiced what they had learned that day playing, "Lady come to see."

A Fourth of July Story.

"Mother, may I go to the State House and help grandfather?" asked the boy.

"Yes, indeed, son, if thy grandfather needs thee."

"Indeed I do, daughter; my old legs grow weary trotting about these days, and each day the meetings are longer while our wise men are discussing our rights to liberty."

"Dost thou think they will sign the letter to the king today, grandfather?" asked the boy, eagerly.

"That no man can tell. Truly 'tis a bold thing to do; but the king hath brought it upon himself, and the time has come for us to declare our independence."

"Then it may happen today. Oh, I am so glad to go with thee, grandfather, and I will help thee all I can!"

And the old sexton and his grandson took their way over to the State House.

"The City of Brotherly Love" was usually very quiet and peaceful, but today all was confusion and noise as the people swarmed down the streets talking about the important paper. "Will they sign it today?" "Do they dare?" "It is very wrong." "No, neighbor, thou art wrong. It is a just deed."

Although the hour was early, crowds were pressing close about the doors of the State House, and the old sexton and his grandson had difficulty in reaching the hall. The large room was opened and aired. The young lad and his grandfather dusted the chairs and set things to rights on the table. As the grandfather brought fresh ink and sharpened the quill pens he said solemnly: "These tools will be used today in the freeing of a country."

Then the delegates filed into the great hall, and as they took their places the grandfather led the boy aside and pointed out the various members of Congress:

"That man who has just seated himself in the tall chair behind the table is John Hancock, the president of Congress; and the young man standing near him is Thomas Jefferson. He was the one chosen to draft the paper, and then he read it to his committee—John Adams, who is sitting over there; Roger Sherman, Robert Livingston, and our own Benjamin Franklin. This committee approved of the paper, as presented by Jefferson, and, with a few changes, they submitted it to Congress, and day after day they have spent discussing it; but mark my word, lad, this day, July 4, 1776, will end our weary waiting."

"Now, I will tell thee our plan: When the paper is signed they wish the news spread to all the waiting people outside; so I will climb to the bell tower, ready to ring the great bell. Thou must wait below here in the hall, and when they tell thee it is signed, thee must run with all good speed and give me the signal to ring the bell. Come lad, to the bell tower, and I will show thee where I will stand."

The boy followed his grandfather to the bell tower and there he gazed at the bell hanging high overhead. "I can see words on the side of it, grandfather," said the boy. "Dost thou know what it says?"

"Yes, child, verily, the words are these: 'Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof.'"

"Oh!" said the boy, his eye shining with enthusiasm. "And that is what the great bell will do when I give thee the signal. It is truly a liberty bell. Is it not, grandfather?"

"Yes, lad; but now run to thy post; the signal may come at any moment."

All day long they waited while the eager and impatient crowd surged through the street; and all day long the earnest men discussed the important question and answered the roll-call of the separate States. At last they made it a unanimous vote, and one after another came to the desk and signed his name.

John Hancock, president of the Congress, was the first to sign. He dipped his pen far down into the ink and wrote his name in large, black letters; and as he did so he said: "There, John Bull can read my name without spectacles. Now, let him double the price on my head, for this is my defiance." Then he turned about, and, looking at the other members of Congress, said: "We must be unanimous; there must be no pulling different ways—we must all hang together."

"Yes," said Franklin, his eyes twinkling with humor. "We must all hang together or most assuredly we shall all hang separately."

Finally the Declaration of Independence was signed, and one of the members went to the door and whispered to the little lad who had waited so patiently outside in the hall. The boy fairly bounded up the staircase and, as he ran, he called loudly to the old man waiting above:

"Ring, ring, grandfather, ring! Ring out for liberty!"

The old man grasped the bell-rope, and soon the iron tongue was striking the great bell and its deep tones were pealing out upon the air. Surely it did "proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof;" and truly now it was a liberty bell.—The Sunbeam.

After That, John Wasn't Always "It,"

Just as the game of Hide and Seek was well under way a voice was heard calling, "John Thomas Morgan! John Thomas Morgan! Please come here!"

John Thomas Morgan, who was "It" when the voice called, raised his voice shrilly and summoned the rest of the bunch from their hiding places.

"I've got to go," he announced. "Mrs. Lossing wants me to do an errand for her."

"That's always the way," grumbled Fred when John Thomas was out of hearing. "Every single time we get up a game Mrs. Lossing calls John Thomas. She does it on purpose."

John Thomas was occupied the greater part of an hour, for his short legs could not carry him very fast, and when he came back it was nearly dark and time for supper. The spring day was none too long, for it was March, and the after school playtime seemed all too short for the outdoor games after the long winter.

"I wish we could have one more game," sighed John Thomas.

"You'd have to be It," said Willy Nelson.

"All right," said John Thomas. "I was It when the game broke up."

But it was too late, and they all went soberly homeward panting from the exertion of running, all but John Thomas, who had not been running. He was only seven years old, but already it had come into his mind that Mrs. Lossing was apt to think up another errand while he was gone, so if he did hurry he did not get back to the game a minute sooner.

That evening Willy Nelson told his mother about Mrs. Lossing, and how she always called John Thomas away from the game, and to his surprise his mother said, "Yes, I've noticed and I'm glad of it."

"Why, mother?" asked Willy with wide open eyes.

"Because you children always manage to make John Thomas be It when you play together. For some reason he stumbles and is slow, so that you can all get ahead of him, and he is It time and again. I've watched many times and he never gets to play," said

Just Pray to the Master.

Nina Beckett, age 13.

If you are sorrowful,
If time is a care,
Just pray to the Master
And you need not fear.

If you are lonesome,
If you are blue,
Just pray to the Master,
'Tis all you need do.

If you're in trouble,
If you're in grief,
Just pray to the Master,
He'll give you relief.

Mrs. Nelson.

"We can't help that," said Willy, fingering his cap. "We don't make him stumble. And, mother, he's so slow to find us it's no wonder we all get home safe."

"It would be nice if somebody once in a while would hold back and not try so hard in order to give him a better chance," said Mrs. Nelson. "It's hard to play that way all the time. I'm glad Mrs. Lossing calls him away, for she gives him pennies and cakes, and never asks one of you to do an errand for her. Last week her son sent John Thomas a whole dollar because he has been so kind to the poor old lady."

"A dollar! To spend?" asked Willy. "Yes, to spend as he pleases. You see, she is sorry for him."

Of course Willy was curious to know what John Thomas would spend the dollar for, so he asked him, and the little boy said at once that his mother had put it away until they could add more to it, and then he would have a pair of glasses. "I won't have to be It all the time when I get glasses," said John Thomas. "The doctor says the reason I stumble so much is because I can't see well."

There was no game of Hide and Seek that evening, but a great counting of pennies and nickels and dimes as soiled fingers emptied little tin banks, and finally Willy Nelson was sent with all the money they could shake out of them to Mrs. Morgan's tiny home.

"Here's some money to help get John Thomas his glasses," said Willy. "We want him to see, so he won't have to be It all the time in our games. It's from the boys and girls, tell him." And then Willy ran back as fast as his legs would carry him, feeling far better than when he had rejoiced that there was one boy they could always beat in the games.—Hilda Richmond, in S. S. Times.

Curious Lights of Nature.

While every one is familiar with the fact that the lightning bug is a light-producing creature, not every one knows of many other insects and forms of vegetable life that share in light-giving power of high and low degree. Under certain conditions nasturtiums, dahlias, tuberose and yellow lilies may be seen to glow with a bright radiance, varying in color and intensity. Only those flowers that had strong yellow or orange shades exhibit this light. The best time to see this is after dark when the atmosphere is clear and dry. The light is sometimes steady, but more often irregular and flashing.

Often in autumn the ground will glow from the dead lives. The Australian poppy is the most remarkable of all the light-giving plants, for it has been found to send out quite a bright light of its own.

Mushrooms growing on decayed wood often give forth such a light that, when they are placed on a newspaper, it will enable one to read the words nearby. One species of mushroom in Australia, sixteen inches in diameter, was of such brilliancy that when seen from a distance its light frightened the natives.

Crabs are notable light givers, and the salpa is the most wonderful of all. Bodies of water twenty miles square have been seen glowing with them. In Santa Catalina channel one naturalist reported that as far as the eye could see the creatures lay gleaming like gems in the sunlight.—Selected.

Would You Have Answered?

You would not be in a Japanese house long without noticing their extreme politeness, and that this politeness was especially shown by children toward their parents. The one thing that Japanese children must learn is perfect obedience. A child would as soon think of refusing to do a thing altogether, when told, as to ask why he must do it.

A little American girl, the child of a missionary, was playing in the street with some Japanese children.

"Mary," called her father from the house, "come in."

As she paid no attention the others thought she had not heard, and began to say to her, "Your august father is calling you." "Your honorable parent is beckoning to you," and so on.

"I don't care," said Mary.

The children stopped playing and looked at her in astonishment. Her father called again. This time she answered crossly, "I don't want to come in. What for?"

At this the children picked up their playthings and hurried home, talking excitedly all the way. "Rude little foreigner!" "Bad little girl!" they said. And it was a long time before Mary saw anything of her friends again.—Exchange.

The Way of a Boy.

This is the way a boy comes home,
And the way it shall ever be:
A scamper of feet through the leaf and loam,
And the chase of a vagrant bee;
A coat cast off and quite forgot,
A whistle and ringing cheer,
And a romp near every well-known spot
On the way from There to Here.

This is the way a boy makes haste,
And the way it has ever been:
A squirrel seen is a squirrel chased,
And a top is made to spin;
A tree's to climb and a brook's to wade,
And the shade is a place to lie
After the zest of the game that's played
When the sun is hot and high.

This is the path a boy calls straight:
By every winding way
Where berries are or wild birds wait
Or squirrels dart at play;
By banks that bid you sit and cool
Two dusty feet and brown
In the pebbly shallows of the pool
That's on the way from town.

This is the errand swiftly done,
As doing shall ever be:
An ounce of care to the pound of fun.
And an hour that grows to three,
A fence to climb and a rail to stride,
With berries to hunt and share,
And a breathless quarter hour beside
A timid woodchuck's lair.

And this is the thing that a boy calls
Care,
And the thing it shall ever be:
An old straw hat that's lost somewhere
In old shade of some far-off tree.
A shirt that's damp or trousers rent,
A bruise of a hornet's sting,
And lagging footsteps choreward bent
In the soft twilights of spring.

So these are the ways that boys all know
And so may they ever be:
Fancies are fickle as winds that blow,
And dreams as wide as the sea,
Heaven above where the blue sky smiles,
With no day overlong,
And a whistle of merry tunes that whiles
A whole world into song.—Ex.

The World Beautiful.

Why not fill one's usual place in life, do one's usual work—meet the customary duties, pleasures, courtesies, only meeting them from new motives, and inspiring the duties with higher purposes? It is not only the poor, the ignorant, or even the degraded, who need to have good done them who need the sunniness of hope, the sweetness of content, the renewal of courage, the unflinching devotion to heroism. People are not necessarily rich in happiness or in hope, because they live in more or less luxury of the material comforts and privileges of life. There is just as much need of the ministry of higher ideals to the comfortable as to the uncomfortable, to the intelligent as to the ignorant, to those who are reaching forward after truth and progress as to those who are receding from them. There is a vast amount of enthusiasm in the world over helping the unfortunate and defective and degraded classes, and so far as this zeal is genuine and discreet, it is to be commended; but the righteous as well as the sinner, the moral as well as the immoral, the refined as well as the rude, are not altogether unworthy some degree of both private and public consideration.

Unfailing thoughtfulness of others in all those trifles that make up daily contact in daily life, sweetness of spirit, the exhilaration of gladness and of joy, and that exaltation of feeling which is the inevitable result of mental peace and loving thought,—these make up the World Beautiful, in which each one may live as in an atmosphere always attending his presence.

Like the Kingdom of Heaven, the World Beautiful is within; and it is not only a privilege, but an absolute duty, so to live that we are always in its atmosphere. Happiness, like health, is the normal state, and when this is not felt, the cause should be looked for, just as in illness the causes should be scrutinized and removed.

Live in the sweet, sunny atmosphere of serenity and light and exaltation,—in that love and loveliness that creates the World Beautiful.—Lillian Whitling.

BANKER DEAF FOR YEARS NOW HEARS PERFECTLY.

Mr. John L. Ellerman, President of the Farmers National Bank, Fairfax, South Dakota, says that after suffering from deafness for many years he can now hear the slightest whisper and is so proud and happy of his own good fortune that he wants every one who is deaf or hard of hearing to know about it. After trying everything he could hear of without success, Mr. Ellerman finally saw the announcement of a New York firm stating that they had perfected a new hearing device called the Acousticon which would enable anyone whose auditory nerve was not entirely destroyed to hear as perfectly as those with normal hearing. As this firm offered to send their product on Ten Days' Free Trial—no deposit—no C. O. D., he decided to try it. To his utter amazement and delight, he found that this remarkable invention enabled him to hear all sounds as clearly as when a boy. He has since recommended it to a number of his friends and they also report most satisfactory results. If you want to hear again as well as when a child, write the Dictograph Products Corporation, Suite 1301-A, No. 220 W. 42nd Street, New York City, and ask them to send you an Acousticon on Ten Days' Free Trial. There are no strings attached to their offer. The trial is absolutely free. Just send them your name and address.—Adv.

Institute on Religious Education.

The third meeting of the Institute on Religious Education met in Chanute, June 11-13. While not being as large as hoped for, because it is now a Diocesan and not a Deanery Institute, yet it was larger and better than either of the other two. Courses were offered on all Christian Nurture; Child Psychology; Methods of Teaching; Week Day Religious Instruction and Pageantry. The Rev. Morton C. Stone made a real contribution to the Institute by his address and suggestions on Pageantry.

The Rev. T. R. Ludlow was the chaplain and also spoke on China.

The Institute was so satisfactory that a movement is on foot to hold the next meeting in Topeka, lengthen the time and enlarge the fields of study.

Clark, by the Rt. Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of California. Bishop Johnson was the celebrant of the Holy Communion, and the Rev. George F. Weld, D. D., preached the sermon.

Christianity is a penance before it can be a paean. It sinks to rise, dies to live, is crucified, for enthronement. So the Way of Christ can not always be vindicated by ordinary prudences. It has little or nothing of the cold calculating sagacity of those who unfailingly look out for themselves first. It is a thrilling adventure, verified for good by the heroes who have undertaken it. The real man or woman will delight in it for these overtures to courage and to faith.

Would to God that all the party names and unscriptural phrases and forms, which have divided the Christian world were forgot: and that we might all agree to sit down together, as humble, loving disciples at the feet of our common Master, to hear His words, to imbibe His Spirit, and to transcribe His life in our own. —Wes-

This Very Hour

If all the kind deeds never done
Should blossom into flower,
The earth would be a paradise
This very hour.

If all the dear words never said
Found utterance today,
The winter in a million hearts
Would turn to May.

If all our good intentions were Pushed on to gracious deed,
I think their power would promptly end
The age of greed.

Prayer.

O Lord, may our religion work in our daily conduct; may Thy spirit shape our characters; may the Christ Who is our pattern be indeed our model and the life which comes from Him be in us the power which moulds us into His own likeness. Help us to cast off weaknesses and faults and sins. Enlarge our conceptions of Thy great purposes for us. Help us to discern between the less and the greater in Thy word and will. Through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

God Calls.

Not often does God summon His servants with trumpet and drum. Significant endeavor and high devotion do not come forth at the acclaim of the throng or the promise of quick rewards.

In the solitude of Midian, Moses knew the call of his countrymen; Paul at Troas saw Europe's need visualized in a single man; Wendell Phillips knelt at his bedside and dedicated himself to the black millions; Judson, in the shelter of a friendly haystack, felt the heartbeat of India.

God calls in the great inarticulate needs of the human family, in the dumb suffering of little children, in the grind of poverty, in the long dreams of youth, in the sorrows and hopes of life. Deep calls to deep. God calls by the statesman's hope, by the glorified vision of what the world may become through the plentiful healing that is in Jesus Christ.—Vernon S. Phillips.

The Prayer of Agur.

Remove far from falsehood and lies;
Give me neither poverty nor riches;
Feed me with the food that is needful for me;

Lest I be full, and deny Thee, and say,
Who is Jehovah?
Or lest I be poor, and steal,
And use profanely the name of my God.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Not where we elect to go;
But where Jesus leads the way."

"If it is not for His glory, it is not for your good."—George Muller.

When Belief waxes uncertain, Practice, too, becomes unsound.—Carlyle.

Heaven and hell may not be far apart, but the gulf between is very deep.

God never made a law that was not for our highest good to keep.

Life may be given in many ways,
And loyalty to truth be sealed
As bravely in the closet as the field.

"He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause."—Beecher.

Let him be rich and weary that at least

If goodness lead him not, yet weariness

May toss him to My breast.

—George Herbert.

"We build like corals grave by grave,
Yet pave a path that's sunward.
We're beaten backward in the fray,
Yet newer strength we borrow;
And where the vanguard camps to-day
The rear will camp tomorrow'."

In some things we are to remain as children. We are not to grow away from their simplicity. But in understanding we are to be men. Indeed, one of our surest defences against belittling feelings is the cultivation of a more spacious mind, a mind which moves reverently but freely in the realm of truth revealed to us in Jesus Christ Our Lord.—J. H. Jowett.

Thy gifts without Thy grace are lacking still.

Imperfect I do turn Thy gifts to ill:

Therefore with all Thy gifts would I entreat,

These graces three to make Thy gifts complete;

The grace to see, and wonder at the sight,

The grace to take and use the gift aright,

The grace to share with him in poorer plight.

THE LABORATORY MIND

So far as we can understand the attitude of a very industrious group in the life of the Church today, it seems to consist of a deep desire to give to the world a form of belief constructed by a scientific process. It is to be a substitute especially adapted to the sensitive conscience of the average college man or woman.

First of all, it is guaranteed to be a pure laboratory product. By a process approved by scientists at home and abroad, all that is miraculous or beyond the experience of college youth or the man on the street, has been carefully eradicated. Those who have found the ancient faith distasteful or in any way difficult are assured that the most sensitive intellect can assimilate the new product. It is a tasteless product, and taken along with the prudential maxims of business, or the necessary cautions of experience given to the student of chemistry or biology by the professor, can be assimilated without conscious effort. It is guaranteed to fit into the prevailing fashion of philosophic thought; and the promise is given that if such fashion change within the lifetime of the convert to this form of belief, the belief itself can readily be adapted to suit the new philosophy. The closing statement in the guarantee is charmingly naive: "We ourselves, however, do not use this product, but stick to the ancient faith."

To those who make the obviously easy reply to these statements that they are shallow and uncandid cavillings at the serious efforts of earnest and able men to remove barriers, we would submit these considerations. Is it a reasonable proposition that those outside the Church should be allowed to write the Creed of the Church? Is it reasonable to expect the Church to rewrite its Creed in terms set forth by members of its own communion, who, as special pleaders for those outside the Church, present a superstitious Creed, which disclaiming themselves, they offer as one acceptable to those outside?

We are not suggesting a heresy hunt on a grand scale, nor are we anxious to see the Church enter upon a period of creedal strife. We do contend, however, that the present situation is psychologically impossible. Either the Church has something to share with the world or it has not.

If the Creeds be no longer credible, it is time the Church itself find it out. A Christianity knowing nothing of miracle and discarding revelation, is certainly not the same in kind as that which has continued to function for nineteen centuries.

To divide the Church into Modernists and Fundamentalists, is to create a line of cleavage that is hopelessly destructive; for neither attitude represents the mind of any appreciable body of Churchmen.

The flippant scorn with which men, who, within the limits of their own field of investigation, may well deserve the name of scientists, have treated the ideas of miracle and revelation and ultimate moral distinctions, has not been without effect upon the world, especially upon young men and women in college, who jaded by the labor of accumulating data, are eager for a generalization.

We are confident, however, that the facts of experience discredit the theories of science more often than the facts of science discredit the theories of Christianity.

Truth is the express image of reality; but reality is only a point at which human knowledge touches the infinite play of creative energy.

The science of biology which took over the assets of the old argument for design in nature, and which today has forgotten its origin, has added to its business of search a negative philosophy which finds in nature no place for deity. We are apt to forget that Fundamentalism is an attitude of mind. It would clear the atmosphere amazingly if men would realize that the real conflict is between scientific fundamentalists and religious fundamentalists. As each represents a type of the closed mind, the battle must be fought in the dark. For our part we are confident that when these blind combatants have destroyed one another, the world will have another name for what science calls "a niche of organic opportunity" and "a sense of special favor"; and the God, Who according to the Fundamentalists exhausted Himself in the act of creation, will be found to be the source of the general wonder of life and the world, the God, "Who worketh hitherto," and still works.

CUNNING ON CHARACTER

The representative of one of the great corporations is quoted as saying that business was pretty well equipped so far as ability was concerned, but that every large enterprise that was not just an organized looting adventure, was in the market for character. The piratical methods of business in vogue thirty years ago so undermined the moral fibre of men that loyalty and trust almost disappeared from the market place. For good or ill every department of humanity has been commercialized. Law, medicine, science, religion, all alike, are in business.

Strange as it may sound, the great manufacturing corporations seem to be the first to realize that public confidence is necessary to protect their continued existence. It will take the profession of the law a long time to do away with the fixed conviction of the public mind that its ablest representatives have won distinction as masters of evasion, who under forms of law have made the plain provisions of the law of no avail. Science itself watches the main chance out of the tail of its eye, and favorable scientific opinions are as readily available for cash as is legal advice. Medicine is commercialized, and the internecine war of rival practitioners has helped to destroy confidence in the profession. If doctors would cease speaking ill of their brethren, fewer people would put their trust in quacks.

Churches are run like rival grocery stores, and every device known to the retail trade is being used to build up a clientele. The biggest business in the country is politics; for it is the business of business itself. It is hardly too much to say that politics is half a generation behind some of the great corporations, either in the realization that cunning and chicanery are in the end self-destructive, or in boldness to declare that the one great need of public life is character.

ROBERT H. GARDINER

It is but enforced conformity to an unfortunate habit of thought and speech to say that Robert H. Gardiner is dead. We should prefer to state that he had received his promotion and been transferred; for death is a word that Christ made obsolete as referring to the answer to the summons of the Lord of Life. In a sense he was a world figure; for his interest in the welfare of Christ's Kingdom, made him carry in his heart the fortunes of every band of strugglers, who called themselves by Christ's name.

It was Carlyle, we believe, who declared that the glory of a man was that he did not have to spend his life shut up in a suit of clothes, but at any moment could be anywhere he wanted to be. If this, indeed, be the glory of a man, then Robert H. Gardiner was highly privileged. To "knit together God's elect in one communion and fellowship" was for him no mere prayer of the lips. It was the steady purpose of sustained endeavor and glowed with the fixedness of a harbor-light.

He will be sadly missed in the General Convention. He had no special gift of eloquence, and yet there was scarcely a day during its sessions that he did not lift the Convention to a high place of vision. Sometimes after hours of discussion, when men's minds were jaded, and the dust of verbal strife had blurred the outlook, he would walk to the platform, holding a slip of paper in his hands. He would then read a greeting sent to the Convention through him from some group of Christians half across the world, or perhaps he would ask of us to send a message to some gathering of believers in the Far East. In either case he left us all ashamed. His Christian courtesy reached around the world. The very largeness of his vision rebuked our littleness. When he came before the Convention it was like the noiseless opening of a window, letting the fresh air of heaven into a close and heated room. We got used to his services so quietly rendered, and took him for granted as men take for granted the sunshine and the stars.

May God send to His Church another like him—one whose loyalty will be like his as wise as it is strong, as courteous as it is daring, as quiet as it is irresistible.

Why You Should Go to Church on Sunday

A man should go to church on Sunday first of all for his own sake. While it is quite true that many men maintain very high standards of thought and conduct without the help of public worship, there is no doubt that, for most men, the stimulus of association in the worship of God and the contemplation of our obligations to Him are a tremendous incentive towards the best life an individual man can live. There is something which a body of earnest people assembled with a single purpose can give to the man who sympathetically becomes part of their fellowship; and the people who thus assemble with a united purpose undoubtedly receive gifts from above which no one in isolation is apt to receive. The divine promise, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" is amply demonstrated out of human experience. A man, therefore, who has an ambition to be his very best will not neglect his opportunity to go to church on Sunday.

With all our faults today the appeal to save our own souls is not the highest appeal which can be made to us. We want to do something for other people. The older generation is a good deal worried about the generation which is just passing from youth to manhood and womanhood. Whether war has disorganized the social organism, or whether the disorganization was in process long before the war was thought of, we are quite convinced that the old sanctions have an exceedingly slender hold upon many young people of our time. Some gloomy prophets are telling us that we are on the road to a sort of barbarism from which only gradually we can emerge. Whether our exact fears are well grounded or not, it is quite plain that something must be done to conserve the best of the past, while we learn, if we can, the new lessons which our youth may teach us. Amid all the confusion, the Church stands ready to proclaim and hold forth a supreme trust, an imperishable ideal. When a man comes to church, he is not committing himself to a theory. He is attaching himself to a life. We cannot urge young people to come to church unless we ourselves come. We cannot persuade them of the value of church-going unless we ourselves are obviously better for it. Any clergyman who has had twenty-five or thirty years' experience in studying the lives of people who come to church knows that church-going does not produce people of mere theories.

It produces some people, at least, who are so much above the average in character, in unselfishness, in the will to serve that they may be called the legitimate fruits of church-going at its very best. If we desire the finest types of the next generation to be equal to the finest types of the generations that have gone before, we must both by precept and by example urge faithful habits of church-going.—Bishop Slattery, in Wyoming Churchman.

SOME BEAUTIFUL SENTENCES

Shortly after I was licensed I had to preach for Dr. Wallace in Old Greenfriar's Church. Severson and his father were present. During the sermon I saw Robert Louis scribbling in his notebook, which he carried wherever he went. I knew very well that he was the last man in Scotland who would think of taking notes of a sermon, and when I met him at the close I said: "Were you scribbling original nonsense in that notebook of yours instead of listening to the sermon?" And he replied: "I was copying out some beautiful sentences from an evening prayer in a volume of family prayers that I found in the pew," and he produced the notebook and read from it the following words: "Oh, God, who has appointed unto man the night for rest and the day for the works and labors of life, we beseech Thee to grant us quiet repose this night that our bodies being refreshed with sleep, our minds may be more wakeful and strong to serve Thee; that so we may abide all our nights and days in Thy love. Laying aside all cares and anxieties, may we sleep in the peace of a good conscience, in the faith of Thy presence and protection, and in the hope of Thine eternal glory. Let not sleep, or any bodily indulgence, degenerate into intemperance and sloth, but be in such measure as is needed to restore our wasted strength and to fit us again for the duties of our calling; that so even our sleep may be holy, and that whatever we do we may do all to Thy glory."

Then he bade me goodnight, saying, "Before I see you again I shall have these words by heart." And two days after he repeated them.—Rev. A. Bisset.

SLEEP AND DEATH

By the Reverend E. H. Ward, D. D.

"And so He giveth His beloved sleep."—Psalm 27:2.

SLEEP is one of the most mysterious things in this world of mystery. The physiologist can tell us a great many interesting things about it. The muscles relax, the respiration slackens, the action of the heart slows down, less carbonic acid is thrown off, and after a period of unconsciousness the person awakes refreshed and invigorated.

But this does not help us to understand why unconsciousness supervenes, nor why the person during the period of unconsciousness is refreshed. The fact that the senses, those windows of the body, through which perceptions of the external world flow in upon the soul, are closed, does not account for the body's rest and refreshment. The mind is just as active during sleep as when awake, and a dream is simply a mental action during sleep of which we are afterwards conscious. But this carries us no further than the point at which the old Hebrew poet had arrived when he said, "I sleep but my heart awaketh."

The poets are the true seers, but their vision has never penetrated the veil which hides from us the mystery of sleep. Diogenes is credited with being the first to proclaim the kinship of sleep and death. Plutarch tells us that when the end was very near, the old philosopher fell into a deep slumber, and, when awakened by his physician, was asked if anything ailed him, answered, "No sir, only one brother anticipates another, Sleep before death."

In Pope's translation, Homer speaks of Sleep and death two twins of winged race,

Of matchless swiftness but of silent face.

Jesus always spoke of death as sleep. Never but once did He use the word in its ordinary sense, and then only on account of the obtuseness of His Disciples. In speaking to them about the death of Lazarus, He said, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Understanding Him literally, they said, "Lord, if he sleeps he shall do well." Then said Jesus to them plainly, "Lazarus is dead," and as soon as the words were spoken He began the journey to Jerusalem to awaken him from the sleep of death.

Jesus changed not only the word, but its connotations as well. One of our most thoughtful preachers has truly said, that if Jesus had done nothing else but change the word death into sleep, He would have been the world's greatest benefactor. The early Christians who had caught the spirit of their Master, no longer regarded death as "the king of terrors," whose coming was to be awaited with horror and nameless dread, but was to be awaited as the servant sent by Jesus to call the weary laborers from the burden and heat of the day to the rest and sweet calm of Paradise the blest.

According to the teaching of Jesus, death does for the soul what sleep does for the wearied body. It refreshes, invigorates, and fills it with new life. Taking down the tabernacle of the flesh in which the moral discipline of life had been attained, it enables the emancipated soul, "To start out on its adventure brave and new," in the nobler realm of Spirit.

There is profound depth of meaning in Shakespeare's words when he says:

"Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labors bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in Life's feast."

All these, and a great many more wonderful things, may be ascribed to sleep, but as yet the all-important question whence sleep derives its power has not been answered. With our limited powers, perhaps no satisfactory answer can be given, for back of it lies the unsolved problem of the relation of the one and the many, the finite and the infinite. All finite life is the expression of the infinite, and though man as an individual, is given his "pin point rock of love and power," still "in God we live and move and have our being." Says Robert Browning:

"But God's all, man's naught:
But, also, God Whose pleasure brought Man into being, stands away
As it were a handbreadth off, to give Room for the newly made to live,
And look at him from a place apart
And use his gifts of brain and heart,
Given indeed but to keep forever."

Consciousness, the awareness that "I am I," seems to separate the soul from God, and, unless that consciousness is lost for a time in sleep, death will soon occur. In the unconscious hours of sleep the Infinite Spirit seems to be able to touch the finite spirit more directly than in our moments of consciousness and to impart strength and refreshment.

In the "abyssmal depths of personality, "unsounded as yet by the line and plummet of human consciousness, the human spirit seems able to receive incursions from the Infinite Spirit. These incursions stir the subconscious mind to its lowest depths, and bubbles arising to the surface of consciousness, may be the method by which the "inspiration of the Almighty giveth understanding." Thus it may be that inspiration comes to an Isaiah, a Paul, a Shakespeare, or a Browning.

The mystic sees far into the tranquil realms of spirit and St. Paul came back from his ecstatic vision with faint memories of what he had seen and heard, and human language had no words to express those memories. Tennyson tells us that in an hour of ecstasy, "when every nerve of sense was dumb," his spirit was whirled a "'Bout empyreal heights of thought

And came on that which is and caught
The deep pulsations of the world,
Æonian music measuring out
The steps of Time—the shocks of Chance—
The blows of Death."

Sleep and ecstasy seem to be states in which, without the medium of the body, spirit can touch spirit directly and can communicate thought. In sleep the Spirit of God imparts to man rest and refreshments; in ecstasy it enables him to see visions and dream dreams. Ecstasy is for the few; sleep is for all, and Mrs. Browning strikes a true note when she sings,

"Of all the thoughts of God that are, Borne inward into souls afar,
Along the Psalmist's music deep; Now tell me if that any is,
For gift or grace surpassing this, He giveth His beloved sleep."

Smoothing the Rough Edges and Corners

By William H. Harrison.

When the edges and corners are rough, then they bruise, scrape and wear the nerves down to the quick.

A friend a few years ago visiting a factory was nearly deafened when entering a certain department. The loud, harsh sound seemed to come from a distant corner of the room; where a very heavy box-like apparatus was slowly revolving on its axis.

"What is this distracting, almost deafening noise," the visitor asked. The reply came back to him: "You see that box yonder; it is partly filled with newly made bolts and burrs. When they came from the shop, they had many sharp edges and corners, but after they have been through this process of rolling and tumbling against each other, the rough edges and corners have all disappeared and they are as smooth as a hard-finished oiled floor."

The rough edges and corners of life are quite like that, as most of us in some respect, by nature, have many a rough edge or corner to our characters. We should keep close watch over ourselves hourly and daily so as not to keep ourselves and everybody else in hot water through the harsh, sharp things we say, often without a cause, and the bitter comments we make on the conduct of others. One of the most difficult things each one of us has to learn is to hold ourselves in check, so that we will not be finding fault all the time and criticising those who are often really the best friends we have, and we know it, too.

But contact with life as manifested in the day's experience, has a great tendency to wear off these rough edges and corners of life and make us more kind, less irritable and better qualified to judge correctly the conduct of our friends. Round and round in that huge box of every-day life we roll and tumble against each other, sometimes at the bottom and then at the top, smarting, protesting perhaps, but always, if we yield ourselves patiently to this discipline, becoming more sweet in disposition, more agreeable to live with and more fit for the one better home toward which each one of us should be striving for.

IN THE PATH OF THE WINDS

By the Right Reverend Hugh L. Burleson, D. D.

ON Saturday night, June 14, the most disastrous and widespread tornado in the history of the state raged through Eastern and Central South Dakota, taking toll of human lives and dealing wide wreckage to property. The center of the storm seems to have been near the Big Bend of the Missouri, where the Crow Creek and Lower Brule Reservations lie on opposite sides of the river, in the central part of the state.

It was at Crow Creek that the Rev. Hachaliah Burt, of blessed memory, laid deep and broad foundations for the Church. On Lower Brule another honored name for forty-five years was that of the Rev. Luke C. Walker. There are ten churches and chapels on the two reservations, all of them built by one of these two men. When the storm passed six of these lay in utter ruin, two others were seriously, perhaps hopelessly, damaged, and the remaining two will need considerable repair, having lost chimneys, bell tower, etc. Part of the destroyed buildings were smaller chapels, but the beautiful Church of the Holy Comforter at Lower Brule, one of the most attractive and best furnished in the Indian country, was totally destroyed, and the mission house badly damaged. Only the altar and—strangely enough—one or two stained-glass windows were spared. Fragments of the bishop's chair were found a mile from the church in a cornfield. It is fortunate that the Bishop was not sitting in it. In the case of one of the smaller chapels the list of articles unhurt reads as follows: "One bench, the bell, stove-pipe, one elbow, one poker."

The probable loss at the present writing reaches nearly fifteen thousand dollars, and a full report is not in. Undoubtedly there will be a considerable amount of damage on neighboring reservations. Whether we have lost chapels is not yet known. The total property loss in our Indian field may reach as high as twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars.

We have cause for thankfulness that, so far as known, no dwelling houses were wrecked, or lives lost among our workers, but the destruction of property on farms is enormous. Barns and outbuildings are leveled far and wide, and there have been tremendous losses of stock and equipment.

This is the most serious and staggering loss that has been known since the coming of Bishop Hare, and our Indian people are dazed and distressed. It is all the more serious because of the very difficult financial conditions existing in South Dakota. Always generous in their gifts, and devoted to their Church and its needs, they are practically penniless today, and some of them are in real destitution. The overwhelming misfortune could not have occurred at a more unwelcome and difficult time.

The insurance on the destroyed property is only a small portion of the loss. Following out the policy inaugurated by Bishop Hare, in which he had the active co-operation and financial help of the late Mrs. George Cabot Ward, of New York, the Indian chapels have been self-insured under what was known as "The Ward Insurance Fund," later called the "Niobrara Insurance Fund." It was difficult, and some times impossible, to obtain satisfactory insurance through ordinary channels, because of the remoteness of the chapels and the lack of fire protection. The rates were high, and it seemed better to Bishop Hare and his successors to carry the ninety-six chapels with self-insurance, with the expectation of an occasional loss, rather than to incur the expense of carrying Old Line Insurance, where it could be obtained. This was, and still seems to be, a sound policy. For fifty years it has worked admirably, and has saved amounts in insurance premiums far larger than the present damage.

During the last ten years there have only been two losses by wind or fire, and the small premiums received from each congregation have built up a considerable fund. But the disaster of the present threatens to wipe out all that has thus been accumulated, and still leave large needs unmet.

This staggering loss of buildings places our Indian work in a desperate situation. Immediate steps toward restoration must be taken, in order that the congregation may, as far as possible, be housed before the coming of winter. But it means a probable expenditure of $25,000 to restore the lost buildings and furnishings, and repair the widespread damage in other respects; not half of this amount is available from the present assets.

South Dakota tells its story to the Church and asks sympathy and help. Information has been wired to the Department of Missions of the National Council, and Dr. John W. Wood replies that our appeal to the Church is cordially authorized.

The present superintending presbyter on the Crow Creek Reservation is the Rev. David W. Clark, at Ft. Thompson; while the Rev. Paul H. Barbour, recently of Hartford, Conn., takes over on July 1 the superintendency on Lower Brule. He will become, following the phrase used of Bishop Motoda, "The Priest of a Heap of Ruins."

THE PLIGHT AND THE HOPE OF THE ASSYRIAN CHURCH

CENTURIES ago when our forefathers were still heathen worshippers, of Thor and Wootan, the Church of the East, which had its center in Persia and Assyria, was carrying on one of the greatest missionary works of the Christian era, preaching Christ and His Kingdom all over the southern half of Asia, as far as the Pacific and Indian Oceans. The Roman Catholic missionaries, who came there in the Sixteenth Century still found outside of the large body of organized Christians in India (about 250,000) also small scattered groups, which, although deprived of the ministry of priests and bishops, were still holding services and baptizing children.

Since then, due to wars, plagues and migrations of Mongols, the fruits of the missionary labors of the Church of Assyria have been almost entirely wiped out in Tibet, China, Afghanistan, and the Islands of the Indian Ocean, only the Church of India remaining intact till this our day.

The recent World War almost annihilated the old Church center in Mesopotamia. The whole nation was dislodged and driven out of their ancient home. Many went to Russia and settled in Tiflis (some 25,000), the Persian settlement of Ourmia was rooted out, over 1,000 Church and school buildings have been destroyed and sacred and school books burned or taken away.

But even in spite of all this God has not forsaken them altogether. After the cataclysm was over He led them, out of their captivity and settled them through the good services of their late allies in the war, the British, near their old home land.

"It has been something much more like the return of the Jews of the captivity . . ." says Rev. Dr. Wigram, former head of Archbishop of Canterbury Mission in Assyria. . . . "the nation, indeed, is settled—what remains of it—where it may hope to live; the Church fabrics empty, have been returned to it; but the life, both of the Church and nation, has been sadly shattered. The Church books are gone; the generation of old priests is passing away, and none have been trained to take their place. The younger generation has grown up uneducated in the conditions of war and camp life; the whole morale has been sadly undermined by the pauperization consequent on a life on the bounty of the (British) government. . . . Yet in spite of all this," continues Dr. Wigram, "the life of this ancient and interesting Church . . . is by no means extinguished by the terrible ordeal. . . ."

Nay, the spirit of the nation has been purged by this visitation, and they are struggling desperately, young and old, leaders and plain people, to reach again their old levels. They are still, not only dreaming, but actually planning the extension of their old Church. The spirit, indeed, is willing, although the flesh is weak. This is the old Church "of the East" (outside of the boundaries of the Roman empire), the only one of all other Christian groups which was successful in converting the Mohammedans. Would it not be worth our while to rather assist them than to send out American missionaries who are handicapped in so many ways?

The Church Advisory Committee on the Succor to the Near East is hoping that a priest or two, who are experienced administrators and teachers, will come forward and offer their services for assisting the Assyrian Bishops and supervising our succor rights there in the tried area.

Only about $15,000 is needed in the first year to make this work possible, and the committee has arranged for one of the priests of our Church, the Rev. Dr. Theodore Hanunian, to assist the Metropolitan Mar Timotheus in obtaining funds from individual interested Churchmen and Churchwomen.

A few pledges, of decreasing sums, to be given to this work for five consecutive years will enable the committee to put this ancient Church on full working basis. All they need is a lifting and guiding hand, not a full support.

The striking act of Providence in leading a remnant of the nation and Church out of captivity would indicate that the Lord has plans for using these brave people and their Church in the work of His Kingdom in Asia. Assyrians educated and brought up in their old native atmosphere will be a great asset to all who work for peace in Western Asia. Neglected, they may become debased and a danger to all good efforts of the peacemakers.

PUBLIC READING

By a Country Rector

PUBLIC reading is an art. It is a science, and should be studied as a science, just as algebra or astronomy. As such it is governed by rules.

A science is definite, and the rules are accurate, as two and two make four, and can never be manipulated to make anything else.

In the science of public reading, a few rules are sufficient, and these rules hold good at all time. If these are remembered it will not be necessary to study books on reading, as one can become a good reader with a little practice.

Every public reader should have one thought always uppermost in his mind, and never lose sight of it—that the object in reading before an audience is for the purpose of conveying to the mind of the hearer, not only the printed or written words, but the accurate meaning of what is written, and he should always remember that as a public reader, he is a teacher—an instructor.

Having this ideal fully fixed in his mind, he should:

1. Gain for himself the exact meaning the writer intends to convey, and so enter into full accord with his spirit, as to pass on his thoughts to others.

2. Every public reader, or every one reading for the benefit of others, should read over the subject matter beforehand, so as to learn what are the leading thoughts to be brought out, and to emphasize the right words for conveying the true thought of the writer. Every word and every syllable should be clearly enunciated. This can be done without undue emphasis where it does not belong.

When there are two thoughts in a sentence, the conjunction is not to be emphasized, but the two main thoughts, e. g., "She had black hair, and a brilliant complexion." The hair and complexion are the objects to be brought forward, but the words to receive especial emphasis, are "black" and "brilliant." Give the word "and" as little stress as possible. In like manner, when the conjunction is "but," it would be better to slur it over than to over-emphasize it.

One more word regarding emphasis. Emphasis should seldom be placed on small words, as prepositions, except where there occur two or more prepositions of contrast, as "He came into the house, and went out of the house."

The reader or speaker should have no personal peculiarities in pronunciation, emphasis, posture or movement, because they tend to obscure to a degree the subject he is reading. Peculiarities detract from the desired effect.

When a reader can forget himself and throw his whole spirit into his subject, he can the better impart to the hearer the thoughts of the writer.

In reading the Service of the Church, the personality of the reader must be submerged as far as possible.

Unless proper pauses are made, and the proper words emphasized, the meaning is entirely lost. Any irregularity will arrest the attention of some in the congregation, and break for them the continuity of thought, and cause them to lose any benefit that might otherwise be derived.

A mispronunciation or emphasis on the wrong syllable or word, will have the same effect. Every reader should inform himself as to the correct pronunciation, where there is any doubt, as well as to the meaning of the words and the whole sentence.

One peculiarity of some of the clergy is that they have two rules for pronunciation—one is, if possible, to pronounce correctly in conversation—the other if it is by any means possible, to pronounce incorrectly in reading the Service, and especially in the Prayers. Creator is frequently called Creeaytawr, Mediator is called Mediaty-tawr, and Deafend is Deefend and direct is Direect.

After some clergymen have read the Service for a number of years, they become careless and their reading becomes mechanical and monotonous. They forget the fact that they are reading for those in the pews, as well as for themselves, and frequently slur over the words or so run them together as to make them unintelligible. Especially is this the case when there are any in the congregation unfamiliar with the Service.

One reading or praying should adopt no attitude that would distract the thoughts of the congregation, as even during the Prayers, there are always some among the worshippers, who watch the minister all the time.

Some imagine that various attitudes or movements add to emphasis or devotion. These are only distracting peculiarities or idiosyncrasies; and peculiarities or idiosyncrasies at once mark a person as queer.

The dominant thought of a reader should always be, to convey the fullest meaning of what is being read to the congregation, so that they in turn can concentrate their minds on the subject. In case of the prayers, they can so follow the reader as to make them their own, and in that way they too will pray with the spirit and with the understanding.

It is true that the Prayers are not addressed to the congregation; nevertheless the words should be so clearly enunciated that the congregation can clearly follow, and intelligently and heartily say, Amen.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN KEBLE.

Mr. Editor:

I think there must be many of your readers who feel gratitude to the saintly "John Keble," not only as the author of the "Christian Year," but also as the teacher and inspirer of Charlotte Yonge, whose books have influenced the last three generations.

The Church Schools of Hursley, in which John Keble taught for thirty years, are now condemned, and the question is shall new Church Schools be built at a cost of £3,000, or shall the local Education Authority be asked to provide Council Schools?

It is well to keep in memory the great ideals of the past, and it is inconceivable that Hursley with all its traditions of Church teaching should have a Board School, that the place where John Keble taught his little flock on Sundays and week days (as did Charlotte Yonge in the companion-parish of Otterbourne), should not still continue to hold up the banner of Churchmanship.

Sir George Cooper, Bart., of Hursley Park, has kindly expressed willingness to provide a first-rate site, and several friends have sent donations, but many more are needed. All sums will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Rev. Canon Robinson, The Close, Winchester, or Miss Yonge, 6 Clifton Terrace, Winchester (England).

ANNIVERSARY OF THE COUNCIL OF NICAIA.

Mr. Editor:

At the meeting of the Convocation of the Third District of the Diocese of Central New York, held today at Windsor, N. Y., it was voted that the Secretary send to the Church papers an item to the effect that this Convocation is in sympathy with the proposal made, I believe, by the Rev. George P. Atwater, D. D., that the Episcopal Church adopt some means of observing, next year, the sixteen hundredth anniversary of the Council of Nicaea.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl M. Block, D. D.

THE SWEET BRIAR CONFERENCE.

THE Virginia Summer School of Religious Education moved from Charlottesville into more adequate and suitable quarters at Sweet Briar. This change was largely due to the increasing number of young people attending the Conference. The enrollment in the first week of the School has exceeded that of last year and the anticipations of the Committee. The most interesting feature of the personnel is the fact that quite a half are "young people," eligible for membership in our Service Leagues. Two courses are being given—one for counselors and leaders and one for young people themselves. The first deals very largely with the rationale of the Movement, and the second with such subjects as program planning, the conduct of a meeting, the preparation of papers, etc. It is note-worthy that the young people are taking courses in the English Bible, in Social Service, and are endeavoring to equip themselves along different lines for service in their parishes in the fall.

The Sweet Briar Conference is only one of a number which tell the same story. The Youth Movement in the Church has vitality and great potential power. Some of these young people are giving up their only vacation time to attend these Schools, and many are coming at their own expense. Every League and Fellowship should be represented at one or more of these Conferences.

Perhaps the most convincing achievement of the Conference period has been the interest of the clergy and the more mature Church workers in the seriousness of the young people. The mutual association of old and young, clerical and lay, in the vigorous familiarity of the Summer Conference is conducive to the best that the Church can accomplish in the upbuilding of morale or parochial and diocesan spirit. Let members of our Leagues who have attended the Summer Conferences publish abroad not only the value of this assembly, but also the results of their discussions with members of Leagues from other parts of the country.

"WHAT ARE WE WORTH?"

("The Fellowship"—Swampscott, Mass.)

Whenever I see a company of young people, so bright-eyed, so alert, so eager in pursuit of their own pleasures and purposes, I wonder what estimate they place upon themselves. Of course, I do not mean how many dollars they possess, nor how much real estate they may chance to own. These only indicate material possessions. What we are worth has reference to our real personal value, what we really are.

First, what are we worth to our families? We know full well that whether we are attractive or not, bright or dull, thoughtful or careless, our parents would not set a monetary value on us. To them we are priceless. Perhaps their rating of us is not warranted, but that is a matter which is up to us.

Then, what are we worth to the community in which we live? Some of us may be inclined to base our estimate of our value in this respect on the social standing of our parents. This has nothing to do with it. Our worth to the community is based on our own qualities as individuals, and the estimate the community places upon us is seen in the laws they make for our protection, the opportunities for our education.

Also, what are we worth to the Fellowship? Apart from all service we may render when called upon, we all are of value to the Fellowship. No one is singled out because of strength, wealth or social position as being of value to the organization. Shall we be positive factors in helping to make for the betterment of the Fellowship, or shall we be ciphers, simply filling otherwise empty spaces and adding to the passing pleasure of others, but having no abiding worth of our own? This is for ourselves to answer.

After some years, we shall pass on leaving The Fellowship in the hands of others, who will fill our places. They will wear faces very much like ours, will speak with voices that seem echoes of our own; will feel moved by the same emotions that move us. What do we want The Fellowship to become? How do we want it to rank in the scale of advancement? We are a part of its working force; every one of us desires ultimate success for The Fellowship. In the old myth the world was held on the shoulders of Atlas. In the same way let us be the Atlas of The Fellowship. It rests with us to "carry on and on and on!"

Alabama Young People Hold Annual Council.

The Second Annual Council of the Diocesan Young People's Service League of Alabama was held at Magnolia Beach, Post Office, Fairhope, Alabama, on the eastern shore of Mobile Bay, June 11 to 18, inclusive. The attendance was practically double what it was last year, and the reports of the officers and of local Leagues showed a definite and pronounced advance during the past twelve months.

There was a daily Administration of the Holy Communion, three conference courses each forenoon, except the last day, which was devoted entirely to the business of the Council. Supervised recreation occupied each afternoon and every evening there was a Young People's Service League Devotional Meeting, led by one of the young people.

The following officers were elected:

President—Miss Virginia Wilson, 317 North Joachim Street, Mobile.

Vice-President—Duane Lyon, Church of the Advent Birmingham.

Secretary—Miss Ann Elizabeth Young, Trinity Church, Mobile.

Treasurer—Miss Lida Holt, Church of the Ascension, Montgomery.

Tentative arrangements were made for the Third Annual Council, to be held at the same place early in June next year. The number of Diocesan Counselors was increased, three being added to those of last year.

The camp feature of the Council was under the supervision of the Rev. Mr. V. C. McMaster, Director of Young People's Work in the Diocese. Rev. P. N. McDonald, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education, was present a part of the time, along with several of the Mobile clergy and three ministers from other parts of the Diocese. Provision was made for sending Miss Virginia Wilson as the representative of the Alabama Young People's Service League to the Sewanee Summer Training School, to take part in the organization of a Provincial Federation of the League.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A CITY OF GOD—AN OUTPOST OF FRIENDSHIP.

A World Court, the League of Nations and other international associations all help to bring about world peace, but none of them nor all of them could accomplish that great end if the spirit of controversy in the hearts of men still demands a outlet through the shedding of blood. Brotherly love grows through friendly intercourse between the people of two nations, and there is no place where there is more fertile soil for the seed of international brotherhood than in the City of Toronto, Canada.

A friend who had been spending a week with the Rotarians in this beautiful city said to the writer upon his arrival at the National Conference of Social Workers of the Episcopal Church, "the middle name of every person in Toronto is courtesy." A stay of nearly a week abundantly proved to me the truth of this statement.

The imposing helmets of the police are truly awe-inspiring, but their kindly manners and eagerness to render any assistance possible to the enquiring stranger soon relieves one from any impression of fear created by the uniform.

The capital of the Province of Ontario is truly an ideal spot for the meeting of every sort of convention that is not confined by its nature or constitution to the limits of the United States. Especially is this true of any gathering of the Episcopalians, for the Anglican is in evidence in all directions here. The Cathedral of St. James is a beautiful and impressive building, and the recently unveiled memorial to the Canadian soldiers of the World War catches the eye of the visitor and invites a closer inspection of the sacred precincts. St. Paul's Church, however, is perhaps more impressive to the stranger than even the Cathedral with its capacity for seating nearly three thousand people, its deep chancel and raised sanctuary finished in white marble, with its white walls. There are other and strikingly beautiful buildings among Toronto's sixty-four Anglican Churches, notably St. Anne's, with its dome decorated with Biblical scenes and persons.

The glory of this city, however, is not only its spacious churches, but the splendid congregations that fill them. Its people are essentially religious. Their life centers around the Church. The reading of the banns of matrimony in the church may be and frequently is a substitute for the legal license always required in this country, thereby laying the religious emphasis upon the state of matrimony for at least three weeks before the ceremony. May we not believe that this is one reason why divorce is almost unknown in Toronto?

A Sunday in this great city of more than half a million people was truly an inspiring day for a clergyman from the United States. One is aware of the atmosphere of the Sabbath, which permeates society from the closed filling stations on the street corners, to the baptismal party, of more than a hundred persons, from their dress evidently the leaders of social life.

The great coliseum holding ten thousand people, and with excellent acoustic properties, which makes it easy to speak to a huge audience, offers a gathering place large enough for any convention. It is within easy reach of points within the United States so that it should be frequently chosen as a convention city. Such choice will not only give organization members a delightful trip and a pleasant stay among congenial, kind-hearted people, but it will do wonders toward building up international friendship, for these Canadian cousins of ours have a cosmopolitan viewpoint and a sense of international responsibility that it will be well for us to cultivate to bring us to a better recognition of our duties as members of God's great world family.

EDUCATE THROUGH INFORMATION.

In discussing the progress of Social Service throughout the country at the recent conference in Toronto, Dean Lathrop said that the information coming to his office was very fragmentary, and Mr. Newbury, who compiles the reports from the various departments, stated that seventeen out of eighty-seven dioceses failed to make any report to him in response to his questionnaire. This is nearly twenty-five per cent remaining silent. It may be that these diocesan committees had nothing to report because parishes had failed to report to them.

If parochial social service committees would send accounts of their activities to diocesan headquarters, and take some interest in doing so, it would be easier to ascertain what is going on in the Church in this field, and other communities would receive the benefit of the experience of those who are moving along new lines.

We give the following extract from Mr. Newbury's report as being suggestive of lines along which reports could be made:

Sixteen of the seventy dioceses had well-organized parish committees.

Twenty-seven gave direct relief.

Seven used diocesan papers.

Only ten reported jail work.

Twenty-seven keep in touch with legislation.

Forty report lack of interest among the clergy.

Twenty-seven emphasize discussion groups.

Seventeen cooperate with secular agencies.

Twenty-four cooperate with other Christian bodies.

Seven have made surveys of institutions.

Twenty-four have inadequate funds.

If your parish is busy along any of the above lines, write to the Chairman of your Diocesan Social Service, or to your Executive Secretary and tell them what you are doing. This will enable them to make a more intelligent and complete answer to Mr. Newbury's questionnaire next year.

It should be the object in most cases to increase the number of dioceses reporting certain activities in the above list, but there are two items that should be reduced:

First of these is the number (forty) reporting lack of interest among the clergy. It is a pathetic fact that there are still many earnest ministers who are totally unaware that Social Service is the practice of Christianity, and who look upon it as some sort of modern innovation that is liable to detract from the interest in church attendance and contributions. As a matter of fact nothing will build up the congregations and general interest in the church more rapidly than an active and intelligent interest in community welfare, and the sooner we can bring all of our clergy to realize this the better it will be for the Church at large.

The other item that should be reduced in number is, "Twenty-seven dioceses report direct relief." It is now the purpose of every secular relief agency to reduce to the minimum direct gifts to its beneficiaries. The motto, "Help others to help themselves," is becoming more and more universal, and the Church should follow the example of such organizations as rapidly as possible.

Even with the best of management, it is impossible in some sparsely settled communities to offer any relief, except that of a direct gift to a needy case, but in most instances, it is both wiser and better for a Social Service Department to refer such a case to some agency whose business it is to render the kind of relief needed.

TORONTO CONFERENCE OF THE SOCIAL WORKERS OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH AND OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND IN CANADA, JUNE 21-25, 1924

NO feature of American Church life has developed more rapidly and been so prolific of good results as has the Conference of the Social Service Workers of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Under the skillful leadership and guidance of Dean Charles P. Lathrop, the first of these meetings was held in Milwaukee in 1921, the second at Wickford, R. I., in 1922, last year's in Washington, D. C., and this year, Toronto, Canada. The gatherings are held in connection with the National Conference of Social Workers, a plan which enables delegates to attend both the deliberations of the Church Conference, and the other larger and very inspiring gathering of all those interested in social betterment throughout the country.

Each meeting of the leaders in social work of our own Church has shown increased numbers present, a more extended program, and the resultant spread of helpful plans over a wider area of Church life.

This year's conference was held in Havel College, which is an ideal place, where the meals were served in the same building that housed the meetings for discussions, and luncheons and suppers were continuations of private exchange of views on the subjects previously considered in the public meetings.

The arrangements made by the Anglican Church through the Rev. Canon C. W. Vernon could not have been more complete for the entertainment of the conference.

On Saturday afternoon, June 21, a reception was given to the delegates on the lawn of the college at which Bishop Sweeney of Toronto (in gaiters and apron) welcomed those present in a most cordial and gracious address, after which a delightful hour was spent in getting acquainted with each other—and with the refreshments.

The Rev. Bernard I. Bell's address in St. James' Cathedral on Saturday night preparatory to the opening Communion Service early Sunday morning, was most impressive, and stressed the fact that every helpful deed had a sacramental aspect, so that the activities of the social workers all have a spiritual background.

Sunday in Toronto was a truly inspiring day. Such congregations as filled the Anglican Churches and earnestly participated in the services, including the chanting, filled the visiting clergy with delight. The rectors were most hospitable in their invitations to the visiting clergy and filled their pulpits, giving them every opportunity to spread the social gospel. At four o'clock in the afternoon in St. Paul's Church, Dr. Bell again delivered an excellent address to a congregation of some twelve hundred people.

Monday morning the conference convened in business session, and elected its officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, Dean Charles P. Lathrop of the National Offices in New York; First Vice-President, the Rev. Charles L. Street, Chicago, Ill.; Second Vice-President, the Rev. R. Cary Montague, Richmond, Va.; Secretary, the Rev. R. P. Kreidler, Scranton, Penn. Mr. Alfred Newberry stated that seventy of the eighty-seven dioceses had reported to him on the questionnaire, which he had sent out asking for the aims, objects, and achievements of their social service departments. Forty of these seventy dioceses gave as one of the chief hindrances to more efficient work, "Lack of interest among the clergy," showing that a large amount of inspirational education yet remains to be done throughout the Church. Some interesting and illuminating discussion followed the conditions revealed by Mr. Newberry's report.

The Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., then read an excellent paper on "Diocesan Social Service on $200 a Year," reporting splendid achievements attained in his diocese with a very small amount of money. Mrs. Holmes, of Chapel Hill, N. C., supplemented his statements, and showed how the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary was enthusiastically behind the Social Service activities of the Diocese and was producing practical results. A delightful drive around Toronto and its environs was arranged for the afternoon. That night a paper was read by Miss Barney of the Child Welfare Bureau of Kentucky, emphasizing the splendid work that has been accomplished by Miss Carpenter of the National Department in surveying children's institutions in Louisville, Ky., after which Miss Cleaver, of New York, illustrated with slides the practical accomplishments of social service in a large hospital like St. Luke's.

Most of Tuesday morning was taken up with reports and discussions. The Rev. Canon D. S. Dunseath, of Newark, N. J., read a most interesting paper showing the way in which he was educating the Church people of his Diocese in social service through correspondence and the mailing of literature, and having on his lists more than fifteen hundred people, whom he felt were being reached effectively by this method.

Investigation of the vexing question of how to improve our local jails was discussed by the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, of Augusta, Georgia, who, after numerous letters to the clergy of his diocese which produced no effect persuaded his social service committee to go with him in person on a tour of the state. Miss Vernon's paper on this subject brought out the fact that the jails of Rhode Island were in no better condition than those of the States in the South. In this connection the Rev. Carl Barnette, of the Federal Council of Churches, also spoke on this subject from a nation-wide experience, which shows that interest is slowly but surely being awakened. This is a subject particularly close to the heart of Dean Lathrop, and on which his department is expending a large amount of energy and research. This discussion was completed by an address by the Honorable E. Jones, police magistrate of Toronto, who spoke with much wit and vigor, and invited members of the conference to "sit in with him" at his court the following morning. He has a system, whereby through his probation officers he has a confidential report before him on each prisoner when the case comes to trial, thereby enabling him to weigh the evidence given by the prisoner himself with far more accuracy than if he were entirely ignorant of the man's past record. He makes liberal use of the suspended sentence and probation systems with most excellent results.

The first topic for Tuesday afternoon was a comparatively new one for discussion in Church gatherings, namely, that of divorce. Since, however, in 1887, only one out of every seventeen marriages culminated in the divorce court, and in 1922, one out of every seven proved disastrous, it is certainly time for the Church to open her eyes and see what she can do to stop this dreadful evil. The paper of Dr. Hornell Hart, Professor of Sociology of Iowa University, on this subject was without doubt one of the outstanding features of the conference. Dr. Hart is a scientist, but one of those scientists who are appearing in increasing numbers who recognize that religion has a large place in the field of science, even in the research department of the field. He, therefore, approached his subject by the scientific method, but with a religious background. In Cincinnati, Judge Watson has adopted a new plan in handling divorces. When a suit is filed, he puts a trained social worker on the case for the purpose of trying to bring about a reconciliation. The results have been most gratifying, and in a large per cent of the cases the suit has been dropped and the couples have been persuaded to proceed peacefully along the matrimonial road. In those instances, however, where this happy accomplishment has not been affected, a careful record of the details of the case has been preserved, not merely of the legal papers filed, but of the findings of the social worker. Dr. Hart's method was to take one hundred of these records and carefully analyze them, so as to approach the remedy for divorce in the same way that the cure of yellow fever and malaria has been affected by discovering first of all its cause. His paper in full makes most interesting reading, and will be well worth procuring, when it is published with the other proceedings of this conference. Dr. Hart arrives at three definite conclusions from his examination of these hundred cases. First, that ninety-five per cent involved directly sex problems. Second, that divorces result twice as often when there was no religious service at the marriage, it having been performed by a justice of the peace. Third, where the wife is under twenty years of age and the husband more than five years her senior, the result is disastrous in the proportion of seven to one.

Tuesday night brought another original feature on the program of the conferences in addresses by leaders in the Federal Council of Churches. Dr. Alva W. Taylor, "The Church of Christ (Disciples)," spoke first in a very entertaining and instructive manner, chiefly on the subject of Church Unity, and objects for universal Christian consideration, such as world peace, application of Christian principles to industry, and fighting alcoholism and narcotics. The Rev. F. Ernest Johnson followed Dr. Taylor, emphasizing the important contribution that the Episcopal Church might give to the Federal Council if it would cooperate heartily in the aims of that organization.

Perhaps the most enlightening of these speakers was Dr. Lapp, who substituted for Father Ryan of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. He told us quite frankly that the work of this organization had not met with the universal approval of the Roman Catholic Church, and, at first, had experienced much difficulty in maintaining itself in the face of opposition from certain bishops, each one of whom he explained, was supreme within his own diocese, so that the difficulties produced by individualism are not so absent from the workings of the Roman Church as some of us have been lead to believe.

Group meetings of the Church Mission of Help, Girls' Friendly Society, the Woman's Auxiliary, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and National Association of City Missionaries, were held while the executive body of the conference was in session, and on Wednesday morning reports of the results of these meetings were made to the conference, showing the value of the discussion of their social service activities which had taken place. The Rev. W. H. Bliss, President of the White Cross, an organization for the suppression of the use of narcotics, presented an earnest plea for the Church's help in this fight with an array of alarming figures showing the rapid growth of the evil throughout the world. The Rev. William T. Weston's report of the splendid activities of the Seaman's Institute in a well-nigh world-wide field, met with the cordial approval of the conference, and was heartily commended in a resolution adopted with enthusiasm.

The last afternoon was devoted to a discussion of "Ethical Forces in Advancing Standards in Industry," introduced in a paper by Miss Van Kleeck of the Russell Sage Foundation, than whom there is no better informed nor more interesting speaker in the country.

The meeting place for next year will be determined by the selection of the National Conference of Social Workers, and no doubt another twelve months' experience will be marked by new advances in the importance and value of this gathering.

Commencement Exercises, University of the South.

Twenty-seven students in the college and one in the theological school of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., were awarded degrees at the fifty-sixth commencement exercises, and four others in the theological school were graduated.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was awarded by the board of trustees to the Rev. Charles Wellington Robinson, of Bronxville, N. Y.; the Rev. Randolph Ray, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City; the Rev. Francis B. Nash, of Sarasota, Fla.; and the Rev. Takaharu Takamatsu, of Japan, and was conferred by the chancellor, Bishop Gailor, upon the Rt. Rev. Harry Roberts Carson, Missionary Bishop of Haiti, and the Rev. James Wilmer Gresham, dean of Grace Church Cathedral, San Francisco, Cal., to whom it had been awarded in previous years.

The doctor of civil law degree was awarded by the board to Huger Wilkinson Jervey, dean of the law department of Columbia University; Dr. LeGrand Guerry, of Columbia, S. C., and Col. Z. D. Harrison, of Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. Huger W. Jervey delivered the commencement oration and the Rev. David Cady Wright, rector of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., preached the commencement sermon. Edward R. Holmes, Jr., of Mississippi, was the saluatorian, and Egbert B. Freyer, of Georgia, the valedictorian.

The faith and belief in the plans for the University, as laid down by the founders, which are an adaptation of the English university system, were reaffirmed by the board of trustees and decision was made to carry on the development of the plans with such modifications as the present times demand.

A new dormitory for college students, to be known as the John B. Cannon hall, was authorized, and work on it will begin in the fall.

The board strongly recommended the addition of a department of education and a department of religious education in the college; and appointed a committee to cooperate with committees from the Province of Sewanee and the Province of the Southwest and report upon a practical plan whereby all the educational institutions of the Episcopal Church in those two provinces might be brought into a federation, and other institutions developed, so as to give a complete system of education under the Church, with Sewanee as the apex.

The board went on record as favoring the application of normal increases in income to the increase of salaries, and approved a proposed increase in salaries for the year 1924-25 as presented by Vice-Chancellor Finney.

The Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Ga., was elected professor of theology; W. Vann Parker, M. A., of North Carolina, was elected acting assistant professor of mathematics; John M. Scott, M. S., was advanced to assistant professor of chemistry; and Dr. M. S. Bennett, head coach of athletics, was elected professor of physical education. The Rev. Walter C. Whitaker, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Knoxville, Tenn., was elected a member of the board of regents to fill the unexpired term of the Rev. Stewart McQueen, deceased.

The Rev. Charles L. Wells, dean of the theological school, was given leave of absence to answer the call of the Bishops in China and Japan, and a call from St. John's College, Shanghai, to give lectures in their theological schools during the year 1925-26.

Bishop Bratton, for the DuBose Memorial Lectureship Foundation, reported that the endowment of $20,000 being raised by the committee, was expected to be completed by November 1.

Hobart College Commencement.

The ninety-ninth Commencement of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., marking the termination of one of the most prosperous years in the history of the institution, was celebrated on Monday, June 16. First, degrees were conferred upon seventeen members of the senior class, and honorary degrees were given to five distinguished representatives of the Church, Education and the Press.

The recipients of honorary degrees were: The Rt. Rev. Frank William Sterrett, Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Erie, who was for one year a student at Hobart, LL. D.; Benjamin Ficklin Finney, President and Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South, LL. D.; the Rev. Roeliff Hasbrouck Brooks, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Albany,

S. T. D.; Howard Rollin Patch, Hobart, 1910, Professor of English at Smith College, Litt. D.; Herbert Bayard Swope, Executive Editor of the New York World, L. H. D. Dr. Swope, as the commencement speaker, delivered a brilliant address on "Journalism, an Instrument of Civilization."

Announcement was made that Hobart had received by the will of the late Beverly Chew, of Geneva, a graduate of the College, in the class of 1869, a gift of $50,000 for the endowment of a professorship of English literature. It was announced also that Dean William Pitt Durfee was about to begin his first vacation since his appointment to the faculty in 1884. Leave of absence for the coming year was recently voted to the Dean by the Board of Trustees.

The Call for the Thirty-ninth Annual Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States hereby issues through its Executive Committee this Official Call to all its members and to all men and older boys of the Church to attend the Thirty-ninth Annual Convention in Albany, New York, October 8 to 12, 1924.

It is strongly urged that Chapters begin immediately to plan for representation at this important Convention. Individual Brotherhood men and boys, particularly those residing within a two hundred mile radius of Albany, are asked to start now to make the arrangements necessary to insure their attendance.

To all men and older boys of the Church, who are not Brotherhood members, we not only open wide the doors of the Convention and urge you to come, but we earnestly urge you to join with Brotherhood members in making this a great Churchmen's Conference.

The presence of a large number of our Bishops and other Clergy will be an inspiration to the laymen, and we hope that such inspiration may be an outstanding feature of the Convention.

We very earnestly ask all who read this Call to use the Convention Prayer and to join with us daily in intercessions to Him, Who can make this Convention of great usefulness to the Kingdom.

Prayer.

Almighty God, Who hast called us to the high dignity of being workers together with Thee for the advancement of Thy Kingdom, and dost vouchsafe Thine aid in all our doings, grant we humbly pray, Thy presence and guidance in the coming Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Quicken the hearts, purify the minds and strengthen the wills of all its members, that they may go forth to live and to labor more faithfully for Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Our First Permanent Church Opened in Dominican Republic.

Less than a year ago, a note appearing in The Spirit of Missions for August, 1923, from the Rev. A. H. Beer, of the Dominican Republic, made special reference to a mission chapel much needed at Consuelo, the largest sugar estate in the District of Cacoris. The little church, St. Gabriel's, is now all but complete and was to be opened with much rejoicing and deep thankfulness on the first Sunday after Trinity, June 22. It is our first permanent church in the Dominican Republic.

This is the outcome of countless patient weary hours of work, and prayer and hope deferred. Mr. Beer reached a point where he dreamed about it at night, but he is now rewarded by the accomplishment of what no one would have believed possible, knowing the conditions first found there.

When he went out to Consuelo in 1920 it was to find the people being exploited by Negro agitators, and "following any old way of living." He set up a very temporary altar and held services. The people were drinking rum and swearing, with no regard for the things Christian people love. There are some three or four thousand English-speaking Negroes.

Eventually he had more than a hundred people worshipping, under an old tin roof, with boxes for seats on a mud floor, but in an atmosphere of reverence, with no one who was not respectably dressed and taking an intelligent part in the service. A chapel became a necessity.

The sugar centrale provided the land and material; the latter amounting to some $2,000 in value. It was necessary to secure gifts of about $750 for building and putting in the altar, pews, etc. This was done, though the painting has still to wait until money can be found for it.

The centrale managers have cooperated from the first, and are much pleased with the little church; so, needless to add, are the missionary and the friends whose gifts built it.

In spite of local needs the people have not been unmindful of others, and have sent special gifts for Porto Rico and for Japan, as well as their Lenten offering for the General Church.

Japanese Clergyman Receives Degree.

The Rev. Takaharu Takamatsu, rector of St. Mary's Church, Kyoto, was among the recipients of the degree of Doctor of Divinity at the recent commencement of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. Dr. Takamatsu acted as interpreter of Bishop Gallor's addresses and sermons on several occasions during the Bishop's recent visit to Japan. He is one of the most brilliant of the Japanese clergy, a graduate from St. Paul's, Tokyo. He studied at Harvard and then entered the Cambridge Theological School, whence he returned to his native country, where he has been one of the leaders in the development of the Japanese Church.

It was regarded at Sewanee as a happy circumstance that in the strained relations which have arisen between Japan and the United States in consequence of the exclusion law, the University was privileged to confer this honor upon a Japanese who is representative of a Christian organization in Japan which can interpret to the people of that country sentiments of brotherhood shared alike by Japanese and Americans.

The Valle Crucis Summer School.

The "Valle Crucis Summer School for Religious Education" is the latest Summer School announced. The sessions are to be held at the Valle Crucis school buildings in Western North Carolina August 23-29. It is expected that the attendance will come very largely from the Carolina dioceses. Miss Mabel Lee Cooper will be in charge of the classes in teacher training. Correspondence may be had with the Rev. Preston B. Burke of Valle Crucis. The school is being directed by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Western North Carolina.

Pageantry at Sewanee Summer School.

The course in pageantry at the Sewanee Summer Training School this year will be in charge of the Rev. Clarence Parker, who has given it for two years past, once with the assistance of Mrs. Parker. The Sewanee School having been forced to divide because of increased enrollment, Mr. Parker will give the course in both Adults' and Young People's Divisions.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Historic Celebration at Jamestown.

July 6 next being the third Sunday after Trinity is the anniversary date of the first celebration of the Holy Communion on Jamestown Island by the Rev. Robert Hunt, of the Church of England, minister of the colony which established English civilization upon our shores.

At four o'clock on the afternoon of July 6 Bishops, priests, and people will assemble at Jamestown Island to celebrate at the beautiful Robert Hunt Memorial Shrine (erected by the Colonial Dames of America in Virginia) these early beginnings. The address will be made by the Rt. Rev. St. George Tucker, D. D., of the Virginia Seminary. At the celebration of the Holy Communion there will be upon the altar in addition to the memorial silver presented to the Shrine, the old Jamestown silver dating from 1661, for many years in use at Jamestown, and subsequently passing into the possession of Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, which inherited from the Jamestown Church the position of Court Church of Colonial Virginia.

In addition to the services at Jamestown, there will be a memorial celebration at Bruton Parish Church at 11:15 o'clock the same morning at which the old silver will be used and in which the Bishops will take part. Also by special request of the Bishop of the Diocese appropriate prayers are to be made in all the churches of the diocese, and the attention of the people called to the significance of the anniversary.

Transportation from Williamsburg to Jamestown and return may be had for one dollar per individual in full machine loads, but it will be well for visitors to book accommodations in advance as facilities are limited. The Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, Williamsburg, Va., will be glad to render all possible assistance.

It is purposed to inaugurate a movement to bring home to our people far and wide the importance of the beginnings at Jamestown, where were laid the foundations of our English civilization, our most sacred religion, and representative government (the first assembly met in the church at Jamestown, July 30, 1619). These solemn memories and venerable traditions are rare and sacred, rich in influence upon character. We must see that they become the possession of all men. We seek to revive again the old parish of James City, to build up a large associate membership scattered throughout the length and breadth of our land, who will know and appreciate the things for which we stand, and who will be kept in touch through letter and bulletin with this our common shrine. Membership in this Jamestown Church Association will be open to all men without in any way changing their local allegiance. On the afternoon of the sixth an offering will be received, one-half of which will go to promote the Indians, a cause which has always this plan and the remainder be applied through the missionary treasurer of Bruton Parish Church to work among appealed to us as being singularly appropriate at our annual celebrations.

The Diocesan Camp.

For years there has been a real need for a center in the Diocese where boys and girls and men and women might gather for recreation purposes, under proper direction and leadership. This vision is about to be realized in the proposed Diocesan Camp, located at "Bayville," near Ocean Park, Princess Anne County, near the Norfolk and Southern Railway and a public highway. It is expected to be ready for occupancy July 15, this year. In the future, the plan is to have it open for four months, June, July, August and September. It is in an ideal location for surf bathing and fishing, and within five minutes walk of Chesapeake Bay. There are sufficient grounds for recreational games, and also there are fine woods. A Lodge is to be erected immediately which will accommodate forty persons. A rustic open air altar will provide inspiring opportunity for worship. Summer excursion rates, and a charge of approximately a dollar a day will offer the advantages of the seashore to all Church people throughout the Diocese. Besides, the Camp will be at the disposal of organizations for parties throughout the year.

The plan is to admit as many as forty boys at a time for a period of, say, ten days, and then for a similar period have the same number of girls. A fine Diocesan consciousness will thus be created by the bringing together of people from different sections. Various organizations will be accommodated at different periods, such as the Boy Scouts, the Girls' Friendly, the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Young People's Societies, Church Schools, etc. The Camp will be open to all alike at no cost except the per diem expense. A schedule will be arranged to accommodate the greatest number possible. Committees have already been appointed, and are working out the details under the general supervision of Bishop Thomson.

The Diocesan Executive Committee has shown its interest and given its endorsement by an appropriation of $2,500. It is estimated that an additional $3,000 will be required to make the Camp a livable place for happy Diocesan groups.

The Committee is asking every organization in the Diocese to make some contribution. Besides, individuals are being asked for subscriptions.

It is believed and hoped that a generous response will be made throughout the Diocese immediately.

The Diocesan Executive Secretary, the Rev. Robert A. Goodwin, 517 Law Building, Norfolk, will act as secretary and treasurer. All contributions and correspondence should be addressed to him.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Cornerstone of New Church Placed.

On Sunday afternoon, June 15, the cornerstone of the new St. Mark's Church, Newark, the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector, was placed by the Bishop of the Diocese. The program of this church within fifteen years has been very remarkable. Under the Rev. Albert W. H. Thompson, whose death was a great loss to the church, excellent progress has been made, and the Rev. Mr. Pitt took up the work with great vigor and a very hearty response from his people. The church soon proved too small for the congregation and after much consideration it was determined to make transepts of the old church and build towards the east, so as to double the capacity of the church and make further enlargement possible if growth required. A large congregation of parishioners and friends came together on a beautiful Sunday afternoon for the laying of the cornerstone and the Bishop made the address. With a carefully prepared financial policy, there is good hope that the new church will be soon in use and be paid for in a few years.

Anniversary Observed.

The fortieth anniversary of the opening of St. Paul's Church, Newark, for Divine Service, was held on St. Peter's Day, and it was the great privilege of the parish to have as the preacher, Bishop W. Blair Roberts, of South Dakota, who was brought as a little child to the rectory. His father, the Rev. William Roberts, was rector of the parish from 1882 to 1889. The parish had been founded in 1853. Under the Rev. Mr. Roberts, the church, after serious financial troubles, was finished and opened for use. A brother of the preacher is the Rev. Paul Roberts, the Dean of the Cathedral, and a sister is Principal of St. Margaret's School, at Boise, Idaho. The Bishop of the Diocese was present and spoke briefly, making a plea especially for the building up of the endowment fund. The Rev. Frederick A. Coleman is now the rector of St. Paul's.

Marking A Notable Point.

On the eve of St. Peter's Day, the cornerstone of the new Church of the Incarnation, at Ampere, East Orange, was laid by the Bishop of the Diocese, marking a notable point in the progress of a very important work begun in 1911. The Rev. Carolus R. Webb has served the Church for ten years and under him very noteworthy progress has been made, from the temporary church building, which will now become a parish house, in the purchase of the large piece of ground upon which the new church stands, and the rectory beside it, with the work upon the Church to cost about $30,000 now well advanced. A company of interested people have worked hard, always venturing quite beyond their means, and then catching up, encouraged by calls from the Bishop's Church Extension Fund to buy land or build. Ten of the clergy were present and they, beside the Bishop, the rector, the architect and contractor, spoke, and the history of the parish was read. Miss Cornelia M. Greenley gave the original land and the church was given the name of her former parish in New York City.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

An Interesting Service.

A tablet commemorating the history of the ancient town of Bath, North Carolina's most ancient municipality, was unveiled on June 18. The tablet was the gift of the Colonial Dames, and the program was in their charge. Preceding the unveiling and the special addresses of the occasion there was a special service in St. Thomas' Church. The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina, was the preacher. Other clergy in the chancel included the Rev. Messrs. R. B. Drane, Stephen Gardner and J. N. Bynum. St. Thomas' Church, which is in a splendid state of preservation and in which worship has been continuous since its erection, was built in 1734. It is the oldest church in North Carolina.

Service for Missionary.

A special service was held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wilmington, June 22, in honor of Miss Florence Huband, a young woman of that parish who had accepted an appointment by the National Council of the Church as one of its general missionaries to the Indians at St. John's-in-the-Wilderness, Allakaket, Alaska. During the service the clerk of the vestry read a set of resolutions prepared by that body. The assistant superintendent of the Church School presented Miss Huband with a purse of money. Miss Huband has been a leader and worker in the Church of the Good Shepherd for several years.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

The Protestant Churches in Philadelphia will conduct one hundred and eighty-eight daily vacation Bible Schools in the city this summer, the largest number which have been organized here in the history of the movement and more than eight hundred teachers have been enrolled. The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, rector of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, is president of the Philadelphia Association.

Cornerstone of New Chapel Laid.

On Tuesday evening June 24 Bishop Garland officiated at the laying of the cornerstone of the new Trinity Chapel, Cheltenham. He was assisted by the Rev. F. H. Argo, rector of Holy Nativity, Rockledge, and the Rev. Mr. Sacher, vicar of the Chapel. The same evening the confirmation service was held in the old chapel at Cheltenham.

Anniversary of Gloria Dei Church.

The two hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of the dedication of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Church, Philadelphia, was observed on Sunday, June 22.

The Rev. Addison A. Ewing, rector, delivered the historical address at the evening service, and the choir had special music, at the morning, afternoon and evening services.

Because of the fact that some members of the congregation live far from the church, the vestry served a dinner in the churchyard. A special delegation from Old Swedes' Church, Wilmington, Delaware, attended the services.

Although the first services were held in 1677 in a wooden blockhouse, used also as a fort, the present structure was not erected until 1700.

In 1845 the congregation of Gloria Dei was admitted into the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando.

The building committee of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida, has secured over $35,000 in gifts and pledges for the new Cathedral Building Fund. This, with $30,000 already on hand, will enable the construction to start early in September. The estimated cost of the first construction will amount to about $100,000. The success of this effort is largely due to Dean C. S. Long and the Cathedral Chapter and at a recent meeting of the Chapter a resolution was passed, expressing appreciation of the tireless efforts of Dean Long in bringing the activities of the church to such a high standard.

St. Mark's Gastonia.

The congregation of St. Mark's, Gastonia, has lately bought a valuable new lot with rectory upon it for the purpose of relocating the church property. The rector, the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, has moved into the rectory, 311 W. Second Avenue. The property has been bought and the amount necessary for the purchase has been subscribed, without involving the present valuable holdings of the parish. This is an outlook for a stronger development of the church's life in this center of the cotton milling industry of the South. Immediate building is not contemplated.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting in Weston.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese was held in St. Paul's Church, Weston, the Rev. John S. Alfriend, rector. The sessions lasted for two days, June 11 and 12. Among the outstanding social features which will make the memory of this particular meeting abide long with those taking part, were the luncheons served each midday by the ladies of St. Paul's in the Masonic Temple, the gracious hospitality of the members of the Church to the visiting delegates, the Reception at Louis Bennett Memorial Parlors, the delightful excursion to Jackson's Mill, Four-H Camp, and the Junior Auxiliary Chinese Pageant given in the parish house on the evening of the first day. At the first session after the Holy Communion, Bishop Gravatt delivered the address, and Bishop Coadjutor Strider made several addresses during the sessions. Other interesting speeches were given by Mrs. Vinson, of Huntington; Dr. Mary James, of Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China; Mrs. Shrewsbury, in regard to A Model Class of the Junior Auxiliary, and W. H. Kendrick, Four-H Director, regarding that movement. At the second luncheon responses to toasts were made by Bishop Strider and the rector, the Rev. J. S. Alfriend.

The business sessions of the Auxiliary were admirably presided over by the president, Mrs. George Peterkin, the widow of the first Bishop of the Diocese. Mrs. Peterkin was unanimously reelected to the same office. The other officers were also reelected, Mrs. G. A. Aschman, Wheeling, and Mrs. Taylor Vinson, Huntington, vice-presidents; Miss Fannie Brady, Wheeling, Field Secretary; Mrs. William Trappnell, Weston, Corresponding Secretary, and Mrs. N. W. Reese, Charleston, Recording Secretary. The business meetings were interesting and attentively attended.

Annual Convocation.

Owing to the prevalence of a general strike on all the steam railways in Cuba, many of the members of the Convocation were unable to attend its sessions held in Havana on Trinity Sunday and the Monday after. Only eleven of the clergy were present, and a few lay delegates, of whom five live in Havana, the others living on or not very far from the Hershey electric line to Matanzas.

On Saturday night Dean Beal gave an illustrated lantern lecture in the Y. M. C. A. building, the hall of which was planned for the occasion.

He was also the preacher at the Sunday morning service, at which two young men were to have been ordained to the Priesthood, but neither of them were able to be present. The Bishop was the celebrant.

On Sunday afternoon there was a special service in the Cathedral for the benefit of the West Indians, the sermon being delivered by the Rev. Emilio Planas of Limonar.

That night there was another service in the Cathedral for the members of the Convocation, and those of Calvario Mission, Jesus del Monte, Havana. Many members of this mission and of the choir were present. The Rev. J. M. Mesegre Tomas was the preacher, both sermon and service being in Spanish.

The business sessions of the Convocation were held in the Cathedral School in the Vedado, a suburb of Havana, at which the following appointments and elections were made:

Secretary—Dean Beal.

Treasurer—W. L. Platt.

Registrar and Historiographer—E. G. Harris.

Council of Advice—Archdeacons Diaz and Lopez, Dean Beal, Mr. W. L. Platt, Mr. H. A. Himely and Mr. E. G. Harris.

On Monday night there was a special

Spanish Service in Calvario Chapel, Jesus del Monte, Havana, with Archdeacon Diaz as the preacher.

This departure in the way of beginning the sessions of Convocation on a Sunday was for the purpose of advertising these meetings of the Church here in the city, where, when former meetings were begun and completed on week days, few in the city, even though a member of the Church, were aware of the fact that such meetings were being held. The night meetings also were a departure from the later use here, and it was felt that they served a good purpose in the way of bringing the members of Convocation into a closer contact with the Church people in Havana.

The Guild of St. Barnabas' for Nurses.

On May 25 the Committee who have been planning the Guild of St. Barnabas' for Nurses, entertained about seventy-five nurses at supper at the residence of Mrs. Auville Eager. Seven hospitals sent representatives—the Church Home, Johns Hopkins Hospital, South Baltimore, University, Woman's, Union Memorial and Sheppard Pratt. After the supper, Mrs. Eager welcomed the guests, and Mrs. Roger A. Walke told of the hearty welcome extended to the Guild by the Church Service League and of the cooperation of the federated societies, especially the Girls' Friendly Society, who have offered the use of their reception room at their Central House, 417 N. Charles Street, until the Guild can get a room of their own. Mrs. Hartman Harrison made a delightful talk on the personality of a nurse and how much that helped the patient. Mrs. Robert Johnson, Jr., and Miss Rebecca Hickok sang and the guests joined most heartily in singing hymns before they left.

On June 11, at the Pro-Cathedral the admission service of the Guild was held. The Rev. Philip J. Jensen, the Chaplain of the Guild, officiated, assisted by Canon H. N. Arrowsmith; the latter, the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, D. D., and the Rev. Roger A. Walke were admitted to the Guild as Priest Associates. Twenty women were admitted as associates and seventy nurses from hospitals joined. The organist not being able to attend, one of the nurses, Miss Helen Teeble, very kindly played the hymns for the service. Mr. Jensen made a short address, in which he spoke of his pleasure in being Chaplain for the Guild of Nurses, as he had gone through the war and considered he owed his life to the nurses.

The Guild will begin active work early in the fall, but it is hoped they will meet once or twice during the summer.

St. Michael and All Angels.

The Parish of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Litt. D., rector, has an active communicant list of over 2,100 persons. The enrollment of teachers and scholars in the Church Schools reaches the 1,000 mark. Over 1,500 communicants received the Holy Communion on Easter Day. A gift of $10,000 was presented to the Church recently as a contribution to the organ fund. The vestry is planning to rebuild the present organ, which was the first electoral organ erected in this country. Another gift of $10,000 was given last month to the Endowment Fund. Recently the Rev. David P. Allison celebrated his thirtieth anniversary as senior assistant minister, and the Rev. George J. G. Kromer will celebrate this fall his twenty-fifth anniversary as junior assistant minister. A "Chapel of Remembrance" has been erected in the crypt of the Church, and a new parish house has just been completed at the Chapel of the Guardian Angel. Dr. Wyatt Brown became rector of St. Michael and All Angels three years ago, during which time the parish has enjoyed splendid growth.

Improvements In St. Alban's.

Building activities to complete the enclosure of old St. Alban's Church in stone and to carry out the architect's plans as started several years ago, have been begun and will be continued throughout the summer, according to present indications. The congregation has agreed to spend $25,000 to complete this work, which will be a source of joy to all interested in the beauty of the Parish Church as well as the work and activity of its organization.

The Daughters of the King in Arlington County, Va., have invited the Washington Daughters to attend a meeting of their branches in St. George's Church, Farlee, Va., as an added opportunity to get together both in the business meetings and socially. These Virginia Daughters being more accessible to Washington than to Richmond or any of the larger centers of their diocese, have attended many of the Washington meetings and have affiliated unofficially with the activities of the Order in Washington. This invitation would seem to indicate a desire to extend the hospitality from the other side, where all of the churches are located in small towns, or rural districts. The rectors of the churches in Cherrydale and Clarendon were present to welcome the guests and after the business meeting a social hour was arranged for all.

Members of the Chinese Sunday School of the Church of the Ascension have presented to the church a beautiful stained glass window and for this there was a service of dedication on Sunday, June 29, at the eleven o'clock service at Ascension Church. The Chinese Sunday School at this church is said to be the first school of the kind in the United States.

The preacher at the open air service of the Washington Cathedral on Sunday, June 29, was the Rt. Rev. Thomas Campbell Darst, D. D., Bishop of Eastern Carolina.

Bishop Freeman, who left Washington with his family the latter part of May for a visit to England, assisted in a consecration service in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, recently, when the Rev. M. R. Carpenter-Garner, librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, was consecrated Bishop of Colombo by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Bishop of London, Bishop Freeman, with others, acting as co-consecrators.

O Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to hear us; and grant that we, to whom Thou hast given an hearty desire to pray, may by Thy mighty aid, be defended and comforted in all dangers and adversities; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Peace and Vision.

W. B. Lydenberg.

O light of ages, born to God and shed
By His desire so all shall beauty be, Trace Thou the view in fairer lines for me!

My sight is by deformities misled;
Fear, envy, pride, and greed before me spread.

In midnight's darkness why cannot I see

The lingering dawn's unstained divinity,
Instead of low love that has never fled?
O sun that rises when suns rise no more,
Unshaken Truth, Word that was and that
is,

Erase the shadow of life's frailties
And on my soul Thy matchless radiance pour!

As rests the heart from selfish motive free

So will the eye God's hidden beauty see.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Conspiracy Against Jesus.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Four of His disciples were on the Mount of Olives with Jesus. The rest seem to have gone to Bethany. It was dusk. They may have made a remark or two as they prepared to go, for Our Lord spoke, changing the subject.

"Ye know that, after two days, the Passover cometh and the Son of man is delivered up to be crucified."

The transition thought is the contrast between His glory as Judge of the world and His apparent failure and humiliation, even to crucifixion. No prophecy could well be more explicit; yet the Apostles watched its fulfillment with heart-broken surprise. He predicted His death and the manner of it and, now, the exact time of it and they did not understand. The Sanhedrim understood. The Pharisees interpreted truly.

Caiaaphas knew that He expected to be crucified and to rise from the dead, for he put a guard at the tomb. Why should not the faithful eleven, with greater opportunities, know it too? Why was John not behind a pomegranate bush, watching, and Peter parleying with the guards very early on Easter morning?

There are two explanations. Either the Apostles were incredibly stupid, more stupid than any sane men now, or else they took Our Lord's literal statements as figurative and supposed Him to expect a betrayal, a crucifixion of political failure, a figurative death, so that He should be politically dead, and then a figurative resurrection which should make Him morally and politically dominant, first in the nation and then in the world. That He would actually die, die and be buried, betrayed by one of their number, seems never to have crossed their minds. Mary of Bethany foresaw it, believed, took His sayings literally and anointed His body for the burial. Mary the Blessed Mother foresaw it, for great love illumined and she had spoken with aged Simeon. The others did not.

Why not? Because they would not. If your wife be ill and say she is going to die, combat the idea with your full strength. If you are on a political steering committee and your candidate predict his own defeat, deny it. If you let yourself believe either prediction your usefulness is gone. This mental attitude is so obvious that we need not enlarge on it. The Apostles, from loyalty, set themselves to find explanation for every word of Jesus about His death. They could not believe in the physical resurrection of His dead body, and therefore they would not take His sayings literally. Their exegesis is illuminating. Our Lord meant exactly what He said. Their attitude is that of the modern schools which cannot take literally what Our Lord says of the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

Our Lord gave them time. At last they would understand. He was, as always, wise and patient. But agony would have been spared them if, at the death, they could have looked forward to the resurrection. They had the necessary knowledge. The difficulty was a subjective one, inside themselves. It is a lesson to us.

The four rose and, with Our Lord, went through the gathering darkness to Bethany.

In the meantime were gathered together the chief priests, the elders of the people, unto the court of the High Priest Caiaphas; and they took counsel together that they might take Jesus by subtlety and kill Him. He had that morning met them in public debate and proved from the Bible that the Messiah is Divine, destroying their contention that, because He claimed to be Divine, Jesus could not be Messiah. The news would spread, forcing the elders to reform and accept Him or else to disclose their true objection, which was that He would not tolerate their great pride and wickedness. It was His life or theirs; for, in the turbulent condition of the mob, loss of power meant loss of life. If they would not themselves be destroyed by the people they must destroy Jesus quickly. If they tried to arrest Him in a crowd He would be rescued. If they sent out to Bethany and arrested Him at night, news of His arrest would rouse the great armed Passover mob of two million strangers. Yet the mob dared not attack Romans. If they could get Him into Roman hands He would be past rescue.

He was a man of crowds. The very poor were favorable to Him. He could disappear into the populous rabbit-warrens of the city slums. He was a thorn in the side of the Sanhedrim. Therefore a considerable minority of the rich were favorable to Him. He had the use of the garden of Gethsemane and perhaps of other gardens. He could disappear into the private grounds of the rich. It would take a considerable force to arrest Him, for He had a body-guard always of twelve and sometimes of seventy stalwart Galileans. Above all—and here only those who know great crowds can understand—a man dropped into the Passover mob was like a stone dropped into the sea. The difficulties of His capture seemed insuperable. Really, they WERE insuperable. The council decided to wait until the Passover was done and the multitude gone home before they tried to take Him. "Not during the feast," they said; "lest a tumult arise among the people."

These facts were plain. The Apostles gave them due weight and trusted to them for Our Lord's safety. The twelve had watched the Master manage crowds for three years and had managed them for months themselves, when they went out two and two, preaching and healing. They knew how to handle a crowd. They felt, therefore, that Our Lord was safe and that His prediction of crucifixion must be symbolic. He spoke of betrayal, but seemed safe even against that. He had only to move away while the traitor went to bring up forces for His arrest. The prophecies were certain. He was to reign from sea to sea and from the river unto the world's end. That they did not grasp the idea of the resurrection their subsequent conduct showed. If a man is to be crucified and die and then to reign—without resurrection—his death must necessarily be symbolic, not real. They felt, therefore, that they had the authority of the Bible itself for His physical safety.

The motives and excuses of Judas are subject of much speculation. In this some important facts are usually left out. Judas was a lost soul at the time of the Bread of Life speech, a year before the crucifixion. During Wednesday and Thursday of Holy Week Judas was a demoniac in the strict sense of the term. Satan had entered into him. Judas knew that Our Lord could read thoughts. It therefore seemed to Judas that Our Lord could tolerate his plans. Judas engaged in some form of self-deception, and not in open, naked, conscious and defiant treachery. Our Lord took pains to let Judas know His plan was understood. Lastly, Judas was a thief, Our Lord knew it, and His knowledge was known to Judas.

Since the council of chief priests and elders probably took place Tuesday night and decided to do nothing, the visit seems Wednesday morning. Judas, as Treasurer, would have to buy the lamb for the Passover. He must, of course, buy in the city, not in the Temple. It would never do for the Passover lamb of Him Who drove out the beasts from the Temple to be bought in the Temple from the sellers of those same beasts. The lamb must be brought to the Temple for inspection, to be certified without blemish. This would have to be done Wednesday, for Thursday would give no time, and there had to be two men to carry the dead body of the lamb on a stretcher, as the ritual required, while, when Judas went to the Chief Priests, he was alone. On Wednesday morning, therefore, he had probably gone to buy a lamb. He would hear of the meeting of the Chief Priests, for the Temple was the center of all news. He must have gone to the High Priest's house, spoken to a servant, and mentioned that he was from Jesus, or he could not have obtained an interview. He must have then made his proposal and waited while the leaders consulted. While waiting, he probably arranged affairs with the Captain of the Guard. The money given was price of an able-bodied slave—equivalent, say, to a thousand or twelve hundred dollars in slavery times in the United States. Either in earnest or in grim jest the Chief Priests bought Our Lord from Judas; or bought Judas himself, body and soul. The choice of a slave's price shows that they amused themselves with the idea of buying somebody. It does not matter whom. The transaction was between lost souls. The light of the Holy Spirit had deserted all parties. It was a transaction as between devils.

Our Lord (or somebody) so planned His death that the central acts, which it would have damned a righteous man to do, were performed by men damned already. Perhaps the person who did the planning was not Our Lord. The Thing whose servants they were may have chosen and used them. At any rate, Judas "was a devil," and "Satan had entered into him"; and the priests had, at least some of them had, committed the sin against the Holy Ghost.

Judas sought to betray Christ in the absence of the multitude. Only those who know great cities can understand. One who knows London or New York or Chicago, who understands that when a man has turned the corner he vanishes as if he had sunk into the sea, will dimly see the need of Judas. Those who know a great exposition or carnival crowd will understand perfectly. Judas was essential to Caiaphas.

In The Name of Jesus Christ.

In the name of Jesus Christ—
To Whom the sea is as a drop of water,
And a flock of dust the land;

To whom the pinions of an eagle are a fan,
And the shadow of a mountain as the shadow of His hand.

I asked for wings in the morning;
Plumed they were, like an eagle for a great ascent;
I asked for wings at night,
And they were folded like a flag when the wind is spent.

I asked in the morning for power;
And it crashed like the tide of the sea over the reverberant floor;
In the evening I asked for peace,
And it rested like the shadow of a mountain upon a quiet shore.

For I asked in the name of Jesus Christ,
To whom the sheaves of shining stars
Are but a harvest ripe for reaping;
To whom the four winds of Heaven
Are but a lullaby for sleeping.

"Lo I Am With You Always."

Sometimes we in the Mission field get down-hearted, when we fail to see the result of our apparent many efforts. Perhaps the white-ants have eaten the floor of our house, a leopard stole our last goat, the snakes have gotten our chickens, the church roof leaks, the fever has been making our life miserable, our most dependable boy has stolen Six Pounds and the folks back home have almost forgotten us. But, that only happens in our darkest mood, when the flesh overcomes the spirit.

Christ is with us, how can we fail. Here is a picture of what evangelical Christianity is doing because behind it is the power of God. Ernest Gordon, in the "Sunday School Times" tells a story of twenty-four years work here in equatorial Africa, at Bolenge.

"What a people to preach to! Naked savages smeared with red powder, armed with daggers and poisoned arrows, protected by charms and fetishes, shameless and unspeakable in their polygamous promiscuity, drunken in daytime and uproarious in their midnight dancings. Their bloody inter-tribal wars kept the young missionary doctor busy with bandages. Filth everywhere, epidemics, loathsome diseases, inhuman practices! The shadow of death over the whole land."

Twenty-four years passed, and one of the same missionaries goes back on a visit. What a change! What a miracle!

"Gathered on the bank of Bolenge stood a great crowd of well-dressed clean people. How proud and neat they were. They sang a song of welcome and waved palm branches and flags. When we finally landed the crowd gathered and shook hands, but we did not have hands enough. Each finger had an eager friend, and even coat-tails were shaken in the eagerness to show their joy. At night we gathered in the chapel, not large enough now to contain all. How they sang! With all the richness of the voices of the black race till it seemed the very roof was going up and down in the power of their voices. The next morning they brought the Llonza, welcome-home gifts,—chickens, ducks, sheep, eggs, with vegetables and fruits, in great piles, all of which were turned over to the evangelistic funds of the church."

We can see the little Christian village of Bethany, with its nicely built houses, its clean streets, and going about, the well-dressed people, busy with their dressmaking, carpentry, and other trades. Beyond it the town of Lotumbe, once a haunt of cannibals, now evangelized by Native Christians, the light of the Gospel being passed on. Recently the Native teachers visited the Monieka cannibals, who at no distant date killed a contingent of one hundred Free State soldiers with both their white officers, eating them all in a cannibal feast. The returned missionary baptized ninety-nine of those ex-cannibals on his visit, among them the son of the old chief, who led the massacre.

Yes; this is the result of twenty-four years labor, but it is the evidence of the power of the Word of God, and the result of prayers in faith.—Liberian Churchman.

Johnny and the Company.

Company was coming. The atmosphere of Johnny's home was tense; the very shininess of woodwork and furniture, the forbidding spick-spanness of every room, even to the nursery, caused the tired eyes of Johnny's mother to glow with satisfaction and the round orbs of Johnny to overcloud with gloom.

Two busy days of preparation had brought the heavy droop to the shoulders of the mother, who little realized how many irritable words had been thoughtlessly, impatiently directed to the defenseless laddie. And now when all was ready and the guests were due, the fresh, crisp linens that gave Johnny such a smartly starched appearance merely heightened the uneasiness that filled the boy's heart.

The company arrived and there was a flood of warm embraces; the strain, alas! was very hard on Johnny.

Then the long anticipated visiting began, and who could wonder that the general relaxation caused all the pent-up steam in Johnny to burst forth, most shockingly?

The laddie's mother, near distraction, thought not of the reason for it, but remembered only how fatigued she was from much unnecessary work. Too weary to think calmly, she punished him—it little matters how—before the strange, onlooking crowd.

Terrible Humiliation bore down upon Johnny, and caused the fair young head to droop with shame. The world was black indeed, filled with harsh indifference, and the cruel people in it smiled behind their hands! O, if he had just been punished where they could not see—those eyes now so amused at his distress! Then he and his mother might have kept it all a secret. He need not have lost his boyish self-respect.

Yes, if she had but thought a moment, and given him a chance to quiet that excited little mind in the seclusion of his room later to come forth from there rested, self-controlled, then he could have met their faces with a frank boyish purpose to disturb no longer. That would have spelled a victory for Johnny. But as it was, in silent mortification, he slunk away from every one, and the memory of that day was never bright.

Bruise not the fine stem of the flower, O Mother! lest it lift its face less frankly to the light.—Irene Judson.

Blessings.

By the blue that bends above us;
By the smiling friends who love us,
By the laughter of a baby
And the babbling of a brook;
By the glad Junes with their roses,
And each happy day that closes
With the prayer of little children
Everywhere God turns to look,
We are blessed in countless ways,
Through the number of our days.

By the hope which gilds tomorrow,
By the faith which sweetens sorrow,
By the beauty all around us
When the dawn of day is fair;
By the health which God hath lent us,
For the tasks for which He sent us,
We are richly compensated
For the burdens we must bear;
And though tears of grief may fall,
God has blessed us, one and all.

By the glad smile of a neighbor,
By the joy of honest labor,
By the singing of the kettle
And the home where we may rest;
By the true friend standing by us
Through the hours when burdens try us,
By uncounted little pleasures
All our lives are richly blessed;
Never year nor day nor minute
But holds something lovely in it.

Whose Fault?

If the Bible is not to you an intensely interesting book; if it does not stimulate and thrill you every time you take it up; if you do not find wisdom and courage, and faith and good cheer, upon its pages; if it does not give adequate meaning to your life, a solution for your problems and difficulties, offer you companionship and consolation, minister conviction of duty and true idealism for everyday living, then the fault does not rest with it but with you. And that is a fault you ought to remedy as soon as you can. It will be all this to you if you only come to know and love it.—Selected.

How the Declaration of Independence Was First Made Known.

Uncle Timothy, Billie, and Marion had been talking over the family plans for Fourth of July. Billie had suggested illuminating by a row of little bonfires at the top of the hill. "Then," said he, "it would be just like the bonfires they had the first Fourth of July."

"That reminds me," said Uncle Timothy, "that the first Fourth of July wasn't a fourth of July at all!"

Billie and Marion looked up in surprise.

"Why," said Billie, "who ever heard of a Fourth of July that wasn't a Fourth of July?"

"Well," laughed Uncle Timothy, "it doesn't sound reasonable, but you can work it out without arithmetic if you peep into history a bit."

"Is it a story, Uncle Timothy?" asked Marion.

"Almost," Uncle Timothy replied; "at least I have always considered it a story, and a good one too."

Billie and Marion settled down to listen, and Uncle Timothy began:

"The American colonies were forced to declare their independence, all because of the destructive policy of King George III. of Great Britain, acting on his own initiative, and not through any wish on the part of the English to oppress the colonists. The king was arrogant, incapable, and amazingly blind as to what must be the result of his treatment of the colonies. He refused the counsels of the many able English statesmen who themselves well know what the king's course would lead to. They fully realized that the majority of the king's subjects felt that the colonists had not been fairly treated, and all on account of the king's stubbornness and his willingness to listen to the sinister advice of his favorites. The English people did not want war and were distressed at the thought of fighting their own kith and kin, for it amounted to that. However, the king willed it otherwise, and for a time the power was his; and as a consequence his American colonies were forced to declare their independence of his rule. You children will find, if you stop to think of it, that the Declaration of Independence went forth as an indictment against King George III., and not as an indictment against the English people."

"I thought," said Billie, "that the colonists were fighting the British."

"Well," Uncle Timothy explained, "some of our histories make it seem that way; but when the Americans fought the king's armies they were fighting the king's tyranny and with sorrowful thought of feeling obliged to sever the bonds which had held them to the mother country. Look in the Declaration of Independence and you will find this sentence: 'The history of the present king of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having, in direct object, the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states'."

"I see," said Billie. "I'm glad it wasn't the other way."

"It must have been hard to start a new nation without feeling awfully homesick," Marion ventured.

"New nations," said Uncle Timothy, "are not exactly 'started' in a day. The principles for which the colonists stood were, indeed, the common heritage of all English-speaking people, and the fact that George the Third refused to recognize the rights of the colonists (although he did those of his subjects in England) made these principles, the development of centuries, the bed-rock of the new nation, the strength of whose nationalism was to develop as time went by.

"Indeed," Uncle Timothy went on, "as noted historian, John Richard Green, once wrote: 'From the hour of American independence, the life of the English people has flowed not in one current, but in two. But distinct as these currents are, every year proves more clearly that in spirit the English people are one. The distance that parted England from America lessens every day. The ties that unite them grow every day stronger.'"

"Miss Pettipker read us something like that last term," said Marion. "Now I understand it better."

"Then," Uncle Timothy continued, "you will remember that when it became necessary to dissolve the political bonds which connected the American colonies and England, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, introduced in the Continental Congress, sitting in the old state house at Philadelphia, his famous resolution moving 'That the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States.' After two days of debate on the subject, the Congress appointed Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Robert Livingston as a committee to prepare a declaration of independence. For ten days this committee worked industriously on the document, and rendered their report June 28, 1776. On the first of July, Lee's resolution was again considered. Two days later, Jefferson completed the final draft of the Declaration, but the next day, July 4, that the Declaration was not until the evening session of tion of Independence was adopted, and John Hancock, as president, and Charles Thomson, as secretary of the Congress, dipped their pens in the silver ink-well made by Franklin's friend, Philip Syng, the Philadelphia silversmith, and placed their signatures on the document. The other delegates to Congress did not sign the Declaration till some days later. Now as all these sessions of the Congress were held in secret, it was not, in fact, till after July 4, 1776, had come and gone that the people of Philadelphia, of Pennsylvania, and of the other colonies knew that this particular day was the cradle-day of American independence. So you see, there could have been no public celebration of the event on that first Fourth of July."

"Why," said Billie, "I always thought they built bonfires, rang the Liberty Bell, lighted up all the houses, went around shouting, just as on Armistice Day, and everything!"

"They always make pictures of it that way," said Marion.

"I suppose they do, but not always," said Uncle Timothy; "and as for bonfires, ringing the Liberty Bell, illuminations, shouting, and everything, all this did take place, only not till afterward."

"When?" asked Billie.

"I'll tell you," said Uncle Timothy. "When Mr. Hancock and Mr. Thomson had finished signing the Declaration, Congress ordered that it be authenticated and printed, that the committee appointed to prepare it should superintend and correct the printed copy, and that copies should be sent to the several assemblies, conventions, and committees or councils of safety, and to the commanding officers of the Continental troops, and that the Declaration of Independence be proclaimed in each of the States, as the colonies were now to be called, and at the head of the army."

"They sent one to George Washington, then, I suppose," said Billie.

"Yes," said Uncle Timothy, "they sent one to General Washington as commander-in-chief of the American forces. Before adjourning the evening session, Congress in these words further ordered: 'That the Sheriff of Philadelphia read or cause to be read and proclaimed at the State House in the city of Philadelphia on Monday, the Eighth Day of July instant, at twelve o'clock at noon of the same day, the Declaration of the Representatives of the United Colonies of America, and that he cause all his officers and the constables of the said city to attend the reading thereof.' It was further resolved that every member of the committee in or near the city be ordered out to meet at the committee chamber and to proceed from there to the state house to be present at the reading in public, or proclamation of the Declaration. Likewise the Committee of Inspection and Liberties was requested to attend."

"Was that the first time the people heard the Declaration?" asked Marion.

"The very first time," said Uncle Timothy. "You will remember that up to the time of the reading in public, the deliberations of the committee and of Congress were in secret. When the secretary of the Congress finished writing up his minutes at the close of that memorable evening session of July 4, he probably rolled up the copy of the Declaration which he and Mr. Hancock had just signed, and on his way out handed it to John Dunlop, the Philadelphia printer who attended to the printing of all records required by Congress. It was Dunlop's task to get the written copy into type at the earliest moment and to see that the printed copies were free from errors. From a printed copy of this sort, the Declaration was first proclaimed."

"And did the sheriff of Philadelphia read it from the balcony of the state house?" asked Billie, who had once been on a trip to Philadelphia and thought he remembered seeing a balcony on Independence Hall.

"No," said Uncle Timothy; "as a matter of fact, the sheriff himself didn't read the Declaration at all, but for some reason delegated the honor to Colonel John Nixon, who had a fine, powerful, and far-carrying voice. Perhaps the sheriff's was squeaky."

"Who was Colonel John Nixon?" asked Marion.

"He was a prominent patriot," Uncle Timothy replied, "and his name ought to be known to every boy and girl in America as the first person to read to the public the Declaration of Independence. This day of July 8, 1776, he was a comparatively young officer of forty-three. Colonel Nixon had been a member of the First Committee of Correspondence in Philadelphia, was made a lieutenant-colonel in the Continental Army in 1775, and in 1776 was in command of the defenses of Philadelphia, in which year he was promoted to the rank of colonel."

"I wonder why our school history doesn't say more about him," said Billie. "He must have looked fine up there on the balcony."

"Perhaps they will, some day," said Uncle Timothy; "and I suppose, as he was a man of commanding presence, that he did look fine as he took his place to read the Declaration. But it wasn't on a balcony above the heads of the people that Colonel Nixon stood; it was on a platform in their midst, a platform which, some years before, the Philosophical Society of Philadelphia had erected in the state house yard for astronomical purposes connected with the observation of the transit of the planet Venus. Here Colonel Nixon took his stand, and slowly, distinctly, and impressively read the Declaration from beginning to end to the hushed gathering about him, a gathering which realized the tremendous significance of the words they were hearing. As he finished reading the document, though his voice had been firm, there may have been a slight tremble in the last word from the emotion the reader could not but have experienced."

"What did the people think of it?" asked Marion.

"Well," said Uncle Timothy, unfolding an old newspaper, yellow with age, which was lying on the table in his study, "you can see for yourself."

Billie and Marion glanced at the old paper and discovered that it was a copy of the "Philadelphia Gazette" of 1776, and this is what they read:

"Philadelphia, July 8, 1776.—This day the Committee of Safety and the Committee of Inspection went in procession to the State House, where the Declaration of Independence of the United States of America was read to a very large number of the inhabitants of this city and county, which was received with general applause and heartfelt satisfaction."

"My!" exclaimed Billie, "that paper must be a valuable relic."

"It is," said Uncle Timothy; "and so is this little square of buff-colored paper. Look at it carefully and you will see that it is a thirty-shilling Colonial currency note, the sort of paper money then in use; and here you will see that it bears the actual autograph signature, boldly written, of Colonel Nixon himself. He was, when this came from the press, one of the committee appointed to sign the notes, just as the bank-notes of today are signed by officers of the national banks which issue them."

"It's wonderful!" said Billie and Marion in one breath. "Things like this seem to bring history much nearer."

"Well," said Uncle Timothy, "it's my opinion that this is just what they're for."—Gardner Teale, in St. Nicholas.

From branch to branch and sweetly sang,
What made his breast so round and red.
"Twas looking toward the sun," he said.

I asked the violets sweet and blue,
All sparkling with the morning dew,
Whence came their color. Then, so shy,
They answered, "Looking toward the sky."

I saw the roses one by one
Unfold their petals to the sun.
I asked what made their tints so bright.
They answered, "Looking toward the light."

I asked the thrush, as his silvery note
Came like a song from an angel's throat,
What made him sing in the twilight dim.
He answered, "Looking up to Him."

When the Children Cleaned House.

Eugénie du Maurier.

It was raining. Tap, tap, went the drops on the windowpane. Drip, drip, went the drops from the leaves. Splash, splash, fell the tears from the eyes of Donald and Dorothy, the twins.

"Oh, dear," sobbed Dorothy, "to think it had to go and rain today, just as we had our dear, new little rakes and spades, and were going to clean up the garden."

"Oh, dear," sighed Donald, "and I was going to get everything ready for planting the little seeds."

"If I didn't want to go out in the rain, but could listen to it," mused Dorothy, "maybe I'd think the pitter patter sounded like fairy dancing. But now—"

"Pooh," said Donald; "fairies have more sense than to go out and dance in the rain. Oh, dear!"

Aunt Amy put down her book. "Poor little twinnies," she said; "it is hard to be disappointed. But I have found that the very nicest way to be happy when our plans are spoiled is to look around and see what can be done in place of them. Suppose we talk it over. Why were you planning to clean up the garden?"

"Why, so as to have it all clean and nice for the new flowers," said Donald, "and to get all the old leaves and rubbish out of the way."

"I see," said Aunt Amy. "Now I know what we can do. I heard mother say last evening that she must clean out your play closets, but that they were so full of old, outgrown, broken and forgotten toys that she dreaded to touch it. Suppose we do it for her this morning. That would be an indoor gardening."

"Yes, Aunt Amy," said Donald slowly, "that would be mighty nice. But I know you want to finish your book."

"Never mind," answered Aunt Amy, "I can finish that tonight. And I would enjoy gardening with you in those closets."

The play closets were filled with all kinds of things. All the shelves were full, and great piles were on the floor. Donald hurried into his closet and began to throw things out on the floor.

"Wait a minute," said Aunt Amy, stopping him; "let us do it right, Donald, laddie. We will take everything out carefully and make three piles: one pile for the things that need mending, one for those you no longer want, and one for the things that are to go back into the closet."

So very carefully Donald and Aunt Amy passed out the things from the closets, telling Dorothy in which pile to put them, until at last the closet was empty, first Donald's and then Dorothy's, and the floor was so littered the children hardly knew what they could do next.

Then Aunt Amy brought a great basket which they filled with the things that were to be given away, and they carried it to the attic to stay until mother was ready to dispose of it.

Next they swept and dusted the shelves and swept and washed the floor, and carefully put back in their places the toys that they wished to keep. They could not believe it when Aunt Amy said it was time to stop for luncheon.

It took several hours more with Aunt Amy's help to mend and pack away the broken books and toys. Then Aunt Amy brought out some wooden curtain poles, cut them in about three-yard lengths, drew little flowers on them, and showed the children how to paint them to use for flower markers in their gardens.

It grew dark just as the last marker was finished, and mother came in to see what they had been doing all day.

"See, mother," they cried, opening their closet doors, "see what we did with Aunt Amy's help."

How pleased and surprised mother was! She forgot how busy a day she had had, gave them a good hug and kiss, and then they all went into the kitchen and made cocoa, toast and sandwiches for supper.

How Dorothy Became A Missionary.

The missionary from China had told the children about the many, many people of that great country who were poor and ignorant and sad—so different from the people in our free and happy America.

"Oh, mother, can't we go as missionaries and teach these people about Jesus," begged Dorothy.

Mother explained that there were many reasons why they could not leave to go far away as missionaries, but that they could send their money and their prayers and help in many ways. "If your body can't go," said mother, "your thoughts can. They are part of you; so you can really go to China, you see."

Dorothy liked that plan. So she talked about it to other little girls and boys, and they found out the name of a missionary to whom they wrote a letter. In the letter they sent all the money that they had been able to take from their own savings, besides what friends had given them.

By and by, back came a letter from the missionary, thanking them for the money and telling them about a little Chinese girl that they could help if they wanted to do missionary work.

"Let's call it the Dorothy mission and send a letter or some money or some clothes every month," cried Hilda. So every month something went across the ocean to the little Chinese girl, something to help her stay in the mission school and study, so that some day she could be a teacher and help many other little Chinese girls.

Dorothy and her friends gave up many play hours and did without many treats to do this, but the happiness and blessings that came to them were almost as great as the happiness and blessing which they sent across the sea.—The Herald and Presbyterian.

The Meaning of Patriotism.

Do you realize that the Indian is the only real American in America? That we are Americans only because some of our forefathers and our foremothers came here?

Do you realize that for this reason we really owe the American Indian more kindness, more respect, more gifts, more of our God, and more of our religion than any other people in America?

For this was his country, and now it is ours—and our white people have not always shown the Indian what the real Christian spirit means.

We must not forget that nine thousand Indians fought in France in the late war, and that sixty-eight hundred volunteered!

There are people from all over the world living in this country of ours—people from China, India, France, Italy, Syria, so many of them that we have Italian quarters, Syrian quarters, Chinese quarters in our cities. And we often think that any old place is good enough for the foreigners, and we call them, with a patronizing air, "those foreigners."

Remember, when our ancestors came here first they were "foreigners," and when we go to another country we may be called "foreigners." We may be lonesome and sad, and if patriotism means anything it means making glad the hearts of all those who live among us, work among us, and want to pray among us.—Everyland.

Each Dear to Thee.

Father, we thank Thee for the light,
Which Thou has given man, that all may see,
Though dimly, Thy vast and wondrous might;
Thy tenderness, divinity.

The sun, proof royal of Thy power,
Doth paint the marvel of the sky:
Yet, not a tiny woodland flower
Could spring to life were He not by.

The ocean depths to mountains climb,
when stormy winds command at sea;
And floods sweep valleys in their prime
Of all their rich prosperity:

Yes, each small drop doth at some time
Feed some small blade of grass we see;

And thus we're taught the truth sublime.
Each soul is known and dear to Thee.

—Josephine Rhett Bacot.

All Play and No Work.

"I'm going to find somebody to play with," said Peggy, running out of doors that sunny morning. Baby brother was fretting, and mother was very busy baking bread and getting ready to churn. Father and big brother Richard were driving cattle to market, so they had no time for Peggy. But there was the clever collie, Laddie. He could play ball or hide and seek.

"Come and play, Laddie!" invited
Peggy, holding out a ball temptingly.

But Laddie capered after his master's cattle, barking:

"Not now! Not now!
There's work to do;
I'll be your playmate
When I'm through."

"Dear me," thought Peggy, "Laddie acts as if work were a picnic." She saw Malta's tail just disappearing into the barn. "Come, kitty; let's play," coaxed Peggy.

But Malta leaped into the hayloft, explaining in cat language:

"Me-ow! Not now, my little maid!
The mice would frolic if I played."

Peggy pouted a bit. Then her bright eyes spied older mother Topknot, surrounded by her cunning, fluffy chicks.
Topknot was clucking away, telling her children how to eat bugs and grain and how to drink from the pan and tilt their tiny heads backward so the water could run down hill. When Peggy came to play with the cheeping yellow chicks, how Topknot did scold!

"Tut, tut! Go 'way! My chicks can't play,
They're learning lessons every day."

Peggy sighed, took the hint, and hurried away home.

As she opened the door she heard baby brother fretting while the churn dasher flopped up and down, saying:
"Flop! Flum! Butter's come!"

"O mother, let me help!" cried Peggy. "I can wheel the baby and get him to sleep. Every one else is working, so I think I'll work too." And she began helping her mother, who smiled as she reminded:

"All work and no play makes a very dull day,
But all play and no work will very soon irk."—Christian Observer.

River of the Holy Spirit.

By William Hurn.

There is a River, deep and broad,
Its course no mortal knows;
It fills with joy the Church of God,
And widens as it flows.

Clearer than crystal is the stream,
And bright with endless day;
The waves with every blessing teem,
And life and health convey.

Where'er they flow, contentions cease,
And love and meekness reign;
The Lord Himself commands the peace,
And foes conspire in vain.

Along the shores, angelic bands
Watch every moving wave;
With holy joy their breast expands,
When men the waters crave.

To them distressed souls repair,
The Lord invites them nigh;
They leave their cares and sorrows
there,
They drink, and never die.

Flow on, sweet Stream, more largely flow,
The earth with glory fill;
Flow on, till all the Saviour know,
And all obey His will.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Power of the Air.

I spake unto the Porter in the Pullman Car, saying, The Farmers have been having an Hard Time.

And he said, Is it having the Boll Weevil in these parts?

And I said, In this region Cotton is not king, but Corn, and the prices have been low and labor hath been high.
Therefore doth the farmer lament. I would be considerate of the poor farmers, and not rob them of and that is theirs except in case of dire need.

And he said, Yessir.

And I said, I think any one of these farmers could spare a Carload of Fresh Air and not impoverish the farmer.

And he said, Is it getting a little close in here, sir?

And I said, The air is so abundant out of doors, I behold it at play in sheer wantonness. There is more of it than knoweth what to do with itself. Some of it would like to get in here and get warm.

And he opened the ventilators, and the passengers that were dull, and uninterested in life, began to live anew.

Now this have I witnessed also in Public Assemblies, even in the House of God, that folk are desperately afraid of breathing any air that hath not been breathed already by a large Number of People.

Wherefore do I understand why it is that the Devil is called in Holy Writ the Prince of the power of the Air. For the Devil is not the lord of fresh air, for that is as the breath of God, and giveth life and vigor. But air that hath been breathed until there hath been squeezed out of it all that can give life, and forced into it very nearly everything that ought not to be taken into Human Lungs, that is the air which the Devil ruleth.

And I say unto all Sextons and Janitors and Porters and Ushers, Whatever other duties ye have, fall not of this, to give unto the sons and daughters of God the clean, pure air of heaven, that it may enter their lungs and give life unto their blood, and make them capable of thought and of the knowledge of the Truth. The Husbandman will not miss it from his farm, though the Railway Trains take it away by Carloads, and if it be taken into Synagogues and places of assembly, there is more of it, all the way to Medicine Hat.

For the Word of God speaketh nowhere otherwise of the Spirit of man than as the Wind or Breath of God, giving unto him life and power. Wherefore, having read this Parable, open thy windows toward Jerusalem and thank God for Fresh Air, and see that thou devour a great deal of it.—Echange.

From the Parsonage.

Years ago a Methodist preacher named McDonald, moved from the country to London, where he supported five daughters on a salary of $750 a year. Four of them married. The first became Lady Edward Burne-Jones, wife of the famous artist. The second became Lady Edward Poynter, wife of the president of the Royal Academy and mother of Sir Hugh Poynter, one of the great steel men of Canada. The third was Mrs. John Kipling, mother of Rudyard Kipling, and the fourth married a gentleman named Baldwin. Her son, Stanley Baldwin, is today the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The manse and the parsonage have not ceased to be in many instances the nursery of intellectuality as well as of Christian character.—Exchange.

Learn to entwine with your prayers the small cares, the trifling sorrows, the little wants of daily life. Whatever affects you—be it a changed look, an altered tone, an unkind word, a wrong, a wound, a demand you cannot meet, a change you cannot notice, a sorrow you cannot disclose—turn it into prayer and send it up to God. Dis-can make to the Lord. Man may be too little for your great matters, God is not too great for your small ones.

Only give yourself to prayer—whatever

Worth While

pray Thee, Lord, that when it comes to me

To say if I will follow Truth and Thee,
Or choose instead to win as better worth
My pains, some claying recompense of earth--- Grant me, Great Father, from a hard fought field,

Forespent and bruised, upon a battered shield,
Home to obscure endurance to be borne
Rather than live my own mean gains to scorn.
Far better fall with face turned toward the goal,
At one with wisdom and my own worn soul,
Than come to see myself prevail,
When to succeed at last is but to fail.

Mean ends to win and therewith be content---
Save me from that! Direct Thou the event
As suits Thy will; where e'er the prizes go,
Grant me the struggle, that my soul may grow.

Why Not Let in Religion?

"Without religion no settlement of the world's problems is possible, no peace can come to men or nations. But religion is not a substitute for some other agency; it is that which must permeate and control every agency we have. We cannot abolish diplomacy, arbitration, conferences, alliances, and expect religion to take their places. Religion is not a new piece of furniture to be substituted for an old piece; it is the sunlight which, when admitted to a room, shows us how to use the furniture we already have. At the present time the nations are, for the most part, working in the dark. They have shut out of their councils the two most powerful factors in human life—the love of God and the love of man. Nothing is practical unless inspired and dominated by religious faith. Nothing will succeed that shuts out of human institutions the sense of God, and substitutes purely economic or political aims. Man does not live by bread, or cotton, or oil—he lives by faith, and when faith vanishes, men and nations die. Since everything else has failed why not let in religion?"—W. H. P. Faunce.

A Two-World Creature.

Planted in the springtime, some flowers grow all summer and until frost kills them at autumn without ever coming to blossom. But next spring they start again in some measure where they left off, and in the second season they bloom. One season was too short to reveal their beauty. So is it with man. One life is all too short for his full development. With eighty years of study, man knows but little; with even eighty years of service, man realizes he has accomplished little beside that which he longed to accomplish. He is still incomplete! The tragedy we see daily is an expanding mind and an enriched soul in a decaying body. All else save man reaches perfection in this life. He alone leaves earth with powers untouched, talents unused, strength not utilized. In a world beyond this world shall we not believe that man will grow and learn and serve until he is complete?—Christian Observer.

Kind acts find out a dozen friends,

There are two ways of proclaiming God's law—by lip and by life. When lip proclamation makes no impression, lip proclamation makes still less.

In all this trying, tempting life my Master watches over me with eyes of flame, with tender solicitude, with sovereign power, overruling my darkest moments to ends of purification and perfecting.—W. L. Watkinson.

Many a happening accounted an evil and a misfortune change to blessing under God's merciful providence, but no overruling of results changes the sin of motive. He who plans evil is guilty of the evil he plans.—Selected.

It would be doubtful if we could retain religion on this earth in these modern days when there has come a vast and universal increase in knowledge that prys into every secret of God's world and universe, If we lose faith that God Himself, Who made all that we are seeking to know, and Who transcends all our possibilities of knowledge, dwells in the person of Jesus. What the Holy of Holies was to Israel's religion, this, the deity of Christ, is to Christianity.—Selected.

Great results have great causes. We have to find, somewhere, or other, between the crucifixion and the first preaching of the Disciples in Jerusalem, something that entirely changed the character of that group of men. Something happened, so tremendous and vital, that it changed not only the character of the movement and the men—but with them the whole history of the world.—T. R. Glover.

With Thee to live
That so I may
Upon that day
Fair reckoning give,
And joyfully
Receive from Thee

DANTE AND THE IMMIGRANT

One of the bitterest critics of American institutions declares that America destroys in the second generation whatever of good the immigrant brought with him from his own country. He offers for proof that the native Italian laborer often carries a copy of Dante in his pocket, and reads it in the brief respite from work. The son of this laborer does not read Dante, but goes to the picture-show for recreation. We suppose it was this taunt that made us read Dante again. Dante was patriot, poet, and lover supreme. He was almost the first to awake, and greet the dawn after the long night of the dark ages. He was the first man since the classic period to climb a mountain in order to look out upon nature. As patriot, lover, and painter of moods in men and moods in nature, his touch is ever that of a master with all the seductive charm that belongs to one who is creator and not copyist. There is, however, no sadder commentary on the utter spiritual darkness of the world of his day than is Dante as a theologian. Not even Hell itself could have furnished a more finished libeller of the God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ than was this pagan poet who thought himself a devout Christian. Devil is a word the original significance of which is "slanderer." Dante's Hell is devilish in the ingenuity with which good and evil are juggled till the only hope of grasping the good is atheism, or accepting as good the arbitrary fiat of one whose nature combined the attributes of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

The doctrine of hell has played a tragic role in Christian history. The parable of Dives and Lazarus in which the Master pictures the soul awaking after a life in which the drugged senses had never faced reality, and now with something like a drunkard's sense of shame and burning thirst is crying out for help, is a spiritual drama so vivid that men have seen the lights rather than the persons in the play. Here as in other parables, the nemesis of tragedy dogs the steps of the one who never finds out what it is to be a man. The Master is not laying down a doctrine of hell. He is here, as always, pointing out the utter folly of the one who wastes the splendid possibilities of manhood.

In the third and fourth centuries when such possibilities were beginning to be forgotten, and the age became as Birrell says of the time of Elizabeth: "Not an age of religion but of religious differences"; while monks were braining secular priests in the rich exuberance of holy fervor, the disputant under the lamp was taking the scaffolding of a parable and terrifying men's minds with the picture of a physical hell.

In spite of the fiery zeal of pious souls who still strive to drive the frightened herds with the flare of a physical hell, we believe that more men have been driven into infidelity by Dante's weapon, picked up on an ancient battlefield, where it had dropped from the hand of Tertullian, than have ever been stampeded into a sterile life of cowed obedience.

TAMING THE TORNADO

Hurricanes, cyclones and tornadoes are all efforts on the part of nature to restore a lost equilibrium and to do away with an inequality. If there were no storms, the tropics would suffocate with heat, and the earth become a cauldron rimmed with bands of ice. Life would be impossible on earth. The unthinking urgency of man's immediate need has changed the climate of many lands, and the denuding of the hills brought lasting drought to once fertile fields. Man is slowly learning his lesson. The bare hills are being planted with trees, and lands made desert by forest fires in the long ago are being restored by irrigation, and the menace of their scorching surface removed from earth. With the restoration of the waste places, and the draining of the swamps and the building of channels for the air through the jungles, it is not too much to hope that some day man will be able to chain the hurricane and stifle forever the hot breath of the typhoon. The fixed irregularities of the earth's surface and the earth's relation to the sun will always make the poles and tropics dependent upon each other, but there will be no war of the elements; for the bartering breezes will continue to supply the needs of both. Is there any need to make more plain the lesson of the parable? With more than half the world suffocating in poverty and ignorance; with selfish arrogance living on the hill-tops that have been denuded of human sympathies; with the minds and hearts of multitudes as dry and sterile as the desert; with vast bogs of shame and shamelessness stretching across whole continents; with jungle life and jungle code holding in what might be a paradise of God; is there any wonder that war, the hurricane of human passion, still has the power to work its havoc in the world of men? From those early days when the little ships that brought the first settlers to Virginia, stopped at the West Indies for water and took on yellow fever with every cask, until that day when a young Virginian, Walter Reid, proved by the willing sacrifice of himself that the scourge of our Southland was bred in the filth of Cuban towns, men looked upon yellow fever as an inevitable and mysterious scourge of God. New Orleans and Memphis were saved by saving Cuba. From many sources; from the universal curse of war as from the withering blight of plague and the drunken madness of the tornado the world is being taught that the command: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is not mere words of guidance for religious devotee, but is the statement of a principle which conditions even tolerable existence—a principle whose violation brings the hurricane of war and the scourge of fevered death. Before the war in the city in which we lived, a young girl came in tears to say that she had walked the streets for days trying to find a decent place in which to live. Her wages were six dollars a week and the cheapest board that she could get in any decent place was $5.75 a week, which left her but twenty-five cents a week with which to clothe herself. A few brave women made a study of conditions among the working girls and published their report. This report was read by Christian people, men and women, as an item of news, and not as an urgent call to action as that which sent our boys across the seas. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is the royal law, royal because it is the supreme expression of God's will, and at the same time the expression of the law of man's own being.

THE FEAR OF FEAR

By the Right Reverend E. Woodcock, D. D

LIFE should be an adventure and a romance, the adventure of growing a soul and the romance of fulfilling a career. This, of course, requires faith and courage. It means the power to live with an aim. This aim, however, is too often obscured or defeated by something that some people have failed to conquer, and that is the fear of fear. This fear, if unmastered, lowers all initiative and, eventually, weakens and paralyzes all moral and spiritual forces. Sooner or later there is developed a disposition to seek the least line of resistance, to avoid hardship, to evade responsibility, to run no risk and to shun all dangers. Over-exaggerated caution and prudence take refuge in reserve and timidity where there is no possibility of either adventure or romance, neither is there any growth of soul nor development of a career.

We possess all the possibilities of happiness and all the possibilities of distress. We help to make or to miss our own heaven. For us life is either a glowing, expansive hope, or else it is a gloomy, forbidding despair. We may have the heaven of a clean conscience and a healthy soul, or the inferno of growing fears and lost hopes. There is a gospel for human needs that is often lost in the purgatory of human dreads. There are three things which are very difficult for some people to attain, they are hope, happiness and heaven. All of heaven is not limited to the hereafter. Much of heaven is ruined for them here by the slavery of dreads. They break down their resistive vitality by corrosive cares and morbid fears. The fear of fear, the fear of living, creates an army of dreads, and each one of them is an enemy to peace, happiness and progress.

So many people have worried imaginations. Unchecked, this soon becomes a personal self-limitation and may easily result in chronic invalidism of the soul. No one can have a cheerful heart, a peaceful soul and happy life whose imagination has become deranged. When people succumb to a worried imagination while their afflictions are not facts their sufferings are real and prolonged. Their lives are filled with agitations, morbid anticipations and painful worries. Their hardest misfortunes are the things which never come to pass. It requires courage and character to overcome this personal self-limitation.

What is the remedy? What can emancipate a soul from the thralldom of dread and morbidness? The daily use of the gift of hope. God never created a soul and then denied to that soul the capacity and gift of immortal hope. There are so many real cares, so many deep sorrows, so many genuine burdens, that we need true faith, strong hopes and high courage to face and bear them. We either give up or break down under the slavery of dreads. Hope calls out our best strength, increases our resistive vitality, and saves us from despair. Hope is the faith that never tires. In time of sickness it is the will to get well, and thus cures more maladies than all the medicines. In time of temptation it is the will to fight instead of surrender. In our tasks it is the power to always anticipate the best and keep on until it comes. In life it is the integrity of the soul that would first apologize and then repent for being made miserable by fear. It is the spirit ready and willing to—"Trust God, see all, nor be afraid."

But this does not exhaust the remedy for fear, it only brings us to the Source and Giver of help for all our needs. We have the assurance of help. We have God as our resource first, last, everywhere and in everything.

"God's greatness flows round our incompleteness, Round our restlessness His rest."

We cannot stray beyond His love and care; "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." "As thy day so shall thy strength be." "All things work together for good to them that love God." Because we have the love and sympathy and help of God how can we ever become poor, forlorn and fearful? It is only when we refuse His help and ignore His love that our worries then become the destitution and insomnia of the soul. The assurance of help is as definite and immediate as this, "Every day has its care from below and its help from above." Faith learns how to join hope with help and there is then little room for benumbing fears and unhappy anticipations. Uplifted by hope and upheld by help, what task or trust are we unable to accomplish through a faith that never tires. The beautiful words of Annie Johnson Flint, "Thy Strength And My Day," have brought comfort and inspiration to many who, in the struggle, have never yielded to fear:

"Give me Thy strength for my day,
That wheresoe'er I go,
There shall no danger daunt me
And I shall fear no foe;
So shall no task o'ercome me,
So shall no trial fret,
So shall I walk unwearied
The path where my feet are set;
So shall I find no burden
Greater than I can bear,
So shall I have courage
Equal to all my care;
So shall no grief o'erwhelm me,
So shall no wave o'erflow—
Give me Thy strength for my day, Lord, Cover my weakness so."
